But while, on these grounds, we deem the rule of our law, which prohibits the examination of accused persons, a sound one, we do not look on its present practice as faultless. An accused person ought to be allowed the most ample latitude in defending himself, and this, it appears to us, he does not receive at present, when he is defended by counsel. By the common law, when a prisoner is defended by counsel, in cases where that course is allowable, his own mouth is, unfairly we think, stopped at the trial. A similar practice has been adopted in cases of felony since the Prisoners' Counsel Act, and a construction has been put on that statute which goes far to neutralise its benefits. Several judges have held, that when a prisoner is not defended by counsel, the jury may weigh the credit of any statement he makes in his own defence, although not supported by evidence; but that counsel appearing for him are bound by the same rule as parties and counsel in civil cases, namely, not to state as fact any matter which they are not prepared with evidence to substantiate—a ruling, the effect of which, in many cases, amounts simply to this, that a prisoner, by employing counsel, causes his defence to be suppressed, except so far as it can be suggested in a hypothetical form. It is remarkable, that on charges of high treason the prisoner is asked by the Court, after his counsel have spoken, whether he wishes to add anything for himself.

The principle of Lord Brougham's bill, as already stated, is only an off-shoot of a more general one. It is to be observed that that bill does not empower the prosecution to examine the prisoner as a witness in chief against himself, and thus essentially ignores the principle of Bentham, that every medium of testimony ought to be resorted to. It also affirms the anomalous position, that a party may be a competent witness for one side, although not for the other—an absurdity which might fairly be supposed to have become extinct with the other ancient rules of incompetency.

The bill is avowedly founded on the notion that the accused should be allowed to contradict on oath what is advanced against him on oath, overlooking the immense difference in the respective positions of the accused and the witness; and the recent case of the Rev. Mr. Hatch is cited as an instance where an improper conviction would have been averted had that course been open to the accused. It is, however, by no means clear that there was any defeat of justice in that case, for it has been suggested that it was lost, not through any defect in the law, but in consequence of the counsel for the defendant injudiciously refusing to call witnesses on his behalf. Moreover, although the principal witness was afterwards convicted of perjury, partly on the testimony of Mr. Hatch himself, the rest of the evidence against that gentleman, coupled with the admissions made by himself on oath, on the trial of the witness, which, it is assumed, he would have made on his own if he could have been examined on that occasion, formed an ample case for the jury. Be this, however, as it may, the making laws to meet unusual or extreme cases has been looked on in every age as the characteristic sign of short-sighted and weak legislation; and is in violation of the well-known rule of our own jurisprudence—"Ad ea que frequentius accidunt jura adaptantur," (2 Inst. 137); as well as of the Roman law—"Jura constitui oportet in his que sæpius et plerumque accidunt, non que in parva et inopinata." (Dig., lib. 1, tit. 3, l. 3).

We have thus stated our views on the general question, and on Lord Brougham's bill as a part of it. That many of our readers will disagree with us in the above conclusions is probable enough; but there is one matter connected with the subject on which we trust we shall have the concurrence of all reflecting persons—namely, that as that bill proposes to effect an organic change in a system which has existed and, rightly or wrongly, been lauded for centuries, the expiring month of a session of Parliament, whether accompanied or not by the heat of the dog-days, and the annually recurrent nuisance of the Thames, is not the fit period for its introduction, far less for its discussion.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION.

THE following resolutions have been moved by Lord Palmerston, and voted by the House of Commons; the first and third unanimously, and the second by a majority of 369 to 52:—

1. "That the right of granting aids and supplies to the Crown is in the Commons alone, as an essential part of their constitution; and the limitation of all such grants, as to the matter, manner, measure, and time, is only in them."

2. "That although the Lords have exercised the power of rejecting bills of several descriptions relating to taxation by negativing the whole, yet the exercise of that power by them has not been frequent, and is justly regarded by this House with peculiar jealousy, as affecting the right of the Commons to grant the supplies, and to provide the ways and means for the service of the year."

3. "That to guard for the future against an undue exercise of that power by the Lords, and to secure to the Commons this rightful control over taxation and supply, this House has in its own hands the power so to impose and remit taxes, and to frame bills of supply, that the right of the Commons, as to the matter, manner, measure, and time, may be maintained inviolate."

The Queen has been pleased to appoint William Henry Adams, Esq., to be Chief Justice for the colony of Hong Kong.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

ORDER OF COURT.

Whereas, from the present state of the business before the Vice-Chancellors Sir R. T. Kindersley and Sir W. P. Wood respectively, it is expedient that a portion of the causes standing for hearing before the Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood should be transferred to the Vice-Chancellor Sir R. T. Kindersley; now I do hereby order that the several causes mentioned in the schedule hereunto subjoined be accordingly transferred from the book of causes standing for hearing before Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood to the book of causes for hearing before the Vice-Chancellor Sir R. T. Kindersley.

REPORT OF HER MAJESTY'S COMMISSIONERS APPOINTED TO INQUIRE INTO THE MODE OF TAKING EVIDENCE IN CHANCERY, AND ITS EFFECTS.

THE Commissioners appointed by her Majesty to inquire into the Mode of taking Evidence in Chancery, and its effects, have not been able to agree in an unanimous report. We insert the report agreed on by the majority, but are compelled, by want of space, to defer until next week the separate report of Lord St. Leonards.

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty.

We, the undersigned of your Majesty's Commissioners appointed to inquire into the Mode of taking Evidence in Chancery, and its effects, humbly certify to your Majesty, that by the act passed in the fifteenth and sixteenth years of your Majesty's reign, for amending the practice and course of proceeding in the High Court of Chancery, various extensive changes were made in the mode of taking evidence in that court.

After the system then introduced had been for a short time in operation, complaints were made that it occasioned great expense and delay; and in the year 1854, Lord Cranworth, then Lord Chancellor, called the attention of the late Commissioners for inquiring into the Practice and Procedure of the High Court of Chancery to the subject; and they, in the month of August in that year, submitted to him a memorandum, in which, after stating that the general impression in the Profession appeared to be, that the unquestionable advantages derived from an oral examination of witnesses before the examiner were obtained at too great a cost of time and money, and that the commissioners were disposed to concur in that view of the case, they recommended various changes in the existing system; adding, however, that the proposals then made must be considered as tentative merely, it being their opinion that by experiment alone could the most eligible system be determined.

Pursuant to that memorandum, a General Order of the Court was made on the 13th January, 1855, the object of which was to carry into effect the recommendations of the commissioners.

The commissioners, by their third report, dated the 14th April, 1856, after referring to the memorandum of August, 1854, and the General Order of the 13th January, 1855, which they stated had, as they believed, to some considerable extent removed the evils complained of, proceed to say—"We have, however, to add on this subject, that it is one of great difficulty, and that, in our opinion, further experience is required before it can be determined, with any certainty, what is the best system of taking evidence in the Court of Chancery."

The system introduced by the act of Parliament to which we have referred, modified by the subsequent General Order, has been ever since in operation.

Under this system every party in a cause is now at liberty to verify his case, wholly or partially by affidavit, or wholly or partially by oral examination of witnesses taken before one of the examiners of the court, or before an examiner specially appointed for the purpose; and where any evidence is adduced on affidavit the opposite party is entitled to compel the attendance of the deponent who has made the affidavit, in order to his being cross-examined orally before the examiner, the expense of that attendance being paid in the first instance by the party requiring it, and being part of his costs in the cause.

In addition to the evidence thus adduced, the Court, if it sees fit, may, at the hearing of the cause, require the production before itself of any party or witness, in order to his being examined viva voce as to any points on which fuller information may be desired.

In order to satisfy ourselves as to how far this system is open to objection, and if so, then how it may best be amended, we, in the first instance, caused letters to be addressed by our secretary to the various gentlemen who had given evidence upon this part of the subject before the late commissioners, requesting them to inform us what was the result of their experience of the alterations made in pursuance of the suggestions of the commissioners.

The majority of these gentlemen gave us their written opinion on the subject, which we have annexed in the Schedule (A.) to this our report.

We also caused to be made known to the Legal Profession in London our desire to receive written opinions on the subject from gentlemen who had not been examined before the former commission; and we have appended in Schedule (B.), annexed to this report, the opinions which we received in consequence of this intimation.

We considered it, moreover, desirable to ascertain the opinions of solicitors practising in the country; and with that view our secretary addressed letters to members of the Profession in different parts of England, requesting them to collect, and forward to him, the opinions of solicitors in their respective neighbourhoods; and we append in Schedule (C.) the answers we received to those letters.

Several of the commissioners from time to time made written communications to us, expressing their views on the question we had to consider, all of which we have set out in Schedule (D.), annexed to our report.

The inquiries which we have thus made have satisfied us that the present system is open to grave objections.

The course of proceeding before the examiner has led to unnecessary delay and expense; and though these evils might probably be materially diminished by new regulations, enabling the examiner to compel unwilling parties to proceed with greater expedition, yet we do not think that any such changes would go to the root of the evil. In a large part of the cases brought for decision before the Court of Chancery, there are no facts, or very few facts, in dispute; though it must still be necessary, as a security against error, that the Court should have all facts on which its judgment is to rest established by proof before any decision is come to in the case. For this purpose, evidence taken on affidavit seems to be the most desirable, as being in general more expeditious, and less costly, than evidence obtained in any other form. As a security for its being trustworthy, proper facilities must be afforded to those affected by it, enabling them to cross-examine the deponents by whom the affidavits are made.

With respect to material facts which are disputed, we have come to the conclusion that the only reasonable course is, that the evidence bearing on them should be adduced ore tenus before the Court which is to decide on the whole case. We are persuaded that any attempt to remodel or improve the course of proceeding before the examiners would prove illusory. The evil arising from having the evidence taken before one functionary, and its weight and effect decided on by another, is an evil of principle, and not of detail.

We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the system of taking evidence before the examiners should, except in some special cases, wholly cease, and that all evidence should be adduced either on affidavit or viva voce at the hearing.

In order to explain more fully our opinions on the subject of our inquiry, and the mode in which we consider that the existing evils ought to be dealt with, we have agreed on the following resolutions, which we venture respectfully to submit to your Majesty:—

1. That the present mode of taking evidence in the Court of Chancery is unsatisfactory, and in some respects requires alteration.

2. That it is desirable that facilities should be afforded for the trial of material facts contested between the parties upon viva voce evidence to be given before the judge who is to decide upon them, or before a jury.

3. That after issue joined in a cause, or in such stage of any proceeding pending in the court as shall by general order be fixed in that behalf, any party, within such time as by general order shall be fixed in that behalf, shall be at liberty, by notice in writing, signed by him or his solicitor, and served on the opposite party or his solicitor, to require that the evidence as to facts or issues specified in such notice shall be taken viva voce.

4. That, except as to matters included in such notice, each party may support his case by evidence in chief, adduced on affidavit or otherwise, according to the present practice, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained.

5. That when a party has filed an affidavit in support of his case, any opposing party may, within such time and in such manner as by general order shall be fixed in that behalf, give notice that he requires the production, for cross-examination at the hearing, of the deponent who has made the affidavit; and unless such deponent be then produced, the affidavit shall not be read, unless by special leave of the Court.

6. That any party in a cause may compel the attendance at the hearing of any person whom he may desire to produce as a witness, in the same way as such attendance may now be compelled at trials at Nisi Prius.

7. That at the hearing of the cause the viva voce examination and cross-examination of witnesses shall be had in the presence of the judge as to the matters included in any such notice as aforesaid, and affidavits shall only be received of such facts and documents as the judge shall consider not to be included in the terms of the notice.

8. That, except as hereinafter mentioned, all examinations taken by the examiners of the court, or by any special examiner, shall be taken ex parte, and no person shall have a right to be present at the taking of any examination except the party producing the witness, his counsel, solicitor, and agents; and that every examination so taken shall be deemed to be an affidavit; and it shall be the duty of the party who has obtained such examination to file the same, which shall thereafter be dealt with in all respects as an affidavit.

9. That the Court at the hearing, or at any rehearing, may require any witness who has made an affidavit, or has been examined, to attend to be orally examined; and may also direct the trial before the Court, either with or without a jury, or at Nisi Prius, of any issue of fact not proved to the satisfaction of the Court by the existing evidence.

10. That in case of a rehearing or appeal, the judge's notes shall prima facie be taken to be a sufficient note of the viva voce evidence, but the Court before which such rehearing or appeal is had may supply any defect in the judge's notes by the notes of counsel or otherwise, as it may deem just.

11. That on any rehearing the Court may, if it thinks fit, give leave to any party to adduce further evidence viva voce.

12. That where both parties shall agree in desiring that a trial should be had before the Court, with the assistance of a jury, or before a judge at Nisi Prius, and shall agree on the issues to be tried, they shall be at liberty to apply to the Court to order such trial to be so had accordingly, and the Court shall make such order thereon as it shall see fit.

13. That, unless by consent of all parties interested, no examination shall be had before any examiner or special examiner otherwise than as mentioned in the eighth resolution, save only that, by leave of the Court, any person may, in respect of age, infirmity, or other sufficient cause, to be approved by the Court, be examined or cross-examined according to the present practice.

14. That in the case of examinations or cross-examinations under the last preceding resolution it shall be the duty of the examiner of the Court to attend, upon an order of the Court being obtained for that purpose, at any place in England or Wales, for the examination and cross-examination of such witness, and the reasonable expenses of the examiner in that behalf incurred shall be paid to him by the party requiring the examination, and shall be costs in the cause, unless otherwise directed.

15. That wherever notice requiring viva voce examination shall have been given by any party under the third resolution, the Court shall determine at the hearing whether, in the circumstances of the case, it was reasonable and proper to give such notice, and shall dispose of the costs occasioned by such notice as it may think just; and if the Court shall be of opinion that such notice was given unreasonably, or for the purposes of delay, oppression, or vexation, it may order costs as between solicitor and client to be paid by the offending party in respect of all expenses occasioned by such notice.

16. That these resolutions shall apply not only to the hearing of causes, but also to motions for a decree; and it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor by general order from time to time to direct that the same may be applied to any other proceedings, subject to such modifications as may be necessary.

17. That in all causes and matters in which any infant, married woman, non compos, or person under any other disability, is a party, the consent or admission of the next friend, guardian, or other person acting for the party under disability, shall, if given with the sanction of the Court, or a judge in chambers, have the same force and effect as if given by a person not under disability: provided always, that no such consent of any committee of a lunatic shall be valid, as between himself and the lunatic, without the sanction of the Lord Chancellor or the Lords Justices sitting in lunacy.

18. That none of the foregoing resolutions shall apply to evidence taken in suits to perpetuate testimony.

We regret to add, that one of our members does not concur in our general resolutions, and has himself made a separate report.

All which we humbly submit to your Majesty.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JULY 21, 1880.

SOME most interesting discussions from time to time take place in our courts upon the doctrine of legal and equitable waste. An important case upon this subject has recently been decided by Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., which well deserves our examination. We allude to the case of Turner v. Wright, (6 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 647). There it appears that a testator devised a mansion-house and estates, with the appurtenances, to A. in fee, with an executory devise over, in the event of his dying without leaving issue living at the time of his decease, to his sister B. (since deceased) for life, without impeachment of waste, with remainder to the use of the plaintiff in fee; and there was a proviso that the plaintiff should, within one year after becoming entitled to the possession, or to the receipt of the rents and profits of the estates, take the name and arms of the testator, or forfeit all interest in the estates.

Upon a bill being filed by the plaintiff, praying an injunction to restrain A. from cutting down or injuring any of the trees, &c. standing on the estates, or, as an alternative, from cutting down any ornamental timber, or tree or trees unripe for cutting, it was held by the Vice-Chancellor that A. might commit legal but not equitable waste. In other words, his Honor held that A. was entitled to fell all such timber on the devised estates as was mature and fit to be cut, but not such as had been planted or left standing for ornament or shelter, with reference to the occupation of the mansion-house on the devised estate. His Honor, in giving judgment, said he did not think it necessary, in the case before him, to determine whether a legal tenant in fee, subject to an executory devise over, could, in a case where no intention on the part of the testator is expressed, be restrained from committing legal waste.

In the case before him, his Honor thought that it was manifest, that, on giving over the fee-simple on an executory devise to the plaintiff, the testator did not mean him to take it exactly in the same state in which it was, with all the timber standing thereon; that there might have been something of an easier contention for B., the testator's sister, who took an estate immediately preceding that of the plaintiff, because he gave the estate over, in the event of A. dying without leaving issue, to his sister for life, without impeachment of waste; and it was only after that estate that he gave anything to the plaintiff. "It appears to me," says his Honor, "to be impossible to say that the legal right which the fee-simple estate confers can be interfered with, when I find the next limitation uses express words for the purpose of conferring that right, because without these words the tenant for life could not have it. I must assume that the testator had a reason for giving the fee—that he did intend to confer the legal right, which he gives by express words in the next limitation; and there is nothing in this will that can justify me in saying that the right of the tenant in fee is to be interfered with where no words are necessary to give that right."

His Honor thought that the question with regard to equitable waste was very different, "because," said his Honor, "the testator gives the mansion-house, with the appurtenances, in fee, subject to the executory devise; and in the event of the devisee dying without leaving issue, he says, 'I devise the said mansion-house and estates, with the appurtenances, over;' and there is the name and arms clause, and everything to shew that this is to be the capital mansion-house of the family. To suppose, therefore, that because this gentleman is tenant in fee-simple he can pull that house down under these circumstances, I apprehend, would be something too monstrous for any Court to arrive at on the mere construction of the will. On the executory devise taking effect, the estate is to go over as it exists, as far as the mansion is concerned. Having got so far, taking it on the construction of the will, you would go far to arrive at the conclusion, that 'the mansion-house, with its appurtenances,' meant the mansion-house, together with all that which this Court has been in the habit of considering as ornamental with reference to the mansion-house."

After a careful consideration of his Honor's judgment in this case, we cannot but arrive at the conclusion that the question as to legal and equitable waste falls within precisely the same category, and that both ought to have been decided in the same way—viz. that the tenant in fee, with the executory devise over to the plaintiff, ought to have been restrained from committing waste of any kind.

With regard to the abstract point, as to whether a tenant in fee, with an executory devise over to another, can, in the absence of any intention to be gathered from the will, be restrained from committing waste, his Honor, it will be observed, stated that he would not give any opinion.

Upon principle, we should have thought that such tenant in fee could not commit waste. He cannot, it is clear, by any means alien the estate; and as the timber is part of the estate, it is difficult to conceive how he could alien that, or, if he could not alien, that the Court of Chancery would not interfere to protect it for the benefit of the person who, in certain events, might become entitled to the estate of which it forms a part. In other words, the accessory follows the fate of its principal.

The power of committing waste is simply the power of aliening part of the estate. To some estates, as ordinary estates in fee and ordinary estates tail, it is incident; to other estates of a more limited character, as estates for life, it may be annexed, as where an estate is given to a person without impeachment of waste.

But as no one could for a moment contend that a tenant in fee, with an executory limitation over, could alien a single rood of the estate, so as to defeat the interest of others who are to take in certain events, it appears to us just as difficult to conceive that he could sell or cut down timber, which is as much a part of the estate as a rood of ground.

With regard to the authorities, we think that they support the conclusion at which we have arrived, independent of them. In the case of Robinson v. Linton (3 Atk. 202, where the case seems to be best reported) the testator devised lands to his son in fee, and in case he should not live to twenty-one, and die without issue, he gave the lands to his daughters, (who were the plaintiffs), with several remainders over. Then he goes on, and says, "My will is, in case my son shall not attain twenty-one, my estate shall be sold, and the money divided among my daughters, for an augmentation of their fortunes;" and he gave to his daughter 10,000*l.* besides. Lord Hardwicke granted an injunction to restrain the son (who had not come of age) from cutting any timber. "As to the intention of the testator," said Lord Hardwicke, "he certainly had not the least thought that the son, before his age of twenty-one, should fell all the timber upon the estate. The inheritance is constituted of the land, and the timber upon it, and that is devised to be sold for the benefit of his daughters. The intent was to give the value of the estate at the time it was devised."

Again, in Stansfield v. Haberyham, (19 Ves. 273), Lord Eldon states it to be the doctrine of the Court, "that where there is an executory devise over, even of a legal estate, the Court of Chancery will not permit the timber to be cut down, more especially not if there is an executory devise of the trust estate." This may be only a dictum, but the dicta of Lord Eldon are rarely inaccurate, and, from his great learning, experience, and caution, are entitled to almost as much respect as the decisions of some of his predecessors.

Does, then, the testator in the case now under consideration shew any intention that the inheritance—that is, the land and timber—should not go over entire to the plaintiff? For we fully agree with Lord Hardwicke's definition, that "the inheritance is constituted of the land, and the timber upon it." In the absence of such intention, we consider that it would be both contrary to principle and authority to allow waste.

In this case it is clear that no express power to commit waste is given, except to the tenant for life, since deceased. Does, then, the testator, by necessary implication, confer such power upon the first taker of the estate? We cannot think, notwithstanding the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor, that he has done so, even in the case of legal waste; and, so far as ornamental timber is concerned, the Vice-Chancellor is of the same opinion.

His Honor's judgment seems to proceed upon reasoning something of this kind, viz. that because the tenant for life was made unimpeachable of waste, and could therefore commit legal waste, the testator did not intend the plaintiff to take the inheritance in precisely the same condition as he left it in. This may be so in a certain event, namely, of the tenant for life coming into possession before the plaintiff; but it does not follow, that because, in such an event, power was given to the tenant for life to commit waste, a similar power should, by implication, be considered as given to the first taker of the estate.

It appears to us, that if there had been first a mere tenant for life, then a tenant for life without impeachment of waste, with remainder over to a third person in fee, it might just as well be argued that because the third taker was evidently not intended to take the inheritance intact, because the second tenant for life was unimpeachable for waste, therefore the first tenant for life might fell timber.

In conclusion, we think that no clear intention on the part of the testator, either express or implied, is to be gathered from the words of the will, to enable the first taker to commit waste; on the other hand, we are inclined to think the intention to be rather the other way; for what would be the use of making the tenant for life unimpeachable of waste if the first taker could denude the estate of all the timber? In the absence of such intention, the reasoning of his Honor against allowing equitable waste appears to us to be equally conclusive against permitting legal waste.

We observe that after the remarks we made in two former articles upon Lord Cranworth's Trustees and Mortgagees Bill, the bill, which had been apparently approved of by the House of Lords, was re-committed to a committee of the House, and its most objectionable clauses, to which we called attention, were removed or amended. For instance, the powers given to trustees having a power of sale were limited to cases where such power is express. The power of exchange is no longer made incident to a power of sale; and the clause which enabled trustees, having a power of sale, to enfranchise copyholds, and to demise the same on building or improving leases for ninety-nine years, has been omitted altogether; in other words, the absurdity of attempting to make a power of enfranchisement and of leasing for ninety-nine years incident to a power of sale will not be attempted.

The 11th section of the bill, which we pronounced unintelligible, has been altogether withdrawn.

Although the bill has been considerably improved, it is still, we think, defective in construction and wrong in principle.

Our correspondent "M. I. B." very much misunderstands us if he supposes that we considered that the bill would, in the event of its passing, (a most unlikely contingency), remain a dead letter from any unworthy motive on the part of conveyancers, or other legal practitioners. We do think, however, that conveyancers, by inserting a clause in every instrument, taking it out of the operation of such an enactment, would, on the part of their clients, act with a wise discretion, and would, in the long run, save their clients from litigation, which would be, in many cases, almost the necessary consequence of their adopting a different course.

The amendments made recently in the bill in the House of Lords show clearly its defective, and even dangerous, state as first drawn, and do not induce us to place much confidence in Lord Cranworth as a legislator in matters affecting real property. Conveyancers and solicitors would, we think, act incautiously (if the bill passes) to adopt it, or, we should rather say, if they did not prevent its operation in almost every, if not in every, case. We do not see why, for the purpose of effecting some insignificant saving, a conveyancer should subject his client to the chances of litigation, and use him as a corpus vile, as a subject for the experiment of rash legislation. We cannot, however, suppose that Lord Cranworth's bill will pass the House of Commons, or that it will not be numbered amongst those legislative innocents whose slaughter precedes, by no long intervening period, the 12th August.

REPORT OF HER MAJESTY'S COMMISSIONERS APPOINTED TO INQUIRE INTO THE MODE OF TAKING EVIDENCE IN CHANCERY, AND ITS EFFECTS.

In our last number we gave the Report of the majority of the Commissioners appointed by her Majesty to inquire into the Mode of taking Evidence in Chancery, and its effects. Lord St. Leonards differs from his brother commissioners, and has made the following separate Report for himself:—

To the Queen's most excellent Majesty.

I, one of your Majesty's Commissioners appointed to inquire into the Mode of taking Evidence in Chancery, and its effects, humbly certify to your Majesty that in the act passed in the fifteenth and sixteenth years of your Majesty's reign, referred to in the Report of your Majesty's other commissioners, special directions are contained for the examination of witnesses orally before one of the examiners of the court, where the evidence is not taken by affidavit, in the presence of the parties, their counsel, solicitors, or agents; and the witnesses so examined are to be subject to cross-examination and re-examination, and a witness who has sworn an affidavit is made subject to oral cross-examination before the examiner. The Court has power to require the production and oral examination before itself of any witness or party in the cause; but at present it rests wholly in the discretion of the judge whether there shall be any examination in open court; neither party can insist upon it. Your Majesty's late Commissioners for inquiring into the Practice and Procedure of the High Court of Chancery, in their memorandum referred to by the Report now before your Majesty, stated that the general impression was, that the unquestionable advantages derived from an oral examination of the witnesses before the examiner were obtained under the present system at too great a cost of time and money, and in this view they were disposed to concur. For the reasons which they state, they would object to the evidence being taken in open court, and they proposed certain alterations with a view to save time and money, but still altogether retaining the examination before the examiners, and their recommendations were carried into effect by general orders, which authorised either party to proceed by affidavit. This rule diminished in a very material degree examinations in chief, and increased in a still greater degree cross-examinations, and the time of the examiners is now principally occupied in taking cross-examinations upon affidavits.

I agree with your Majesty's other commissioners, that the course of proceeding before the examiners has led to unnecessary delay and expense; but I regret to say that I cannot concur in submitting to your Majesty the resolutions upon which they have agreed. By their eighth resolution all examinations taken by the examiners are to be taken ex parte, and no person is to have a right to be present at the examination except the party producing the witness, his counsel, solicitor, and agents, and every examination so taken is to be deemed to be an affidavit, and is to be dealt with as such. The thirteenth resolution provides, that, unless by consent of all parties, no examination shall be had before any examiner, except as mentioned in the eighth resolution, save only that by leave of the Court any person may, in respect of age, infirmity, or other sufficient cause, be approved by the Court, be examined or cross-examined according to the present practice. These resolutions would, if carried into effect, operate to a large extent as a repeal of the statute of 1852. Of course, no one would avail himself of the power reserved to him by the eighth resolution, of being present at the examination ex parte by the examiner with his witness, counsel, solicitors, and agents, for the examination would operate only as an affidavit, which could be made without any resort to the examiner.

The third resolution of the Report is, that any party shall be at liberty to give notice to his opponent that he requires the evidence as to facts or issues specified in such notice to be taken viva voce; and the abuse of this privilege is, by the fifteenth resolution, proposed to be prevented by the power to inflict costs. The fifth resolution gives power to an opposing party to give notice that he requires the production, for cross-examination at the hearing, of the deponent who has made an affidavit; and the seventh resolution provides, that at the hearing of the cause the viva voce examination and cross-examination of witnesses shall be had in the presence of the judge as to the matters included in any such notice.

If these resolutions should be adopted by the Legislature, they would apparently render the offices of the examiners all but a sinecure, and practically impose their important duties on the Court itself. The threat of costs will not prevent parties from insisting upon the examinations being taken orally before the Court; and where one party commences by an affidavit, the other would have a right to cross-examine before the Court; so that a hearing with viva voce evidence in open court could always be obtained without having recourse to the right provided by the third resolution, which might expose the party to costs under the fifteenth resolution. The numerous cross-examinations which now take place before the examiner would not only be transferred to the judge in open court, but would be increased, as examinations before the examiner would only operate as affidavits.

The constant demand on a judge in equity to decide upon points of law, and to consider the bearings of the evidence, requires quiet and calm in the Court itself. The course of the Court should not be interrupted by addresses to a jury, the introduction of common-law counsel, and all the wrangling of trials at Nisi Prius. Courts of law are enabled to avoid the interruptions which would arise in courts of equity were they compelled to summon juries or constantly to hear viva voce evidence. The equity judges have not only to transact in court all the important legal business which comes before them, but to follow it into chambers, and see that the decrees of the Court is properly carried out—a duty which until 1852 was not imposed upon them. If, as proposed, there should now be added the constant hearing in court of viva voce evidence, and sometimes with juries, and necessarily the taking notes of the evidence for their own use, and to be used on appeals and rehearings, it may be found that more duties are imposed on those judges than any man can fairly be required to perform. Under the existing law, evidence may be by affidavit or by written depositions, or viva voce before the Court, with or without a jury, with full powers of cross-examination. But these powers are properly, as it seems to me, under the control and direction of the Court.

The principal objections to the present system before the examiners are delay and expense. But it has not yet had a fair trial, and it has been abused by the suitor. There is very great delay, and yet the examiners have half their time unemployed. This arises, first, from a faulty mode of procedure: Every case has a day appointed for it, and consequently it is only at the end of a long list that any new suitor can obtain an appointment. Suitors themselves are answerable for the second cause of delay; they are constantly in the habit of neglecting to keep their appointments, and frequently abandon their privilege.

In 1858, out of 255 appointments taken out before the examiners, 118 were unattended; 137 only were therefore attended out of 255; and every one of these unattended appointments stopped the whole course of business.

It appears to me, therefore, that the law of 1852 has not yet been fairly tried, and that we should consider, not what substitute we can find for it, but how we can work it to advantage, and, as far as may be expedient, improve it. In this view I would beg to suggest as follows:—

1. That the examiners should be put in possession shortly of the points to be proved. The desire to get rid of the old method of pleading has led to uncertainty of what are the issues to be tried. It would hardly be an improvement to adopt the Scotch plan, and thus introduce a still more burthensome scheme of paper warfare.

2. That in case of any abuse—e. g. the cases mentioned by the examiners in their evidence, of seventeen days' evidence, and of cross-examination of one witness four days and a half—the examiner should communicate with the judge, who should, if he deem it expedient, order the examination before himself.

3. That every case should be heard successively and continuously. No appointment to be made except for short matters, or for long cases by arrangement with both parties.

4. At ten o'clock every morning short cases to be taken, according to a previous list.

At eleven o'clock the cases in their order to be taken, according to a previous list of the day, and to be disposed of as in court. Absence of counsel or of witnesses to be dealt with as if the case were before the Court.

If the Court were to hear the evidence viva voce, of course the same strictness would prevail as upon a trial at law. There is no reason why the same strictness should not prevail before the examiner.

5. The lists to be made out so as to prevent unnecessary expense and delay. How to accomplish this would soon be ascertained from communications with the solicitors.

If the order of 1857 were rescinded the cross-examinations on affidavits would be reduced in number.

No party or parties in the same interest should attend by more than one counsel before the examiner.

A strict control should be kept over the costs of cross-examination on affidavits.

It would, perhaps, save expense if examinations in chief were to be made upon interrogatories, as under the old practice.

Both parties should be at liberty to apply for an issue, subject to proper regulations.

I may refer to the opinions of your Majesty's Commissioners for inquiring into the Practice and Procedure of the High Court of Chancery in support of the views which I have taken of this subject.

All which I humbly submit to your Majesty.

ST. LEONARD.

LAW AMENDMENT SOCIETY.—The next general meeting of this society will be held on Monday, the 12th November.

COMMISSIONERS TO ADMINISTER OATHS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following gentlemen to be Commissioners for administering oaths in the High Court of Chancery:—In England: Henry Richard Sheppard, of Wells, Somersetshire, and William Inman Welsh, of Wells, Somersetshire. In London: John Nesbitt Malletson, of No. 11, Austin-friars.

JUDICIAL STATISTICS.

THE following returns, shewing the amount of business done in the Superior Courts of Common Law and the Courts for the Recovery of Small Debts, have been made to the Home Office:—

COMMON-LAW COURTS.

Last year 86,270 writs of summons, and 582 writs of capias, (for arrest by leave of a judge), were issued from the three superior Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer; or, in other words, so many actions were commenced, a number less by 16·5 per cent. than in the previous year. In the vast majority of instances these cases are settled; for in only 23,762, not very much more than a fourth, was there any appearance entered in the proper office on the part of the defendants. But after the defendant has taken the first step, in the shape of resistance, by entering an appearance, the process of arrangement still goes on, and the number of causes actually tried by the judges during the year was only 2113—1131 in London and Westminster, and 982 at the assizes; and of these it is probable that ten or fifteen per cent. were undefended, and resisted only to gain time. So that, of the suits commenced in the superior courts, little more than two per cent. really require the decision of a jury; the vast majority are only to enforce payment of an acknowledged claim. The number of causes tried for obtaining compensation, under Lord Campbell's Act, for personal injuries, is stated at only 19; 105 were for libel or slander; 22 for breach of promise of marriage, and 16 for a more disreputable misfortune of women. In 1445 cases (above two-thirds of the number tried) there was a verdict for the plaintiff, without including verdicts subject to a special case for the opinion of the Court or a reference; in 343 cases the verdict was for the defendant, and in 80 the plaintiff was nonsuited. In twenty-eight instances the jury had to be discharged without giving a verdict. The total amount for which verdicts were obtained was 324,388*l.*, and rather more than half of it is stated to have been recovered on circuit. Of the writs of execution issued during the year for obtaining payment, 8142 were against the person, and 14,052 against the goods, the former constituting surely a very large proportion. The work done by the judges at chambers was very considerable—41,315 summonses were issued, and 10,846 of the orders made are described as "special orders;" 28,300 affidavits were sworn, or affirmations made; the office copies required of affidavits or documents filed at chambers extended to 10,667 folios. The fees levied by the Masters of the three courts amounted to 58,002*l.*, out of which was paid 38,057*l.* for salaries, &c., leaving a balance of 20,845*l.* The Suits Fund of the common-law courts amounted at the close of the year to 37,023*l.*

SMALL DEBTS COURTS.

The large number of 714,562 complaints was entered, more than eight times the number of actions in the three superior courts, from which, also, 61 cases were sent for trial before these lower tribunals. On the complaints which went on to trial, judgment was given for the plaintiff in nearly 96 cases in 100. Although the suits were for sums averaging rather less than 50*s.* each, their enormous number raised the total amount to 1,754,971*l.* In only 17,950 cases was there judgment for the defendant or a nonsuit. The judgments for the plaintiffs awarded them sums amounting altogether to 851,738*l.*, and the costs (exclusive of fees) were 37,628*l.*; the total amount of fees on all proceedings in these courts was 215,823*l.* In the superior courts the writs of execution issued against the person were more than half as many as the number issued against the goods, but in the county courts they were not a third. 9003 debtors were imprisoned; the sales made under execution against the goods were only 3776. There were proceedings, also, in the Sheriff's Court, London, and in courts at Manchester, in 14,560 cases, in which the sums claimed amounted to 95,600*l.*; the sums for which judgments were obtained to 32,194*l.*; the costs, 4508*l.*; the fees of the courts, 6369*l.* Several borough, hundred, and manorial courts also still linger in various parts of the country, but the returns respecting them are imperfect.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Archibald Paul Burt, Esq., to be Civil Commissioner and Chairman of Quarter Sessions for the colony of Western Australia; and Francis Spencer Wigley, Esq., to be Attorney-General for the island of St. Christopher.

COMMISSIONERS TO ADMINISTER OATHS IN COMMON LAW.—The following gentlemen have been appointed London Commissioners for administering oaths in courts of common law:—Queen's Bench: Thomas Harrison the younger, of No. 5, Walbrook, in the city of London; John Hovell Triston, of No. 23, Fortess-terrace, Kentish Town; and George Brown, of No. 31, Paddington-green.—Common Pleas: Thomas Harrison the younger, of No. 5, Walbrook, in the city of London; and John Hovell Triston, of No. 23, Fortess-terrace, Kentish Town.

Sheffield, Yorkshire, grocer, July 28 at 10, Sheffield, and ac.—Benjamin Pearson and William Pearson, Stratford-upon-Avon, Warwickshire, coal dealers, Aug. 8 at 11, Birmingham, div.—William Harris, Manchester, merchant, Aug. 7 at 12, Manchester, div.

CERTIFICATES.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JULY 28, 1860.

THE bill before Parliament to effect a still further change in the constitution of the Court for Marriage and Divorce, by enabling the Judge Ordinary to act without the aid of other judges, invites attention to the character and proceedings of that tribunal; while the second edition of Mr. Macqueen's "Treatise on the Law of Marriage, Divorce, and Legitimacy, as administered in the Divorce Court and in the House of Lords," which has just appeared, furnishes some valuable materials to assist the judgment. It is not, however, our intention at present to go into the whole question of the advantages or disadvantages of the Divorce Court, which must now be looked on as one of the institutions of the land; we shall confine ourselves to what has been found in every age, and we venture to say ever will be found, the characteristic enemy of justice in all tribunals empowered to grant divorces à vinculo matrimonii—COLLUSION between the parties. With this view, we propose, first, to shew the nature and magnitude of the evil; and, secondly, to direct attention to the, to our mind, feeble and utterly insufficient guards which the Legislature has set up against it.

The matter is simply this:—A., who is married to B., is desirous of getting rid of the matrimonial tie, in order to contract a fresh marriage with C.; while B. is equally desirous to dissolve the bond, either in order to enable her to contract some other marriage, or for some other reason. In order to effect this object, it is sufficient if A. can induce the Divorce Court to believe that B. has committed adultery; or, if the suit is instituted by the wife against the husband, that he has committed adultery, accompanied either by incest, or cruelty to, or desertion of her. Both parties being agreed to assist each other in bringing about this illegal and immoral end, there are evidently two ways of accomplishing it—first, by putting forward false facts to form the basis of the judgment of the Court; secondly, by putting forward for the same purpose facts which are true, but have been corruptly and fraudulently preconcerted. (Macq. 67).

Nor is the danger from these sources at all a chimerical one. Even under the old system, when divorces à vinculo were necessarily much less frequent than at present, Lord Eldon, in 1800, said he was certain that nine out of every ten cases of adultery that came into the courts, or before the bar of the House of Lords, at that period, were founded on the most infamous collusion; and similar complaints were made in the year 1772 in the House of Commons: (See Mr. Roche's paper, "Some Points in the Law of Divorce," read before the Juridical Society). The prevalence of collusion under the new system is notorious enough, and some instructive instances of it are given by Mr. Macqueen:—"In Lloyd v. Lloyd and Chichester the petitioner changed his attorney; the first attorney had his costs taxed before the registrar; during the taxation he and the new attorney quarrelled. They made mutual charges against each other, of which the registrar wisely made a memorandum, and told them he should bring the matter to the notice of the judge. In consequence of this communication, the Court, at the trial, summoned the witnesses; the truth, shewing the grossest collusion, was elicited, and the petition was dismissed. That case was undefended. It was presented to the Court as an ordinary application for divorce. The marriage was proved, and the wife's adultery was proved. Then the Court was asked to pronounce its decree dissolving the marital tie; and had it not been for the scene before the registrar, it would have done so as matter of course." (Macq., p. ix.). At p. 70, also, he gives at length a very bad case indeed, in Scotland, in 1854, where a collusive suit was prosecuted successfully. And the presence of collusion in a large number of the divorce cases which daily present themselves in England is indicated by a fact thus stated by the same author, (pp. iii, iv):—"Since its institution, the principal occupation of the Divorce Court has been dissolutions of marriage and judicial separations. The method of proceeding for both is the same. But it is remarkable that trials for dissolution have hitherto been more expeditious than trials for judicial separation. When the Court sits to hear applications for dissolution of the matrimonial tie, so as to enable the parties to marry again, nine or ten cases are usually put in the paper for disposal; and seven or eight, or more, are generally got through in a day. When, again, the Court sits to hear applications for judicial separation, a single trial is often found enough, and more than enough, for the day. Two, three, and four days have been repeatedly spent on one case. A contest of this description, memorable though ridiculous, occupied for eight days the Court and a jury, besides having afterwards been made the subject of repeated applications productive of no result." We confess, however, we do not see anything remarkable in this; a separation suit is almost necessarily a real contest, while a suit for divorce à vinculo is too frequently a sham one.

Such being the evil, we now proceed to consider the safeguards provided against it, both under the old law, and the modern system introduced by the Divorce Acts. In proceedings for divorce à mensa et thoro, the Ecclesiastical Courts of this country acted on two rules of evidence, which seem deserving of notice:—1. That adultery could not be proved by the testimony of only one witness—a rule which was, however, only a branch of the general rule of civil and canon laws, requiring two witnesses in all cases. 2. By the canons of 1597, c. 6, and 1604, c. 105, no suit for adultery could be maintained on the unsupported confession of the party accused, even though on oath. The words of the latter are, "Nec soli extrajudiciali aut judiciali et juratæ partium confessioni fides habeatur." (See Mortimer v. Mortimer, 2 Hagg. 310). And it is to be remembered, that a judicial confession can be made by allowing judgment to go by default, as well as by a more formal avowal of guilt. Both these securities are now at an end. The 48th section of the first Divorce Act, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, enacts—"The rules of evidence observed in the superior courts of common law at Westminster shall be applicable to, and observable in, the trials of all questions of fact in the court"—an enactment which has been construed to mean that the rule of the common law is, that the testimony of one witness, if credible, shall be sufficient in cases of adultery; and in Robinson v. Robinson (1 Swab. & T. 632; 5 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 392) it was held by the Divorce Court, in a case, however, where the decision could stand without any such dogma, that a divorce à vinculo matrimonii may be granted on a clear and unequivocal confession, without any other proof.

Modern legislation and judicial decision having thus swept away the old securities, the following are the new ones provided by the Legislature:—1. By the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 41, "Every person seeking a decree of nullity of marriage, &c. shall, together with the petition or other application for the same, file an affidavit verifying the same, &c., and stating that there is not any collusion or connivance between the deponent and the other party to the marriage." As if a person, who is capable of deceiving a court of justice into a collusive dissolution of a marriage, would scruple to take a false oath to effect his purpose. 2. By sect. 28 of the same statute—"Upon any such petition for dissolution of a marriage, it shall be the duty of the Court to satisfy itself, so far as it reasonably can, not only as to the facts alleged, but also whether or no the petitioner has been in any manner accessory to, or conniving at, the adultery." It will be observed, that the Legislature do not say that the Court is "to be satisfied of the absence of collusion beyond all reasonable doubt," but that it shall satisfy itself of its absence "so far as it reasonably can," which is a very different thing. And by sect. 43, the Court may, if it shall think fit, examine the petitioner on oath. But, as Mr. Macqueen observes, (p. xiv), "A judge, having no clue, examines under great disadvantage; many of his questions are wide of the mark, which is kept out of sight. This provokes a smile from those who are in the secret." 3. There is the protection of trial by jury, "if the parties, or either of them, insist upon it," (sect. 28), "or the Court itself thinks proper so to direct," (sect. 36); otherwise the matter will be determined by the Court. It is plain the Legislature did not think this much of a security against collusion, or they doubtless would have rendered it obligatory in all cases. 4. Petitions for divorce à vinculo matrimonii must be heard and determined by three judges at the least. (Sect. 10). The bill before Parliament proposes to take away the protection, whatever it may be, afforded by this clause, and to empower the Judge Ordinary to decide such causes alone.

In addition to these preventives of collusion supplied by the Legislature, numerous others have been recommended for consideration, of which the following are the chief:—First, prohibition of marriage between the convicted party and the accomplice in guilt, as is the case in the Scotch law; secondly, the intervention of the Attorney-General, or some other public officer, to see that the status and condition of the parties are clearly established, and to look to the interests of their children—a course adopted in France, the United States of America, and some other countries; thirdly, the not allowing proceedings towards divorce as matter of right, but compelling the party who complains to obtain authorisation to commence them from a judge, whose duty it should be to endeavour to reconcile the parties—a course also adopted in France; fourthly, the interposition of considerable delay before final judgment, in order to give the parties time for reflection and a locus penitentiae, the idea of which is also taken from the Code Napoléon.

The Divorce Acts seem based on the principle—to our mind a most vicious one—that adultery, and those other species of misconduct which constitute ground of divorce, are injuries to the party who claims the intervention of the Court, and to that party alone—that so long as the divorce is not collusive, and provision is made for the custody of the children, and care taken of their property, the relations and friends of the parties, and society in general, have nothing to do with the matter. In support of this view it is constantly asserted that marriage is a civil contract, and nothing more. Civil contract it undoubtedly is, but it does not follow from thence that it can be dissolved by the parties at pleasure; for it is one, the indissolubility of which, except in certain aggravated cases, is upheld and encouraged by the policy of the law as essential to the peace, good order, and happiness of society, and, in the vast majority of instances, the welfare and happiness of the parties themselves. In this the law of England is in accordance not only with the religion of the land, and of all Christendom, but with natural law, of which Puffendorf (Jus. Nat. & Gen., lib. 6, c. 1, s. 2) truly, we believe, states marriage to be an institution, and calls it “generis humani seminarium.” If this be so, any conduct which renders a party rightly amenable to the Divorce Court seems an offence against society, and should be treated as such. In other words, it may be a question whether that tribunal ought not to possess a criminal as well as a civil jurisdiction—a civil jurisdiction to dissolve the marriage on proof of the matters specified by law, and a criminal one to punish the party whose misconduct rendered necessary so strong an act. Persons who, obeying their depraved passions, would willingly, in order to free themselves from the matrimonial tie, commit a real, or confess a fictitious, adultery, would pause ere they committed or avowed an act which the law pronounced to be a crime, and visited with a severe and infamous punishment. Adultery has been punished criminally in some countries, and in our own during the Commonwealth; but the punishment attached to it being capital, those laws, like others of undue severity, fell into disrepute, and disappeared. The ecclesiastical law looks on adultery as a crime, as also did the common law—witness its action for criminal conversation—and the circumstance of the common law not having made provision for its punishment is explained by the fact that jurisdiction over the offence was usurped by the ecclesiastics.

The Legislature has now condemned the principle of our ancient law, which pronounced marriage indissoluble under any circumstances; and has also put an end to the anomalous state of things which succeeded it, when the law held the marriage tie indissoluble, and yet systematically permitted its dissolution by a cumbrous, unsafe, and highly expensive process, partly judicial, partly legislative. But the Legislature having declared that for certain specified acts of misconduct a marriage may be broken ex debito justitiæ, society has a right to demand of the Legislature that effective guarantees be afforded against collusive divorces; and it is impossible not to see that those existing at present are most miserably weak and ineffective.

That its decrees are “fabulæ, non judicia,” is a reproach to a judicial tribunal at any time; but that its machinery is systematically prostituted to the carrying out unlawful ends is the severest imputation, short of positive corruption, that can be cast upon it. Crimes in general are committed in defiance of the law, but when they are perpetrated through the instrumentality of the law itself, the immediate consequence is to shake confidence in the administration of justice, and the final consequence, to demoralise society.

LIBRARIES IN THE EQUITY COURTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF “THE JURIST.”

SIR,—The popular idea of a court of equity is, that it sits, (as Selden has it), “a roguish thing,” the Chancellor, like an Eastern Cadi, doing of his own mere motion what he thinks meet and just. Nor is it only among the vulgar that the notion is entertained. Dr. Samuel Johnson means something very like it when he says—“The Chancellor hath power to moderate and temper the written law, and subjecteth himself only to the law of nature and reason.”

Unhappily, Sir, as you are aware, equity is as much a creature of “precedent” as law, and principles established by successive decisions have in both the force of positive enactment. It is, therefore, necessary for counsel, on the argument of each cause, to have in his hands a copy of each report containing or leading to the principle he is contending for. A dozen volumes, picked from the publications of three centuries, are no uncommon companions of counsel on his leaving chambers to go into court.

Here arises my grievance. One may any day lose a cause for want of a particular volume of Reports. Some months ago there appeared in The Times a complaint of some gentleman in practice as to the cost, and tardiness in appearing, of these same “authorised” Reports. He bought them all, and contented himself with grumbling. He was undoubtedly in good business. My business is very small, but I am not less bound than my more fortunate brother to cite my cases from Reports. The result is, that men situated like myself borrow, or, proh pudor! “get” the Reports (the big black owner’s name across the outside of the books one sees in court is terribly suggestive) at a sad expenditure of time—and reputation.

In the common-law courts there is a good library, I understand, in every court. Let us hope the “amalgamation” scheme will bring this idea eastwards with it. We shall then be able to work up our cases in the libraries of the various Inns—take merely our notes with us into court, and find our materials for argument upon the spot.

That the consummation of so desirable a scheme may be speedy, prays your obedient, Chancery-lane.

A Treatise on the Law of Marriage, and other Family Settlements. With Precedents and Practical Notes. By JAMES PEARSE PEACHEY, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Royal 8vo., pp. 1041. [Swed.]

A WRITER who is fastidious, and succeeds in being correct, in his language, is likely to be careful and exact in dealing with his subject; and if his style is not only accurate, but easy and forcible, we may expect to find in the substance of his work also traces of a master’s hand. The pleasure, therefore, with which we read the first chapter of Mr. Peachey’s well-written book soon became associated with confidence in the author’s powers, and prepared us for the conclusion, to which a careful examination has conducted us, that this must be placed in the first rank among modern legal treatises, supplying a want which has long been felt. With the exception of Mr. Atherley’s very mediocre and now wholly obsolete treatise, and the late Mr. Jarman’s able but incomplete sketch in the ninth volume of his work on Conveyancing, there is no professed treatise on the subject of marriage and family settlements; and though detached portions of the subject, such as the learning relating to powers, to portions, and to the rights of husband and wife in respect of property, have been separately treated by Lord St. Leonards, Matthews, Roper, and others, there are very many important matters the authorities upon which are nowhere collected or discussed except in the volume before us.

The following is a brief outline of the contents of the work:—

Ch. 1. Origin of settlements of real estate. Ch. 2. As to restrictions upon the general capacity to make settlements, and the validity of settlements of real and personal estate when made by infants. Ch. 3. Marriage agreements, and how far they are affected by the stat. 29 Car. 2, c. 3, and by fraud and misrepresentation generally. Ch. 4. Settlements pursuant to marriage articles and executory trusts in wills. Ch. 5. Settlements in derogation of marital rights. Ch. 6. Equity of the wife to a settlement. Ch. 7. Settlements as affected by the 13 Eliz. c. 5, and by the Bankrupt Laws. Ch. 8. Settlements as affected by the 27 Eliz. c. 4; and the validity of voluntary settlements generally. Ch. 9. Settling property to the wife's separate use. Ch. 10. Pin-money. Ch. 11. Limitations in settlements to tenants for life without impeachment of waste. Ch. 12. Jointure. Ch. 13. Powers to jointure. Ch. 14. Portions. Ch. 15. Double portions. Ch. 16. Covenants to settle after-acquired property. Ch. 17. Covenants to settle particular lands; to settle lands of a defined value; to lay out money in the purchase of lands; to give or assure to a child about to marry an equal share or portion. Ch. 18. Reformation and rectification of settlements. Ch. 19. Family arrangements and resettlements. Ch. 20. Deeds of separation.

The practical value of the treatise is greatly increased by the addition of well-drawn precedents (twenty-four in number) of settlements and deeds of separation, illustrated by judicious notes; and at the end are printed the Settled Estates Acts, and the enactments relating to stamp duties on settlements, with notice of all the decisions.

We extract a portion of the chapter on pin-money as an illustration of the writer's success in relieving the driest subject by his mode of treatment—in the present instance, however, with the advantage of following Lord Brougham:—

"Generally speaking, in a modern settlement of a large family estate executed upon a marriage, the first limitation—always supposing the property intended to be settled belongs to the husband—is unto trustees, to the use of the husband, his heirs and assigns, until the marriage, and thenceforth to the use of trustees for a long term of years, upon trust to pay an annuity to the wife for her separate use. The annuity thus proposed to be raised is what is popularly called the wife's 'pin-money,' and is a sum of money set apart for a specific purpose, due to the wife in virtue of a particular arrangement, payable by the husband by force of that arrangement, and for that specific purpose. It is, with respect to the personal expenses of the wife, for the dress and pocket-money of the wife; indeed, its very name indicates a connexion with the person. It means that which is employed to deck or attire the person of the wife, and, upon a somewhat larger construction, to pay her ordinary personal expenses. A person in a humble station of life pays his wife's bills as he pays his own. A person in a station rather higher is accustomed to make, for common convenience, an allowance to his wife of so much for housekeeping expenses, if she be præposita rebus domesticis, and so much over for her own dress and the dress of her children. A person in a still higher station makes a general arrangement, which probably extends over years, if not over the whole coverture; and a person in a still more elevated station makes the arrangement of pin-money by the marriage settlement, which is, as it were, saying,

'You' (the wife) 'shall not be reduced to the somewhat humiliating necessity of disclosing to me every want of a pound to keep in your pocket, or of taking my pleasure and obtaining my consent every time you want to go to the milliner's shop to order your dress; but you shall have so much, consistent with my estate and my income, which you shall retain apart from me, and exempt from my control.' Pin-money, in short, is a refinement which the law has introduced, peculiar to the bargain or arrangement previous to and upon the marriage, and the husband, exempting it from his control, may be supposed to say, 'There shall be your dress-money, your pocket-money, your fund for separate personal expenses set apart for you during the coverture.'

"The exact period when pin-money was first introduced in England is unknown. Lord Brougham inclines to ascribe its first introduction to a time when the wives of the great nobles of England had ladies in waiting, the wives and daughters of barons and esquires attending upon them, just as the Queen Consorts of the immediate predecessors of our own Sovereign Lady had in the early part of the present century; in fact, that pin-money was invented in the days when the wives of the great nobles of England were rather princesses than subjects. Lord St. Leonards, however, entertains a doubt whether pin-money can claim so remote an origin; and a learned and ingenious friend of his Lordship, in a note addressed to the noble author of the Treatise on the Law of Property as administered by the House of Lords, considers that pin-money came to England about the period of the Restoration, and quotes, as one of his authorities for that opinion, a paper in The Spectator, by Addison, who, in his character of "spectator," is called by one of his correspondents to give his opinion whether there was any precedent for the usage of pin-money among our ancestors, or whether any mention of pin-money was to be found in Grotius, Puffendorf, or any other of the civilians. But Addison, who, as Lord St. Leonards' correspondent remarks, had, from that acquaintance with the Benchers of Lincoln's Inn of which The Spectator is made to boast, very ready means of answering the inquiry to the full extent, is unable to say more than that the doctrine of pin-money is of very late date; that it was unknown to our great grandmothers, and had not yet been received by many of our modern ladies; adding, moreover, that it would be greatly for the interest of both sexes to keep it from spreading.

"Very little of authority is to be gleaned out of the books upon the subject of pin-money, notwithstanding its now occurring (and without producing the ill effects hinted at by Addison) almost every time that a marriage takes place among persons of large fortune. You cannot, indeed, it is observed by Lord Brougham, get from the books even a definition upon which you can rely; you cannot trace the line which divides it from the separate property of the wife with any distinctness; and as to authority, either of decision or dicta, of text-writers or of judges, there is nothing that furnishes a clear and steady light on the subject; the cases running from pin-money into separate estate, and from separate estate into pin-money, in such a way, that when a text-writer, and one of repute too, quotes a case—Brady v. Barry, for instance—in support of a doctrine touching pin-money, you look at the book, and find it has nothing to do with pin-money, and does not support the proposition for which it is cited."

THE CHANCERY EVIDENCE RESOLUTIONS.

We have much pleasure in informing our readers that the Lord Chancellor has "taken action" on the resolutions reported by the Evidence Commissioners, which appeared in substance in our last impression*. The two gentlemen of the Chancery Bar to whose assiduous and successful labours last year the Profession owes the consolidation of the General Orders—Mr. Josiah W. Smith and Mr. H. Cadman Jones—have been commissioned to frame Orders to give effect to the Report. When the extent of the proposed changes is borne in mind, it is evident that a comprehensive and exact knowledge of the existing Orders, in their consolidated shape, will be necessary for the safe accomplishment of the task. Thus, examinations before the examiners are to be treated as mere affidavits ex parte. Any party is to be at liberty, on notice, to adduce evidence of contested facts, viva voce, in court. Also, a deponent by affidavit, in uncontested facts or otherwise, will be open, on notice, to cross-examination in court by the opposite side. At first sight, the power to embody such changes in Rules at all, so as to supersede the provisions of the 15 & 16 Vict., might appear questionable; nevertheless, the clause enabling the judges has been considered sufficient for the purpose. The 63rd section provides that Rules and Orders may be made for carrying the purposes of the act into effect, and for regulating the time and form and mode of procedure, and generally the practice of the Court, in respect of the matters to which the act relates, and, so far as may be found expedient, for altering the course of proceeding thereinbefore prescribed in respect to the matters to which the act relates, or any of them. The new Orders, therefore, will not require any parliamentary sanction; and, whether completed before or after the end of the session, will be promulgated in the usual manner, to take effect, perhaps, at the beginning of next term.—Law Times.

* These are given at length in the last two numbers of THE JURIST, (ante, pp. 265, 273).

THE BANKRUPTCY BILL.—The Bankruptcy Bill introduced by the Government into the House of Commons has been withdrawn for the present session. Its failure was occasioned by those clauses which sought to abolish the distinction between traders and non-traders—a project the carrying out of which involves more difficulties, and appears open to more objections, than were anticipated.

Together with an Explanatory as well as Literal Translation of the Latin Maxims contained in the Writings of the Ancient and Modern Commentators. By J. S. WHARTON, Esq., M.A., Oxon, Barrister at Law, Author of "The Articled Clerk's Manual," &c. Second Edition, enlarged. V. & R. Stevens & Sons, 26, Bell-yard, Lincoln's-inn.

FINLASON'S CHARITABLE TRUSTS ACTS. In 12mo., price 8s. cloth, THE ACT for the BETTER REGULATION of CHARITABLE TRUSTS. With Notes, and an Introduction on the Jurisdiction exercised by the Court of Chancery; and the Rules of Equity as to their Management and Administration, and the Nature of the Jurisdiction by the Commissioners of Charities; Notices of all the chief Cases on the subject. To which is added, the Act 18 & 19 Vict. for the Amendment of the Act 16 & 17 Vict.; with Notes, and an Appendix containing Precedents of Schemes, &c. By W. F. FINLASON, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law. * * The Supplement may be had separately, price 3s. sewed. V. & R. Stevens & Sons, 26, Bell-yard, Lincoln's-inn.

FINLASON'S COMMON-LAW ACTS. In 12mo., price 14s. cloth, THE COMMON-LAW PROCEDURE ACTS of 1852 and 1854; with Notes, containing all the Cases either already expressly decided on or tending to elucidate them. With an Appendix, containing the Common-law Procedure Act of Will. 4, the recent Acts on Evidence, the New Rules to Michaelmas Vacation, 1854, and an Introduction. By W. F. FINLASON, Esq., Barrister at Law. "This is, in our judgment, a most excellent and carefully worked book. The equity powers given to the Common-law Courts are admirably done. The views taken by Mr. Finlason of the practical bearing and operation of these acts are remarkably shrewd and suggestive. Such men, and their editions of statutes, tend very greatly to improve the laws they expound, and powerfully assist the objects of the Legislature."—Law Magazine, Feb. 1855.

"We have now before us the work of Mr. Finlason, whose previous labours in expounding other statutes entitle him to the favourable consideration of the Profession. The notes to the various new enactments are very full and valuable."—Legal Observer, Jan. 6, 1855. "This work is well done."—Law Times, Jan. 6, 1855. V. & R. Stevens & Sons, 26, Bell-yard, Lincoln's-inn.

The Second Edition. Containing all the Statutes of Practical Utility in the Civil and Criminal Administration of Justice to the Present Time. By W. N. WELSBY and EDWARD BEAVAN, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. * * In the debate on the proposed consolidation of the Statutes, on the 9th February, 1854, Lord Campbell said, "that the Statutes at Large extended to about fifty volumes folio, but all the Statutes which were usually required by lawyers for reference might be found in three octavo volumes compiled by his learned friend Mr. Welsby. When he (Lord Campbell) was upon the bench he always had this work by him, and so Statutes were ever referred to by the Bar which he could not find in it." This important Work is continued annually, by an Edition of the Statutes, arranged on a similar plan, with a full Index, being published shortly after the close of each Session. Edited by E. BEAVAN, Esq. Five Supplements are now ready, containing the Statutes of 1851, price 9s. 6d.; 1855, price 9s. 6d.; 1856, price 6s.; 1857, price 10s. 6d.; and 1858, price 6s., sewed. * * The Supplements of 1854 to 1857 inclusive, with a General Index to the whole, can be had done up in one volume, cloth boards, (uniform with Chitty's Statutes), price 11. 16s. 6d. THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 4, 1866.

THE Legislature having undertaken the task of consolidating and amending, in part at least, the criminal statutes of the realm, it is to be hoped that, among other important subjects, their attention will be directed to that of Corporal Punishment—one worthy of consideration at any time, and at the present moment attracting the notice of the public in consequence of the recent conviction, at the Sussex Assizes, of a schoolmaster for manslaughter in the excessive chastisement of a pupil. In another part of the present impression will also be found an extract from a contemporary paper, shewing the number of instances in which corporal punishment has been inflicted in our gaols during the last three years.

Nothing can be more inconsistent and contradictory than the views prevalent at the present day in this country on the subject before us. One party denounces corporal punishment, under any circumstances, as barbarous and brutalising; and would prohibit its infliction either in families or schools, or by courts of justice, or even for the maintenance of naval or military discipline; and they appeal with considerable force to the utterly unjustifiable use made of it by our ancestors, and occasionally even in our own time, of which numerous instances can easily be collected. Others consider this mode of punishment indispensable, and urge that the abuse of a thing is no argument against its use; and some among these seem perfectly enamoured with it. When the bill on which the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, is founded, which empowers two justices of the peace or a metropolitan police magistrate, without the assistance of a jury, and without appeal, to punish summarily, by six months' imprisonment and hard labour, persons guilty of aggravated assaults upon women and children, was brought into Parliament, it was proposed to superadd the punishment of the lash. The proposal was then rejected, but has been renewed from time to time; and in the present session of Parliament a bill was introduced with that object, and the first reading carried by a majority, upwards of 100 members voting in its favour. It was, however, rejected on the motion for a second reading, much to the individual security of the entire male population of the land.

In this conflict of opinion we do not mean to discuss the question, whether this punishment ought to be expunged from our jurisprudence. We will assume, as the law does, that there are cases in which it may be resorted to, as well in naval, military, and municipal law as in foro domesticum; in the ordinary criminal law, however, being restricted to males only, either adult or otherwise, and not to be inflicted more than three times for each offence; and will merely direct attention to a few points in which, as it appears to us, improvement in the existing system seems imperatively called for.

First, then, with respect to this punishment in private life. The case of the schoolmaster already referred to, barbarous as the conduct of the accused undoubtedly was, and great as the interest which the affair excited in the mind of the public, develops no new principle of law. It leaves the law on the subject as it has ever been, viz. that a parent may (not must, for it is entirely matter for his own discretion whether he will resort to this kind of discipline) administer reasonable corporal chastisement to his children; and a schoolmaster, being in loco parentis, has the same right impliedly delegated to him when a child is placed under his care. In the case in Sussex it appears that the parent had expressly delegated that power; but this makes no difference, so far as the charge against the accused is concerned; for, as a parent has no right to inflict an unreasonable and barbarous chastisement himself, he cannot delegate such a right to any one else, even were he so minded, which there is not the least reason to believe the father of the deceased in that case was. But the right of a private individual to resort to this punishment is limited to the case of his children, and does not extend to his wife or servants. The old law, that a man might beat his wife under certain limitations, if, indeed, it ever existed, most certainly does not hold at the present day, although he may for misconduct deprive her of her liberty.

According to the general rule of the common law, the question, whether the chastisement inflicted by a parent or schoolmaster was reasonable, whether that chastisement had induced death or not, was determined by the tribunal of all others the best fitted to determine a question often so delicate in itself, and depending for its solution on such a variety of surrounding circumstances—a jury, acting under the direction of a judge as to the law. But since the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, vested a summary jurisdiction in justices of the peace in cases of assault, they have occasionally exercised it where the defendant was a parent or schoolmaster, and the defence has been that the assault was committed in the way of lawful correction. We cannot help thinking that in these cases, (the second at least), condemnation by such a tribunal, even supposing it within the letter, is not within the spirit or intention of the statute. In correcting a child or pupil the parent or schoolmaster is doing a lawful act, the only question being, was that correction excessive in its character—a question on which his bread often, occasionally his very existence, depends; and such an issue surely ought not to be disposed of by one or two justices, without a jury, and without appeal.

Corporal punishment for offences against the law differs considerably from corporal punishment in private life. First, in the latter, the same person is both judge and executioner, and acts in both capacities on his own responsibility. Secondly, the comparatively arbitrary powers necessary for the government and development of the minds of children would be alike useless and mischievous in the case of adults; for which reason it is not advisable, as regards corporal correction in foro domestico, to define the amount of punishment beforehand, as is done in the naval and military services; and, we cannot help thinking, ought to be done when the punishment is inflicted by the civil power. Such is not the case at present, for although the condemned person must not be whipped more than three times, the instrument of correction may be anything, from a small twig to a cat-of-nine-tails; and the number of lashes is never specified in the sentence. The consequence is, as appears from the extract referred to, and as, we believe, pretty well known, that the severity of this punishment varies immensely, according to the gaol where it is inflicted; so that, unless the judge who passes a sentence of corporal punishment is conversant with the discipline of the gaol where the punishment will be carried out, he cannot know what sentence he is passing, nor can the accused know what punishment he is to expect. And this is the more important since the practical disuse of public whipping, which was at least attended with the advantage of rendering amenable to the control of public opinion both the judge who pronounced the sentence, and the officer who carried it into effect.

There is one statement in the extract in question which we hope is a mistake—viz. that in some parts of the country corporal punishment is inflicted on adults in such a manner as to cause indecent exposure of the person—a practice certainly not usual in our gaols, and at variance with that of the navy and the army. If, however, that statement should unfortunately be true, the sooner the practice is discontinued the better; and, indeed, it may be a question whether it is quite a safe one for those who resort to it. At the Maidstone Spring Assizes, 1842, (Reg. v. Miles, 6 Jur., part 1, p. 243), the master of an union workhouse was indicted for having, under colour of his authority as such, inflicted by his own hand corporal chastisement on the naked person of a female pauper, then an inmate of the workhouse. The chastisement not being suggested to have been excessive, the defendant's counsel took the objection that he was only exercising lawful authority in foro domestico; but Gurney, B., said, "The indecency of the mode of correction places it on the footing of unreasonable correction." The defendant then withdrew his plea of not guilty, and, if we remember right, was sentenced to three months' imprisonment.

PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF STUDENTS.

MICHAELMAS TERM, 1886.

THE Council of Legal Education have approved of the following rules for the public examination of the students.

The attention of the students is requested to the following rules of the Inns of Court:—

"As an inducement to students to propose themselves for examination, studentships shall be founded of fifty guineas per annum each, to continue for a period of three years, and one such studentship shall be conferred on the most distinguished student at each public examination; and further, the examiners shall select and certify the names of three other students who shall have passed the next best examinations, and the Inns of Court to which such students belong may, if desired, dispense with any terms, not exceeding two, that may remain to be kept by such students previously to their being called to the Bar. Provided that the examiners shall not be obliged to confer or grant any studentship or certificate unless they shall be of opinion that the examination of the students they select has been such as entitles them thereto."

"At every call to the Bar those students who have passed a public examination, and either obtained a studentship or a certificate of honour, shall take rank in seniority over all other students who shall be called on the same day."

"No students shall be eligible to be called to the Bar who shall not either have attended during one whole year the lectures of two of the Readers, or have satisfactorily passed a public examination."

RULES FOR THE PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF CANDIDATES FOR HONOURS, OR CERTIFICATES ENTITLING STUDENTS TO BE CALLED TO THE BAR.

An examination will be held in next Michaelmas Term, to which a student of any of the Inns of Court, who is desirous of becoming a candidate for a studentship or honours, or of obtaining a certificate of fitness for being called to the Bar, will be admissible.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination will be required to enter his name at the treasurer's office of the Inn of Court to which he belongs on or before Tuesday, the 23rd day of October next; and he will further be required to state in writing whether his object in offering himself for examination is to compete for a studentship or other honourable distinction.

tion, or whether he is merely desirous of obtaining a certificate preliminary to a call to the Bar.

The examination will commence on Tuesday, the 30th day of October next, and will be continued on the Wednesday and Thursday following.

It will take place in the Benchers' Reading-room of Lincoln's-inn; and the doors will be closed ten minutes after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination.

The examination by printed questions will be conducted in the following order:—

Tuesday morning, the 30th October, at half-past nine, on Constitutional Law and Legal History; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on Equity.

Wednesday morning, the 31st October, at half-past nine, on Common Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on the Law of Real Property, &c.

Thursday morning, the 1st November, at half-past nine, on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, a paper will be given to the students including questions bearing upon all the foregoing subjects of examination.

The oral examination will be conducted in the same order, during the same hours, and on the same subjects as those already marked out for the examination by printed questions, except that on Thursday afternoon there will be no oral examination.

The oral examination of each student will be conducted apart from the other students; and the character of that examination will vary, according as the student is a candidate for honours or a studentship, or desires simply to obtain a certificate.

The oral examination and printed questions will be founded on the books below mentioned, regard being had, however, to the particular object with a view to which the student presents himself for examination.

In determining the question, whether a student has passed the examination in such a manner as to entitle him to be called to the Bar, the examiners will principally have regard to the general knowledge of law and jurisprudence which he has displayed.

A student may present himself at any number of examinations, until he shall have obtained a certificate.

Any student who shall obtain a certificate may present himself a second time for examination as a candidate for the studentship, but only at one of the three examinations immediately succeeding that at which he shall have obtained such certificate; provided, that if any student so presenting himself shall not succeed in obtaining the studentship, his name shall not appear in the list.

Students who have kept more than eleven terms shall not be admitted to an examination for the studentship.

The READER ON CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND LEGAL HISTORY will expect the candidates for honours to be well acquainted with the origin and progress of our Laws and Constitution, as explained in chap. 8, part 3, of Hallam's History of the Middle Ages.

He will expect them to be well acquainted with the chapters in Hallam's Constitutional History which give an account of the Reigns of Elizabeth, the Stuarts, William III, and Anne; with the State Trials of persons eminent in our history, or remarkable for any other reason, from the time of Henry VIII to the Accession of George I, with the History of the Law of Treason and Libel.

All candidates will be required to know the leading events in English History from the Conquest to the Accession of George III; to have an accurate knowledge of the Reigns of the Stuart Kings, of Magna Charta, the Petition of Right, the Bill of Rights, and the Act of Settlement.

The READER ON EQUITY proposes to examine in the following books:—

1. Haynes's Outlines of Equity; Smith's Manual of Equity Jurisprudence; Hunter's Elementary View of the Proceedings in a Suit in Equity, part 1.

2. The Cases and Notes contained in the first volume of White & Tudor's Leading Cases, and the following Cases in the second volume:—Aldrich v. Cooper, Hooley v. Hatton, Ex parte Pye, Chancey's case, Townley v. Sherborne, and Bryce v. Stokes, and the Notes on those Cases; the Act to further amend the Law of Property and to relieve Trustees, (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35); Mitford on the Pleadings in the Court of Chancery—Introduction; c. 1, ss. 1, 2; c. 1, s. 3, (the first six pages); c. 2, s. 1; c. 2, s. 2, part 1, (the first three pages); c. 2, s. 2, part 2, (the first two pages); c. 2, s. 2, part 3; c. 3.

Candidates for certificates of having passed a satisfactory examination will be expected to be well acquainted with the books mentioned in the first of the above classes.

Candidates for a studentship or honours will be examined in the books mentioned in the two classes.

The READER ON THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY proposes to examine in the following books and subjects:—

1. Joshua Williams on Real Property, 5th ed.

2. On the Mutual Rights of Husband and Wife as regards Property: Joshua Williams on Personal Property, part 4, c. 5, 4th ed.; Josiah W. Smith on Real and Personal Property, pp. 973-1010, 2nd ed.; and the Stat. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57.

3. Particulars and Conditions of Sale: Sugden's Vendors and Purchasers, pp. 11-35, 13th ed.; or Dart's Vendors and Purchasers, c. 5, pp. 68-112, 3rd ed.

4. The Stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries; Lord St. Leonards' Essay on the Real Property Statutes, c. 2.

5. The Law of Perpetuities: Cadell v. Palmer, (1 Cl. & Fin. 372), and the Notes to that Case in Tudor's Leading Cases in Conveyancing, p. 321.

Candidates for honours will be examined in all the foregoing subjects; candidates for a certificate in those under heads 1, 2, and 3.

The READER ON JURISPRUDENCE and the CIVIL LAW proposes to examine candidates for honours in the following books and subjects:—

1. The Roman Law of Persons and of Contract, and Delict—Warnkönig, Institutiones Juris Romani Privati, book 1 and book 3 of edition of 1860, (excluding the Introduction).

2. Lindley's Introduction to the Study of Jurisprudence, (translated from Thibaut), part 2, c. 1, divs. 2, 3, and 4, "Of Duties," "Of the Relations of Rights and Duties to each other," and "Of Modifications of Rights and Duties," with the Notes of the Translator.

3. Wheaton's Elements of International Law, part 4, cc. 1, 2, (vol. 2 of the English edition), "Of the Commencement of War," and "Of Rights of War as between Enemies."

Candidates for a pass certificate will be examined in—

1. The Institutes of Justinian, books 1 and 3, with the Notes in Sandars's edition, or the Explanations in Cumin's Manual.

2. Wheaton's Elements of International Law, part 4, cc. 1, 2, "Of the Commencement of Hostilities," and "Of Rights of War as between Enemies."

The READER ON COMMON LAW proposes to examine in the following books and subjects:—

Candidates for a pass certificate will be examined as to—

1. The Ordinary Practice and Course of Pleading in an Action.

2. The Principles of our Common Law, so far as set forth in Broom's Legal Maxims, 3rd ed., cc. 1-6, ss. 1, 2.

3. Smith's Lectures on Contracts, (3rd ed., 1860), by Malcolm, Lectures 1-6 inclusive.

4. Stephen's Commentaries, last ed., book 4, "Of Crimes," cc. 1-4 inclusive.

Candidates for the studentship or honours will be examined in the above books and subjects, and also as to—

5. The following Cases, with the Notes appended thereto, in Tudor's Leading Cases in Mercantile and Maritime Law:—Sandilands v. Marsh, Tarling v. Baxter, Hanson v. Meyer, Chase v. Westmore, and the Case of Market Over.

6. Story on Bailments, cc. 2-5, "Of Deposits, Mandates, Gratuitous Loans, Pawns, or Pledges."

7. Taylor on Evidence, 3rd ed., part 1, c. 3; part 2, cc. 3-5, 13-15.

8. The Law relating to Simple Larceny, as exemplified by Reg. v. Thurborn (1 Den. C. C. 387) and Reg. v. Preston, (2 Den. C. C. 353).

By order of the Council,

RICHARD BETHELL, Chairman.

PROSPECTUS OF THE LECTURES

To be delivered during the ensuing Michaelmas Educational Term by the several Readers appointed by the Inns of Court.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND LEGAL HISTORY.

THE Reader will pursue the History of our Constitution from the Accession of Henry VIII to the Accession of George III. He will trace the progress and varieties of judicial opinion as it affected the interpretation of Law—the Law of Real Property, the Law of Evidence, the Law of Libel, the Criminal Law, and the Doctrines of Equity; and he will point out the changes and growth of the Statute Law during the same period.

In his Private Classes he will begin with the early History of our Constitution, and explain its gradual progress during the Reigns of the Plantagenets.

The books to which he will refer are—Blackstone's Commentaries, by Kerr—Hallam's Constitutional History—Rapin's History of the Period—Appendices to Hume's History—State Trials of the Period—Butler's Notes to Coke Littleton—Statute Book of the Period—Fortescue, (Amos)—Parliamentary History—Hayes's History of Conveyancing—Clarendon's Life and History—May's History—Burnet's History—Ralph's History—Starkie's Law of Libel—Greenleaf on Evidence.

EQUITY.

The Reader on Equity proposes to deliver, during the ensuing Educational Term, a course of Six Lectures:—

1. On the History and Constitution of the Court of Chancery.

2. On the Nature of Equity Pleadings.

3. On the Jurisdiction exercised under the Sign Manual in Lunacy.

4. On the Law of Bankruptcy.

The Reader on Equity proposes to form two Private Classes, a Senior and Junior, according to the amount of preliminary knowledge possessed by the Students; using in the Junior "Smith's Manual of Equity Jurisprudence," as a text-book; and in the Senior, examining the principal branches of Equitable Jurisdiction, with a frequent reference to Cases; and also commencing the perusal of Lord Redesdale's Treatise on Equity Pleadings.

THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY.

The Reader on the Law of Real Property proposes to deliver, in the ensuing Educational Term, a series of Six Public Lectures on the following subjects:—

1. A Comparison between the Old and New Law with respect to Wills.

2. The Stats. 1 Vict. c. 26, and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 24.

3. The decisions upon those Statutes.

In his Private Classes the Reader on the Law of Real Property will refer more particularly to the cases cited in the Public Lectures. He will also endeavour to go through a complete course of Real Property Law, using the work of Mr. Joshua Williams as a text-book.

JURISPRUDENCE AND THE CIVIL LAW.

The Reader on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law proposes, in the course of the ensuing Educational Term, to deliver Six Public Lectures on the following subject:—

The Roman Law of Testaments and Legacies, and the Principles which have descended from it to Modern Jurisprudence.

With his Private Class the Reader will proceed through the principal departments of Roman Law, taking as his text-book the Institutiones Juris Romani Privati of Warnkönig, and beginning at the First Chapter of that work. The Course will, if possible, be so arranged that a definite portion of its subject may be completed in each Educational Term.

COMMON LAW.

The Reader on Common Law proposes to deliver, during the ensuing Educational Term, Six Public Lectures, as under—

Lecture 1 will be introductory to the Study of the Law.

The remaining Lectures of the Course will be devoted to the following subjects:—

1. The Sources whence our Common Law has been derived.

2. The Leading Principles of Law, as applied in Civil or Criminal Cases.

3. Tribunals which administer the Common Law.

With his Private Class the Reader will explain and trace out the operation of Legal Principles, illustrating this subject by references to decided Cases, and using as text-books Smith's Leading Cases, (4th edition); Broom's Legal Maxims, (3rd edition); and Stephen's or Blackstone's Commentaries.

By order of the Council,

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS

APPOINTED TO INQUIRE INTO THE EXPEDIENCY OF BRINGING TOGETHER INTO ONE PLACE OR NEIGHBOURHOOD ALL THE SUPERIOR COURTS OF LAW AND EQUITY, THE PROBATE AND DIVORCE COURTS, AND THE HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY, AND THE VARIOUS OFFICES BELONGING TO THE SAME, AND INTO THE MEANS WHICH EXIST, OR MAY BE SUPPLIED, FOR PROVIDING A SITE OR SITES, AND FOR ERECTING SUITABLE BUILDINGS, FOR CARRYING OUT THIS OBJECT.

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty.

WE, the undersigned members of your Majesty's commission for the purpose of inquiring into the expediency of bringing together into one place or neighbourhood all the Superior Courts of Law and Equity, the Probate and Divorce Courts, and the Court of Admiralty, and the various offices belonging to the same, and into the means which exist, or may be supplied, for providing a site or sites, and for erecting suitable buildings, for carrying out this object, humbly certify to your Majesty that we have proceeded in the discharge of the duty imposed upon us, and are now prepared to submit to your Majesty the conclusions to which we have been led, and the recommendations consequent thereon which we have agreed to as proper to be made.

1. The inquiry which it has been our duty to make obviously divides itself into three heads—the expediency of the concentration into one place or neighbourhood; the selection of a site or sites; and the suggestion of the pecuniary means for procuring it or them, and for erecting suitable buildings thereon.

2. We have proceeded accordingly; upon all these branches we have examined many witnesses, and availed ourselves of inquiries already made, under parliamentary authority or otherwise, on the same or closely connected subjects; we have also called for, and been supplied with, returns from different offices; and upon some parts of our inquiry we have all of us, in a greater or less degree, had the benefit of personal experience, which has enabled us, we trust, more correctly to appreciate the evidence and the information derived from other sources.

3. Upon the desirableness of such a concentration as your Majesty's commission describes we have had no division of opinion, or difficulty in arriving at our conclusion. The evidence of witnesses entitled to the greatest consideration, personally, and from their means of acquiring knowledge on the subject, may be stated as being all on one side. In speaking of concentration, we find it necessary to include, not merely that of courts with courts, but of courts with their offices, and, in a larger sense, with the chambers of the bar, and the offices of the attorneys, and also the requisite of sufficient and well-arranged accommodation for the judges, the officers, the bar, the attorneys, the jurymen, and the public—meaning by the latter term, and especially with regard to the courts themselves, the suitors, the witnesses, and such a number of persons coming either to learn, or merely to satisfy a reasonable curiosity and interest, as the indispensable character of open courts requires to be provided for. The judges cannot discharge all branches of their duties without private rooms, in addition, and attached, to their courts; and so large and such an important portion of their business, in all the branches of the law, is transacted at chambers, that rooms specially adapted for the purpose, and of considerable size, are necessary for these also. The chambers, indeed, are but informal courts; great numbers of persons are in attendance there at the same time, and beyond these a considerable staff of clerks is permanently occupied, and many books and papers are constantly kept there. Every court, too, has various offices attached to it, in which its judgments, decrees, and orders are reduced into form, and from which they issue to the parties interested—in which a variety of documents are from time to time filed—in which, also, references from the court to its Masters are conducted: all these purposes require considerable space. The barristers, and attorneys and solicitors, must have, not merely accommodation for the conduct of causes in court, but rooms near to the courts, in which they may, at intervals, meet and consult. For the jurymen, those who are actually impannelled, and those in attendance, as well as for witnesses, retiring rooms and waiting rooms are a matter of necessity; and it is essential to the satisfactory administration of justice that the public should have convenient access to the courts, and suitable sitting room within them.

4. But of all these parties none is ultimately so largely interested as the public itself, for which alone, indeed, judges and officers, barristers and attorneys, courts and offices are provided. Of all the elements of expense in litigation there is none more important than time; of all the sources of vexation attendant on it there is none more bitter than unnecessary delay. If court be separated from court, and courts be at a distance from their offices—if these last be separated from each other—if both be at a distance from the chambers of barristers and the offices of attorneys and solicitors—it is obvious that time must be lost in the transaction of business, in every stage of it, by every one concerned in it. The superior courts of law and equity are very commonly sitting in eleven places, and often in more, at the same hour; and single judges are frequently required to be sitting in two places at different hours on the same day. While the courts themselves are also still sitting, the exigencies of business will often make it the duty of the same barristers, and of the same attorneys and solicitors, to be in attendance on more than one cause in different branches even of the same court, it may be even in the same cause, on the same day, and at the same or nearly the same times. It must be obvious that the only mode by which the inconveniences, the adjournments, and delays, which all this implies, can be remedied, or reduced within a bearable amount, is by a close approximation and a judicious arrangement of the courts and their offices in a well-chosen site. And it must not be overlooked, that the tendency to what is called a fusion of law and equity, or, more properly, an attribution to the courts of law and equity respectively of some of the functions and powers heretofore belonging only to each, brings with it an increased necessity for such an approximation as we have spoken of. For although it may not be possible that in two systems so highly artificial, and at the same time so extensive, the same practitioners should be so soundly and thoroughly instructed as to practise indifferently and with equal advantages in the courts of each, yet it is both possible and desirable that the advocates in each should be generally, and not merely superficially, informed in the law and practice of both; and to this a ready communication between the practitioners will contribute much. The attorneys, too, will find it much more easy to attend in person, and not by their clerks, when different causes come on for hearing in different courts on the same day. Meantime, as regards the Bar, what has been done in this direction already has had the effect of calling barristers frequently from the common-law courts to the courts of equity, and conversely. It is of frequent occurrence now for common lawyers to conduct the oral examination of witnesses in equity, and for the Chancery lawyer to sustain or resist an application for an injunction or discovery in a court of common law.

5. It may be suggested that much of the inconvenience now existing would cease if all practitioners were to confine their attendance more strictly to some particular court or courts. It is not within our province to go into the large question which this raises further than affects our present inquiry. It may be that individual practitioners, from whatever motive, or under whatever necessity, accept business more in amount, and more widely scattered, than under the happiest arrangements of courts they can properly perform; but the difficulties of avoiding or preventing this are greater than is commonly supposed—for junior barristers we believe them to be insuperable. In the earlier stages of litigation, in which junior barristers are most commonly engaged, it is often not known in what court the cause will be heard; and it would be most seriously prejudicial to the client to be deprived, in the later stages of the cause, of the counsel whom he had consulted, and on whose advice he had acted, in its commencement. We are, of course, no advocates for an abuse, but we are certain that no improvement which can be anticipated in this respect would have the effect of removing the evils arising from want of concentration.

6. Your Majesty has directed us to consider the propriety of concentration not merely of the Superior Courts of Law and Equity, but also, with them, of the Probate and Divorce Courts, and the Court of Admiralty. In some respects these might have seemed, especially the latter, to come under different considerations from the courts of law and equity, but for changes which have recently taken place. The business of the courts which the Probate and Divorce Courts now represent, and of the Admiralty, was transacted by advocates and proctors, forming a distinct branch of the Profession from the general body of barristers and attorneys; their chambers, and the offices and depositories of the courts, were in convenient nearness to the courts themselves; it was for the Probate Court desirable that it should not be removed far from the Bank, and for the Admiralty that it should be near to the places of business of the merchants, mariners, and shipowners who had principally occasion to resort to it. Nearly all these special circumstances have now ceased to exist. Doctors' Commons has been broken up; the courts sit at Westminster; the practice is thrown open to the whole Profession in both branches without distinction. The depository of the Probate Court is so entirely inadequate that a new one on a very extended scale must be constructed; and if the site which we are prepared to recommend be adopted, the Probate Court and its depository will be brought much nearer to Somerset House than at present, which we are assured will be more than a compensation for the removal to a greater distance from the Bank. It is obvious, however, that a considerable period of time must elapse before the new building for this new depository can be finished; and we do not, therefore, see any reason to believe that the act of Parliament passed during the last session, empowering the Government to purchase the site occupied by the College of Advocates, need interpose any obstacle to the execution of the design which we are prepared to recommend; and the Court of Admiralty will be nearer to the city than it is at present, since its removal to Westminster Hall. We should certainly be desirous of making the concentration we recommend as comprehensive as possible, much of its advantage depending on its completeness; but, apart from this, we think that, with the present functions of these courts, and in the altered state of the Profession in both branches, there would be a manifest inconvenience in omitting them.

7. The present state of the courts and offices is nearly as follows:—Practically the courts of equity have ceased to sit at Westminster, and now sit in convenient neighbourhood to each other in Lincoln's-inn, with the exception of the Rolls, the court for which is in Chancery-lane, at a short distance only. Their offices and chambers, fourteen in number, are scattered about in Chancery-lane, Quality-court, the Rolls-yard, Lincoln's-inn, and Staple-inn. To these must be added the offices of the Master in Lunacy, in Lincoln's-inn-fields; of the Registrar in Lunacy, and that of the Bankrupt Appeals, in Quality-court; and the Patent Office, in Southampton-buildings. The courts of common law sit in Westminster Hall, conveniently near to each other; but the judges' chambers are in the Rolls-gardens; the Masters' offices of the Queen's Bench are in King's Bench-walk and Mitre-court-buildings, in the Temple; those of the Common Pleas, in Serjeants'-inn and Chancery-lane; those of the Exchequer, in Stone-buildings, Lincoln's-inn; that of the Queen's Remembrancer, in Chancery-lane; that of the Registrar of Acknowledgments of Married Women, in Lancaster-place; that of the Registry of Judgments, in Serjeants'-inn; that of the Associates and Marshals, in Chancery-lane.

8. The judge of the Probate and Divorce Courts has no court of his own, but sits for the present, by permission of the Lord Chancellor, in the Lord Chancellor's Court in Westminster Hall; his registrar's office, however, and the depository of wills, are still remaining in Doctors' Commons. The judge of the High Court of Admiralty is also without any court of his own; he has been used to sit, by permission of the College of Advocates, in their hall, and now sits, by permission, in the court of the Master of the Rolls at Westminster; but the office of his registrar, and that of the Admiralty Marshals, are still in Doctors' Commons.

9. Substantially, therefore, the courts to which our inquiry extends are in two divisions—Lincoln's-inn and its neighbourhood for the equity branch; Westminster Hall for the common law, probate and divorce, and the High Court of Admiralty. The offices of the former are scattered about at no great distance from Lincoln's-inn; the offices of the latter are separated from them by the whole distance from Westminster Hall to the Temple, Chancery-lane, the higher parts of Lincoln's-inn, and Doctors' Commons.

10. This sketch, however, will be imperfect without adding, that the barristers who practise in the courts of equity for the most part have their chambers situated with considerable convenience in and about Lincoln's-inn; but those who practise in the courts of common law for the most part have their chambers in or about the Temple. Of the London attorneys, more than two-thirds, and among them probably a much larger proportion of those who are agents of country attorneys, have their offices in what some of our witnesses designated as the law district, meaning thereby the Inns of Court, and the streets and Inns of Chancery in the neighbourhood.

11. We still, however, have not the whole case upon the practical propriety of concentration before us, until we have seen whether the several courts, and their several offices, considered without reference to it, are sufficient and convenient, and suitable for their respective purposes. Now, with respect to the equity courts, we see no reason to doubt that the Lord Chancellor, the Lords Justices, the Master of the Rolls, and the senior Vice-Chancellor are accommodated with reasonable convenience, and with some regard to the dignity of their stations; as to these, it is only to be remarked that they sit, not, as might be expected, in public buildings, the property of the nation, but, with the exception of the Master of the Rolls, as tenants at most for years, and as regards the highest of them, the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Justices, as tenants at will of the Benchers of Lincoln's-inn. But the courts of the two remaining Vice-Chancellors are utterly unfit for their purpose; in structure, size, proportion, ventilation, and arrangement, it is difficult to speak of them in too strong terms of disapproval. They are so unfit as to make it necessary for us to report to your Majesty upon the urgent propriety of some immediate measure for the better accommodation of these two judges. What we have said of their courts applies with equal, if not greater, force to their chambers; it almost requires ocular inspection to conceive fully how insufficient, inconvenient, and unwholesome they are. The only explanation which can be offered for this is, that they were hastily provided for a temporary accommodation, which it was assumed would be very soon replaced by something permanent, and on a proper scale; and it is certainly high time that the just claims of these judges, and not less those of their clerks and of the public, in these respects, should be attended to.

It is right to state that this particular branch of our subject had been under the consideration of the then Lord Chancellor (Lord Chelmsford) and other equity judges, as well as of the Honourable Society of Lincoln's-inn, before the date of our commission; and there has been laid before us a matured scheme for the purpose of providing additional courts and chambers within the limits of Lincoln's-inn. It is no part of our duty to enter into any minute consideration of the details of this scheme; the proposed buildings, we are informed, would satisfy the judges more immediately concerned; and we have no reason to doubt that, in respect of accommodation, they would meet the requirements of the public. This scheme, however, is not a temporary one, nor can it be carried into effect except by a very large outlay of money; it is founded on the principle of making permanent the present separation of the equity courts from those of the common law, and all other branches of the administration of justice. The scheme is to be effected by enabling the Society of Lincoln's-inn to raise a fund of 100,000*l.*, or more if necessary; the interest on 100,000*l.*, at 4*l.* per cent., being secured by a perpetual charge of 4000*l.* on the income of one of the funds with which we propose to deal. The principle on which this arrangement proceeded was, that an annual sum, exceeding 2000*l.*, is already paid out of the fund in question for the rent of the Vice-Chancellors' chambers and for the two Vice-Chancellors' courts, and it was conceived that the increased accommodation would justify the increased rent. The Society, in the proposed scheme, took on itself the responsibility of any excess in the outlay beyond 100,000*l.* It is, therefore, inconsistent with the recommendations which we think it our duty to make; and not only so, but it will, if carried into effect, certainly postpone for an indefinite period, if not practically extinguish, all hope of the general concentration to which we attach so much importance. We should have been much pleased if we had found it possible to provide for a time courts and chambers in Lincoln's-inn substantially as convenient and suitable for their purposes, in buildings however divested of architectural dignity and ornament; but the want of space there will make even this impossible, without calling on the Society for sacrifices of property in chambers which it would be unreasonable to ask of them for a merely temporary purpose. We are compelled, therefore, to limit ourselves to recommending alterations in the present courts, which, we are assured, will have the effect of removing defects in the ventilation, and of preventing them from being either distressingly hot and close or cold at any period of the year. This we think should be done, with the permission of the Society, at the public expense. In respect to the chambers, it would not be right to suggest any measures specifically, the matter being so much in the discretion of the Society, and the practicability of any suggestion depending much on local circumstances not within our knowledge; but the Benchers will no doubt feel anxious, in the spirit which has always actuated them, to meet, so far as they are able, the just requirements of the public. Whether this can be best effected by the granting of other or additional chambers, or by a new arrangement of those at present devoted to the purpose, they will be the best judges; but it seems to us very desirable, and we can hardly suppose it to be impossible, to provide each Vice-Chancellor, and each of his chief clerks, with one spacious room for transacting public business; a room of proper size for solicitors and parties in attendance; and other rooms for the accommodation of the junior clerks, and the custody of the numerous books and papers from time to time placed there during the pendency of causes. Whatever alterations the fulfilment of these objects may require should be made at the expense of the public, and when the temporary want ceases, the expense of making the chambers fit for their original purpose should be borne in the same way. The interests of the Society should not suffer by thus supplying a public want; though it has, no doubt, advanced considerably in character and prosperity, by having become, as it were, the home of our courts of equity. The honourable connexion so formed has entailed on it, to some extent, the liability to meet such a call on it as the present, and we have no doubt that if that connexion should be terminated by the general concentration we recommend being carried into effect, it will receive, in its interests at least, a full compensation by the increased demand for chambers from practitioners, who may be reasonably expected to cluster round the courts in its immediate neighbourhood from the city and the remoter parts of London.

12. Passing from the courts of equity to those of common law, we find that for the greater part of every term each court, besides sitting in Banc, has a single judge sitting at Nisi Prius at Westminster; and that after term each court has very commonly two separate courts of Nisi Prius sitting at the same time. Very commonly, too, each court, in order to dispose of arrears of the preceding term, sits in Banc after each term for a number of days, varying according to the requirements of business. These arrangements, in excess of the former sittings in Banc and at Nisi Prius, have become necessary, partly from the increase of business in the courts, partly from the effect of modern alterations by Parliament in the law and in legal procedure. Nor is there any reason to believe that the necessity for them will be temporary; rather it may be expected that the steady and rapid advance of the country in all material respects may make a still increased amount of accommodation desirable. Beyond all these, the sittings of the Courts of Error, and of the Court of Criminal Appeal, require, the first of them always, and the latter not unfrequently, a spacious court for several days after each term.

13. In order to supply these wants, the least that is required for each court is to provide it with two halls for the public administration of justice; the courts of error and criminal appeal require another spacious hall; and to each of these seven halls should be attached a convenient robing and withdrawing room for the judges. Even with these occasional inconvenience might occur for want of room. It should be remembered that the judges have not the whole vacation after term at their disposal for holding their sittings; the post-terminal Banc sittings, the sittings in error, and in the Court of Criminal Appeal, cannot be held, after the Nisi Prius sittings have ended at Westminster, and commenced at Guildhall, without the greatest inconvenience to the Bar, and risk of great injustice and reasonable dissatisfaction to the suitor. We state this amount of requirement not as all that might be desirable, but as that which, by arrangement among the judges, and with a view to the strictest economy, might be made tolerably well to serve the purpose. We say nothing, at present, of the offices which ought to be attached to each court; but it would be indispensable that there should be provided, simultaneously with the courts, robing-rooms for the Bar, an adequate number of consultation-rooms, and a reading-room; waiting-rooms for attorneys and for jurymen in attendance, a withdrawing-room for the jury impanelled to consider of their verdict, and two waiting-rooms for the witnesses in attendance for the respective parties in the cause before the court.

14. These being the necessary requirements, on the most limited scale, we are now to state what at present exists to satisfy them. The Court of Queen's Bench has its principal court, and a small one, intended originally for the taking of bail upon mesne process, and called the Bail Court. This latter court is, in respect of size, arrangement, lighting, and ventilation, wholly unsuited for trials by jury; so that until the necessity of providing for the Courts of Probate and Divorce, and the High Court of Admiralty, it had been usual for the judge to procure the permission of the Lord Chancellor to sit in his court, or some other Chancery court. The judges have a robing and retiring room, in which they also hear summonses occasionally, and a room for their clerks in attendance on them. The Court of Common Pleas has but one court, which was built at a time when the serjeants alone had audience in it, and the business, together with the attendance of the bar and the public, was very limited. It is now much too small for the convenient discharge of the business before the court. It has no second or Nisi Prius court; the Nisi Prius sittings in term have been held at the Westminster Sessions House, or in a parliamentary committee-room, or in a Chancery court, borrowed for the purpose. The Court of Exchequer has one large court, and for its Nisi Prius sittings in term, the Court of Exchequer Chamber—a court wholly inadequate in size for the purpose, and with its interior arrangements wholly unsuited to it; indeed, for every purpose to which it is applied, it is lamentably inconvenient. In respect of retiring rooms for the judges, and rooms for the clerks, these two courts are nearly on a footing with the Court of Queen's Bench, and all these are miserably unprovided in respect of accommodation for the bar, the attornies, the jurymen, the witnesses, and the suitors.

15. As regards the Courts of Divorce and Probate, and the High Court of Admiralty, we have already stated the temporary and very insufficient and precarious provision made for them.

16. It is clear, upon this statement, that apart from the question of concentration, and even supposing that in point of space room could be found at Lincoln's-inn for the accommodation of the courts of equity and their offices, and for the common law and other courts with their offices at Westminster, it would be necessary to incur very considerable expense in both places in order to give them respectively proper accommodation. It is difficult to convey in statement an adequate idea of the daily mischief which results from the scanty and inconvenient accommodation which the country at present affords for the great object of the central administration of justice; how much fatigue, bodily ailment, dissatisfaction are created by it; how much the course of business is delayed, impeded, diverted by it; nor how, in a great number of ways, it is rendered more costly.

17. We have thought it right thus in detail to lay before your Majesty the various grounds on which we are induced to recommend a concentration of the courts. Our next consideration was the place in which they should be brought together. Three only have been presented to our notice—1. Westminster; 2. A portion of the interior of the square of Lincoln's-inn-fields; and, 3. A site bounded, to speak generally, by Carey-street on the north, Pickett-street and the Strand on the south, Bell-yard on the east, and Clement's-inn on the west. It is this last, to be described more fully hereafter, which we recommend for selection.

18. For the first site may be urged the influence of very old and venerable associations, to the value of which we are by no means insensible; the convenience of its neighbourhood to the two Houses of Parliament, many of the public offices, and the Privy Council; the advantage of Westminster Hall as a place of common resort for suitors; and its nearness to the river, making it easy of access even from the city. It must be admitted, too, that by removing the courts and the general administration of the law from Westminster, we so far break in on the principle of concentration, as we thereby make the separation more complete between those members of the Bar and those attornies and solicitors who practise in the House of Lords, the parliamentary committees, and before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and the rest of the Profession. These courts, if for the present purpose we may so call them, were not included in your Majesty's commission; but we have not overlooked any of these considerations; they seem, however, to be conclusively outweighed by two on the other side—the first, that by bringing all the courts and their offices to Westminster, we should re-create, as regards the lawyers who practise in equity, and perpetuate, as regards those who practise at common law, and also as regards the main body of London attornies and solicitors, the very serious inconvenience of separation from their chambers and offices; the second, the entire want of such space at Westminster, contiguous or even near to Westminster Hall, as would be necessary for the purpose. Nor do we think it at all desirable, with the experience of the present courts, and of the committee-rooms of the two Houses, to place the new buildings on ground so low and in such close vicinity to the river.

19. The second site was recommended to us by Mr. Harvey Gem, a gentleman who professed, and we have no reason to doubt correctly, to represent a large proportion of the proprietors of houses in Lincoln's-inn-fields. He proposed to give a site, not exceeding four acres, in the garden of the square, on condition that the Government should expend the sum of 360,000*l.*, which he considered to be the cost of an adequate site elsewhere, in making certain improved approaches to the square. These, he thought, it would at present be desirable, and at no distant period necessary, on public grounds, to make; and that, by making them, all objections on sanitary grounds to the covering with building the present open space would be obviated. The square, measuring from the fronts of the houses, is stated to contain nearly twelve acres. Mr. Gem's plan was to allow three acres for the site of the courts, and five for a public garden on the north and south of them. This space, however, even if an acre more were deducted from the garden and added to the building ground, would not suffice for the buildings which will be found necessary to include all the offices and the depository for wills; if as much were taken from the interior of the square as would be necessary for these purposes, which we have reason to believe would be strongly objected to by the occupiers of the buildings and houses round, we are certain that the sanitary objection might with justice be urged; and the remedy suggested by Mr. Gem is too uncertain and remote for us to found our recommendation upon it.

20. We have, therefore, been brought to the consideration of the remaining site. In favour of this we have the concurrent testimony of witnesses from every branch of the Profession. It is so near to Lincoln's-inn-fields, that, as to actual convenience of position, little difference exists between the two, but that little is in favour of this last; it has, as regards the metropolis, the great benefit of being a substitution for a neighbourhood of close and ill-built streets, badly ventilated and drained, and, in respect of part at least, very disreputably inhabited; it is large enough for the purpose required, and the quantity of ground to be taken may be more or less, according as the details of the building may require a greater or less area; all sanitary considerations are in its favour; it will at once have a good frontage towards the south; and it labours under no greater difficulties in this respect, on the north and other quarters, than the site proposed by Mr. Gem. The intervention of Fleet-street and the Strand, with their traffic entirely disproportionate to their width, must create a difficulty in either plan as to the communication from the Temple. It has been proposed to remedy this by a glazed viaduct over Fleet-street, or a tunnel under it. Neither of these plans is free from inconvenience, it must be admitted; but we apprehend that no plan entirely free could be suggested; and the inconvenience to be submitted to must, after all, be weighed against that which the occupiers of chambers in the Temple labour under at present.

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT.

In the course of the last three years corporal punishment has been inflicted in 852 instances in the prisons of England and Wales. Sometimes this punishment is inflicted by order of courts of justice, at the assizes and sessions, chiefly for stealing, but occasionally, and not inappropriately, for other offences—such as assault with intent to commit a rape, and repeated desertion of wife and family, leaving them chargeable to the parish.

At other times the whipping is by order of the visiting justices for prison offences, which, besides insubordination and refusal to work, include such cases as attempts at suicide, breaking up all the cell furniture and setting fire to it, assaulting an officer and threatening to murder him. In most cases the punishment consists in a few lashes administered to a lad under age, but occasionally older men are whipped, and for serious offences the number extends to three or four dozen with the cat. In Dorset county prison it is stated that men of twenty, thirty-three, forty-six, and even one of fifty-three were flogged on the bare breech. These punishments were inflicted privately, but sometimes other prisoners are present for the sake of warning. In some of the cases where the whipping has been ordered by visiting justices the offence is but vaguely described in the return as "idleness," and in one case "sleeping in the open air." In Tiverton gaol all the whippings were before the mayor. The rod seems to be most required in the north. During the three years the visiting justices have applied it to 84 prisoners in the New Bailey, Salford, and to 37 in the city gaol, Manchester; the quarter sessions to 58 in Walton borough gaol; and the petty sessions to 96 in the borough prison of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Altogether 190 men and lads were flogged in Lancashire, 99 in Northumberland, 78 in Staffordshire, 48 in Cheshire; in Yorkshire but 15; in Middlesex, Surrey, and Kent, together, 131; in Berks, Derbyshire, Dorset, Suffolk, and Worcestershire, only 5 each; in Durham, Gloucestershire, Essex, Notts, and Warwickshire, 4 each; in Beds, Bucks, Hants, and Westmoreland, 2; in Herefordshire and Cambridgeshire, 1; in Cumberland and Monmouthshire, none. The differences are remarkable. In Scotland there have been about 150 juvenile offenders whipped by order of courts of justice; and in Edinburgh and Glasgow the magistrates have power to direct corporal punishment of such persons, "and this is frequently done." In Ireland the courts of assize and quarter sessions ordered 42 lads to be flogged in 1857, 13 in 1858, and 8 in 1859.—Times.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 11, 1880.

THE probable produce of this session, so far as the amendment of the law is concerned, is likely to be so infinitesimally small, that we may well be induced to speculate upon the causes which have led to such a result. However, much as we may regret some things which Parliament has failed to do, we may at the same time express our gratitude to it for some measures which it has effectually extinguished. These we will not attempt to particularise; they will be obvious to every person who has watched the course, or, more accurately speaking, the attempted course, of legislation during this session.

Political reform in the representation of the people has totally failed; but its success has been at least commensurate with its merits, and the earnestness by which it was pursued by the party who were brought into power to carry it into effect.

Alterations have doubtless been effected in our laws relating to finance; but the more they have been reconsidered by the people and the press, the less appears to be the favour in which they are held, and the greater the regret that Parliament, overpowered or misled by the specious eloquence of our financial orator, should have been induced to sanction "a gigantic innovation," the effects of which, calculated for the benefit of a small, though energetic, portion of our trading community, whose political support appears to be a marketable article, will fall with heavy pressure upon the industrial pursuits of other classes, and upon the nation at large.

One of the most interesting episodes in the session has been the rejection of the repeal of the paper duty by the House of Lords. It gave rise to most interesting debates in Parliament upon a most important question of constitutional law, viz. how far the House of Lords could deal with money bills. On this, as on many other questions of the same kind, our own laws are not settled with that logical precision to be found in the codes of other countries, where political freedom does not exist in an equal degree; but we, in order to solve such questions, must search for and refer to precedents, scattered during centuries over the ponderous tomes of our parliamentary annals. These, in our opinion, far exceed in importance and utility the more accurate articles and pretentious definitions of foreign codes. Our parliamentary precedents, however, require to be used with considerable care. Our constitution has been of slow growth, interrupted during some periods by irregularities, which should be avoided as landmarks, rather than followed as precedents. On the whole, the speech of our Premier, notwithstanding the reply of his refractory subordinate, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, contains a full exposition of our constitutional law upon this subject; and whatever may be the meaning or value of the resolutions of the House of Commons with regard to the conduct of the House of Lords in refusing to pass the bill effecting the repeal of the paper duties, we may, perhaps, consider it to be now settled, that although the House of Lords can neither originate or alter a money bill, they can refuse to pass one originating (as all such bills must originate) in the House of Commons, more especially if, when they do so, they disagree with the proposed measure more as a matter of policy than as a question of finance. Some persons may affect to believe that there is great danger in allowing such a power to the House of Peers; but the fact that it has been hitherto so rarely exercised is a pretty good guarantee that it will not be frequently used in future, and never except upon such occasions as the present, when the feelings of the people go with the votes of the Lords, and their veto is exercised, not for the purpose of disappointing the just expectations of the nation, but of correcting the mistakes of the rash and hasty legislation of the Commons—regretted, perhaps, by themselves, and disapproved of by the people whose interests and wishes they are sent to represent.

The fate of the measures for cheapening the transfer of land, whether by registration of titles or otherwise, have during this session met with the fate they deserve. They have appeared among the bills to be submitted to Parliament, but they have not served even as pegs upon which any member, ambitious of being thought a law reformer, could hang a plausible oration, which might meet with the temporary praise of those ignorant of the subject, and unsuspecting of the fallacies by which it was supported, but which would be open to immediate detection and exposure on the part of those whose knowledge of the laws of real property, and the true mode by which they may be improved, is not warped by the desire of gaining political notoriety, the pleasures of place.

The Bankruptcy Bill, though gallantly fought by the Attorney-General, came to an untimely end, partly through its own defects, (which, however, admitted of amendment), but above all by the delays interposed by the fruitless debates on the unfortunate Reform Bill, and the still more unfortunate measures of finance. All persons, we believe, who know anything about the working of the present Courts of Bankruptcy, are well aware how great are their defects, both administrative and judicial. These the Attorney-General's bill would, to a great extent, have remedied. Most persons, moreover, would have agreed to the principle of the bill, by which matters of insolvency and bankruptcy are brought under the jurisdiction of the same Court; but it was by a most unfortunate mistake that the test of insolvency in the case of non-traders was not separated by a broad line of distinction from that of traders. The two cases, in fact, admit of no comparison, and ought not, in legislating for them, to be put within the same category. Next session, should political power remain in the same hands, we hope the Attorney-General will again bring before Parliament the important subject of bankruptcy, and in the intervening period he will have sufficient time to cure the defects of the late bill. He has with him the best wishes of the mercantile part of the community, the persons most deeply interested in his success; and his colleagues, we may venture to express a wish, will not again keep in the background, or smother by undue delays, a measure so much and so long wanted.

When, or even before, another session comes, we may also venture to hope that the present Attorney-General will take some decisive steps with regard to the consolidation or expurgation of the statute-book. We are in favour of expurgation, not because we think it altogether the best mode of procedure, but because we think it the most feasible, and, indeed, necessarily a preliminary step to consolidation. Expurgation, moreover, might be proceeded with without the interposition of Parliament; and if it were undertaken with real earnestness, and by competent and real workers, they might at no very distant period lay before the country, in a few volumes, the whole of the real living statute law, omitting those acts of the Legislature which are either repealed, or are of a private or merely local character, and which, therefore, ought to be kept apart from those acts having a general and public operation. Another great work which the Attorney-General might, and we hope will, undertake, is a digest of the decisions of all our superior Courts. Spreading, as they do, over so many centuries, and filling so many hundred of volumes, and still increasing, they call for an official digest quite as much as the Roman law before the time of Justinian. These works are sufficient to satisfy the ambition of any man. The Attorney-General has long and ably expressed his wish to undertake them, and the modes by which they may be accomplished. The public expect much from him, and we believe he will not disappoint that expectation.

We have, however, already alluded to the delay of Parliament in passing really good measures. We think that this might be in a great measure cured if Parliament would hand over much of its private business either to Courts of law, or local and county assemblies. Some of the business transacted before committees, which waste so much of the time of the members, is of a character almost ludicrously petty, and quite unworthy the attention of the Imperial Legislature. The working of the Settled Estates Acts and the Divorce Court shews how advantageously some of the private business may be delegated to our Courts, and we believe that much more might be quite as safely and beneficially given to properly constituted local assemblies. If this were done, many of the delays and shortcomings of Parliament in legislation would, we believe, be cured, especially if the speeches of those members whose eloquence exceeds their wisdom could, by any well-regulated rules, be restrained within moderate limits.

REGISTRY OF JUDGMENTS.

THE LAW OF PROPERTY AMENDMENT ACT, 23 & 24 VICT. c. 38, (JULY 23, 1860).

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—The first five clauses of the above act relate to judgments as they affect real property; and as there exists a general desire in the Profession to ascertain how the enactment will work in practice, I venture to offer a few suggestions that I trust may be of some little service.

To understand the subject, it is necessary to refer to the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13, which makes a judgment a charge on real property, both equitable and legal; and the 19th section provides, that a judgment shall not affect a purchaser, mortgagee, or creditor, as to lands, until registered. The 2 Vict. c. 11, s. 5, provides that judgments, although duly registered, shall not affect purchasers without notice more extensively than they would have done before the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110; and leaseholds under the old law were not affected until a writ of execution was in the hands of the sheriff.

The Law of Property Act, (23rd July, 1860), sect. 1, recites, that it is advisable to place freehold and copyhold estates on the same footing as leaseholds, and enacts that no judgment shall affect land, of whatever tenure, as to a purchaser or mortgagee, notwithstanding notice, until a writ of execution shall have been issued and registered, and such execution must be put in force within three calendar months from the time it was registered. Sect. 2 enacts, that, for the purpose of registration, a memorandum shall be left with the senior Master of the Court of Common Pleas, who is to register the particulars by the name of the person in whose behalf the judgment was registered.

These provisions are extended to the palatine courts, but not to Ireland.

Sect. 4 further provides that no judgment shall have any preference against heirs, executors, or administrators, in the administration of their ancestors' testators', or intestates' estates, unless at the death of the testator or intestate five years shall not have elapsed from the date of the registry or re-registry thereof.

Sect. 5 explains that the term "judgment" shall be taken to include registered decrees, orders of Courts of Bankruptcy, and other orders having the operation of a judgment.

It would, therefore, appear, that in future, to affect a purchaser or mortgagee of lands that can be taken in legal execution, it will be necessary to issue a writ of execution, and register such writ, which will remain a charge upon such land for three months. Whether at the end of three months such writ may be registered again is not quite clear, but the words of the act, that it is intended to protect purchasers "against delay in the execution of the writ," would seem to negative this suggestion.

But since the 1st section of this act refers only to purchasers and mortgagees, and not to creditors, a judgment registered under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, on which no writ of execution has been issued, will still give the judgment creditor preference over other creditors as to lands. And as sect. 13 of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, made a judgment a charge upon the debtor's equitable interest, as well as his legal interest, in lands, a registered judgment will still affect such interest. And now, by sect. 4 of the new act, a judgment must be registered in order to give it a preference against heirs, executors, and administrators, in the administration of their ancestors', testators', and intestates' estates.

The necessity, therefore, for registering the judgment is in no case removed, as the register of the writ of execution is to be connected with the register of the judgment, and the writ of execution to be indexed by the name of the person in whose behalf the judgment was registered.

The usual search also for judgments in the Common Pleas and the local registers must be continued; and should any judgment be discovered, the particulars must be taken, and a further search made for executions in the name of the person in whose behalf the judgment was registered. A search for execution only, in the name of the vendor, by a purchaser, would have been sufficient in many cases had it been provided that the execution should be registered, like the judgment, by the name of the person whose estate is intended to be affected. It is not easy to see why the execution should not have been so registered. But such not being the case, the search for judgments, as heretofore, must be continued, and a reference made to the execution-book in every case of a registered judgment being found. A purchaser of leasehold property should now in all cases search up to the last moment before the payment of the purchase money, as this act will enable him to ascertain whether he is affected by a fieri facias or other writ of execution.

It will be observed that the act is not retrospective. Judgments, therefore, entered up before the 23rd July, 1860, are still binding on a purchaser or mortgagee, although no execution be issued; and as many of these judgments will doubtless be re-registered, they will be binding upon future purchasers and mortgagees for many years to come. It would have been unjust to prior creditors to have made the provision act retrospectively, as judgments have been numerous taken, instead of mortgages, for economical reasons, and the total amount thus secured by judgments reaches many millions of money; indeed, it would have been but fair had the operation of this provision been deferred to the 1st January next, that the public might have had due notice, and a reasonable opportunity of becoming familiar with the enactment.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES PARK,
Registrar's Chief Clerk, Court of Common Pleas.

Serjeants'-inn, Aug. 3, 1860.

COUNTY COURT JUDGES.

We find the following in The Solicitors' Journal:—"Lord Brougham has taken up Mr. Roebuck's notion about the promotion of county court judges to seats on the Bench at Westminster Hall; and it is by no means unlikely that the topic may obtain some degree of popularity among professed law reformers. The Spectator has already written one of its characteristic articles in favour of the plan. The principal arguments, however, of the writer in that journal, as well as of Lord Brougham and Mr. Roebuck, are simple enough. Judges, they say, have hitherto been generally selected from among the leading advocates at the Bar; but judicial qualifications are very different from those of an advocate; and therefore the probability is, that a brilliant and successful advocate will not turn out a sound or useful judge. Thus they argue that the proposed change must be for the advantage of Westminster Hall. Their second argument, however, is of a different kind. 'The occasional selection,' says The Spectator, 'of a county court judge, a recorder, or even perhaps of a police magistrate, would cause all these minor appointments to be sought by the very best men, and would create a laudable ambition for promotion at the Bar and on the Bench.' In our present cursory allusion to the subject we shall only express a doubt—with all respect to the noble lord and the member of Parliament—whether, under the proposed system, we should, as a rule, surpass, in point of learning and judicial fitness, the judges who have hitherto presided in the superior courts of common law. Admitting the syllogism about the unfitness of advocates for judgeships to be unimpeachable, both in its premises and conclusion, there is no occasion at present, except such as there would be hereafter, to elevate Nial Prius advocates to the judicial bench. As to the laudable ambition for promotion which it is supposed is now wanting, but would be created by such occasional selection as has been mentioned, we are disposed to think that there is at present quite enough of 'ambition for promotion' both on the Bench and at the Bar; and, moreover, we are very much inclined to question whether the ambition among judges to obtain judicial promotion is in itself a quality altogether desirable, or that may not exist in too high a degree either for the dignity of the Bench or the advantage of the public. Until, therefore, some new reasons can be adduced in favour of the proposed change, it will not count us among the number of its adherents."

There certainly is much weight in these observations; still the suggestion of Mr. Roebuck is worthy of consideration both by the Legislature and Executive; and, indeed, a searching inquiry into the whole county court system of judicial appointment would not be amiss. The number of causes tried by those courts is now very great, the office of county court judge is daily rising in importance, and society at large has a deep interest in the qualifications of the persons by whom it is filled.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS

21. It remains for us to consider the further question referred to us by your Majesty, viz. whether there exist, or may be supplied, pecuniary means for providing a site or sites for the proposed courts and offices, and for erecting suitable buildings thereon.

22. We have humbly to report to your Majesty that there do exist funds, which, if they can with propriety be made available for the purpose, (as, for the reasons hereafter stated, we think they can), will be found amply sufficient to carry these important objects into complete effect, without imposing any—or, if any, only a moderate and temporary—burthen on the finances of the State.

23. The funds to which we allude may be classed under three heads, and may be shortly described as follows:—

(1). A sum of 1,291,629*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.* stock, (which will be hereafter referred to as Fund B.), constituting a portion, though a distinct and separate portion, of what is called the "Suits' Fund" of the Court of Chancery.

(2). A sum of 201,028*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.* stock, (which will be hereafter referred to as Fund D.), arising from the accumulation of surplus fees received from suitors in Chancery, and forming part of the fund known as the "Suits' Fee Fund."

(3). A sum of 88,254*l.* 5*s.* cash, standing to the credit of the Paymaster-General at the Bank of England, (which will hereafter be referred to as Fund E.), arising from the surplus fees received by the officers of the superior courts of common law.

24. We will proceed to explain the nature of these several funds.

And, first, as to the Suits' Fund.

It is the practice of the Court of Chancery, in the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction, upon the application of any party to a suit, to order the property which is the subject of dispute to be brought into court, and there retained until the rights of the litigant parties can be ascertained and determined. When money is thus brought into court, the suitors interested therein may apply to have it laid out in the purchase of stock, and upon such application—or, in some cases, in the exercise of its own discretion—the court directs the money to be so invested. The stock purchased on every such investment is placed to the account of the cause or matter to the credit of which the money invested was standing, and the risk of the investment is borne by the parties to whom the fund may ultimately be adjudged to belong, the intermediate interest being from time to time accumulated, or otherwise disposed of, for the benefit of the parties interested, as the court may direct. At the date of the last return (1st October, 1859) the securities thus placed under the control of the court amounted to no less a sum than 47,040,885*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.*, the greater portion of which was invested in 3*l.* per Cent. Consols; and the whole of this large sum, income as well as capital, is the absolute and exclusive property of the particular suitors by whom the original payments into court were made, or to whom, on the termination of each cause or proceeding, it may be judicially decreed to belong. With this fund, it must be clearly understood, we do not in any way seek to interfere.

25. But it frequently happens that money is brought into court, and the parties interested therein—either anticipating a speedy termination of their litigation, and not choosing to incur the risk of a fall in the funds, or for some other reason, or, it may be, from mere forgetfulness—decline or neglect to apply to the court to have the same laid out and invested. In all such cases the money, as between the suitors and the court, remains in the hands of the court as so much cash, and, at the termination of the litigation, the exact sum so brought in is paid out to the successful party, without increase or diminution.

26. Under the provisions, however, of various acts of Parliament, to which we shall presently advert, the Lord Chancellor is empowered from time to time to invest in stock, not the particular sums brought in by particular suitors, but such portion of the floating balance of suitors' cash lying unemployable in the Bank of England as exceeds what may be required to answer current demands; in the same manner that a banker employs the surplus balances, not of each particular customer, but of his customers generally, in discounting bills, or in other modes of investment. And just as the profit arising from such investments belongs to the banker, and not to his customer, who can claim no more than the precise sum of cash which he paid in, so, in regard to the investments above referred to, the successful suitor receives out of court exactly what was originally brought in, and is not entitled to participate in any profit which the court may have made by the employment of a portion of the general cash balances belonging to the entire body of suitors.

27. It will thus be seen that there are, in effect, two distinct funds under the control of the Court of Chancery belonging to the suitors of the court—one consisting of stock, the whole of which, income as well as capital, is the exclusive property of the suitors; the other consisting partly of stock and partly of cash, (but the whole of which, as between the suitors and the court, is treated as cash), the capital of which represents the money from time to time paid in by the suitors, and, to the extent of the money so paid in, belongs exclusively to them, but to the income or profit arising from the employment whereof such suitors can make no claim.

28. It is to the latter of these two funds, which is known as the Suits' Fund, and it is to this alone, that the following observations are intended to apply.

29. The history of this fund, its origin, growth, and then condition, were stated with great accuracy, and in ample detail, by Mr. Parkinson, the then chief clerk of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, in the evidence given by him before the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Fees in Courts of Law and Equity, which will be found in the First Report of that Committee, ordered by the House to be printed on the 8th March, 1848. The substance of Mr. Parkinson's statements has been repeated by Mr. P. W. Rogers, one of the present registrars of the Court of Chancery, in the valuable evidence which he has given before us, and which will be found, with some explanatory documents, in the minutes of evidence and the Appendix annexed to this our Report. Its general purport and effect may be stated as follows:—

30. Prior to the year 1725 it was the practice to deposit all monies and effects of the suitors, which were ordered to be brought into court, with the masters or usher of the court, by whom the monies deposited were employed for their own personal benefit, the advantage arising from such employment constituting, in fact, a portion of the profits of their respective offices. About that period, however, which was that of the South Sea bubble, it was discovered that several of the Masters were defaulters, and were unable to make good to the suitors the monies which had been so deposited with them. These defaults became the subject of parliamentary inquiry and interference, and measures were promptly taken, both to indemnify the suitors whose property had been thus misappropriated, and to protect the public against the recurrence of similar abuses.

With this view, his Majesty King George I was pleased, upon the address of the House of Commons, to grant the fine of 30,000*l.*, which had been then recently imposed on Lord Chancellor Macclesfield, towards making up the deficiency in the Masters' accounts, and two acts of the Legislature were passed, the general effect of which we will proceed to state.

31. By the first of these acts, the 12 Geo. 1, c. 32, intituled "An Act for better securing the Monies and Effects of the Suitors of the Court of Chancery," &c., certain orders of the Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal and of the Lord Chancellor, which had been recently made, with reference to the deposit and custody of the property of the suitors, and the mode of keeping the accounts thereof, were confirmed, and directed to be thenceforward observed and kept, subject to such variation as the Court of Chancery should from time to time, and according to the exigency of circumstances, judge reasonable or proper. The act then proceeded to direct, that an officer should be appointed by the court, to be called the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, who should, as to the several regulations and directions prescribed in the said orders, stand in the place of the masters and usher of the court, and should do and perform all such matters and things relating to the delivery of the suitors' money and effects into, and the taking them out of, the Bank of England, and the keeping the accounts thereof, and all other matters relating thereto, as were by the said orders directed to be done by the said masters and usher. All securities then held by the masters and usher, in trust for the suitors of the court, were directed by the act to be transferred to the Accountant-General, and all securities to be thereafter taken were also to be taken in his name.

32. By the second of these acts, the 12 Geo. 1, c. 33, intituled "An Act for Relief of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," after reciting that certain Masters of the court had been deficient in answering the money and effects of the suitors ordered by the court to be deposited in their hands; that after realising and bringing to account the private estates and effects of the deficient Masters, and applying Lord Macclesfield's fine of 30,000*l.*, given by his Majesty on the address of the House of Commons, towards the relief of the said suitors, with the interest thereon, there would be a computed deficiency of 51,851*l.* 19*s.* 11*d.*, besides several other claims then in course of examination; and that the Commons of Great Britain were desirous to relieve the distressed suitors of the court, and for that purpose, to make a sufficient provision for the payment of all their just demands; it was enacted, that from and after the 2nd August, 1726, and thenceforward during the term of sixteen years, there should be levied and raised throughout England and Wales, and the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, over and above all then existing rates and duties, the several and respective rates, duties, and charges therein specified, upon all writs and other processes issuing out of any of the courts at Westminster, Courts of Great Sessions in Wales, courts in counties palatine, or in any other courts whatsoever holding plea where the debt or damage amounted to 40*s.* or upwards, and upon all entries of action in the Mayor's and Sheriff's Courts of London, and in courts in all corporations, and upon all citations or monitions made in any ecclesiastical court. The officers concerned in the collection of these duties were to keep separate and distinct accounts thereof, and to pay the same weekly into the Bank of England, where books were to be kept, in which all monies received for such duties were to be entered, "apart and distinct from all other monies paid or payable on account of the suitors," and which monies, when so received, were to be and be considered "as part of the general and common cash of the Court of Chancery," and, as such, to be issued and applied for the payment of the respective demands of the suitors thereof, as the court should direct. The court was also empowered to borrow money, to the extent of 60,000*l.*, on the credit of these duties, in case it should judge such a step to be necessary for the payment of the demands of the suitors, the money borrowed being paid into the Bank, and made part of the general and common cash of the court, for the benefit of the said suitors.

33. The act further provided, that in order that no suitor might be delayed in payment of any money due to him, but that every one might receive his full demand, whensoever he should apply for the same, in the most easy and expeditious way, all the cash then, or which might thereafter be, deposited in the Bank on account of the suitors, and all monies arising from the duties thereby imposed, or borrowed thereon, and paid into the Bank, should be, and be accounted and taken to be, one common and general cash, and should be promiscuously issued, when and as the court should direct, for answering and paying the debts and demands of any of the said suitors.

34. And further the act provided, that when and so soon as the deficiency of the suitors' money intended to be answered and paid out of the fund thereby established, and also all monies lent on the credit of the act, should have been fully paid and satisfied, the surplus monies which should have been raised out of the said duties should from thenceforth be reserved for the benefit of the public, and should be applied to such uses only as should be thereafter decided by Parliament.

35. In the year 1736 another act was passed, (which, however, is not referred to in Mr. Parkinson's statement), the 9 Geo. 2, c. 32, intituled "An Act for continuing, for the Purposes therein mentioned, the additional Duties upon Stamped Vellum, Parchment, and Paper laid by an Act passed in the twelfth Year of his late Majesty King George I." From the recitals in this act, it appears that the deficiency in the Masters' offices, which had been computed at the sum of 51,851*l.* 19*s.* 11*d.*, had, in fact, amounted to the sum of 103,635*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.*; that Lord Macclesfield's fine, with the interest thereon, had produced the sum of 39,834*l.* 16*s.* 7*d.*; and that there had been raised and collected, by means of the duties imposed by the before-mentioned act, from the 2nd August, 1726, to the 3rd March, 1735, the sum of 38,980*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.*, making, with the said sum of 39,834*l.* 16*s.* 7*d.*, the sum of 78,743*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.*, which, being deducted from the before-mentioned sum of 103,635*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.*, reduced the deficiency standing out in the offices of the said Masters on the 8th March, 1735, to the sum of 24,891*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.* The act further recited that a sum of 11,485*l.* 4*s.* 5*d.* had been found due from Master Bennett, another of the Masters of the court, to the assignees of a bankrupt estate, which debt he had no means of satisfying, and in respect of which the creditors of the bankrupt might reasonably, and within the spirit and meaning of the former act, be entitled to such and the like relief as was thereby given to the other suitors of the court. It also recited that the duties granted by the said former act would not, as it was computed, be sufficient to raise both the outstanding deficiency of 24,891*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.*, before referred to, and also the said additional sum of 11,485*l.* 4*s.* 5*d.*, unless such duties were further continued, and the time for raising the same enlarged. It was accordingly by the said act enacted, that the sum of 11,485*l.* 4*s.* 5*d.* should be raised by continuing the said duties for a further term of four years, to be computed from the 2nd August, 1742; that out of the before-mentioned sum of 38,980*l.* 19*s.* 9*d.*, which had already arisen from the said duties, there should be placed to the account of the said bankrupt estate, in the books of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery and of the Bank, the sum of 11,485*l.*

4s. 5d., and that the same should be issued and paid, out of the general and common cash of the suitors in the Bank, as the court should direct, in satisfaction of the before-mentioned debt. The act also contained a provision similar to that contained in the former act, that when and so soon as the deficiency of the suitors' money, and all money, if any, borrowed on the credit of the duties, should have been fully satisfied, all surplus monies which should thenceforth have been raised by means of the said duties should be reserved for the benefit of the public, and be applied as Parliament might thereafter direct.

36. All these accounts were finally made up, balanced, and closed, by an order of the Lord Chancellor, dated the 19th January, 1749, of which a copy will be found in the Appendix. From this order it appears that the separate deficiencies of the four defaulting Masters had been ultimately found to amount to the aggregate sum of 100,871l. 6s. 3d.; that Lord Macclesfield's fine, for which a separate account had been opened in the books of the court, with the interest thereon, had produced the sum of 51,360l. 8s. 11d.; and that the rates and duties imposed by the before-mentioned acts, for which a like separate account had been opened and kept, had produced the sum of 63,081l. 9s., (over and above the sum of 11,485l. 4s. 5d. which, in pursuance of the last of those acts, had been applied in discharge of Master Bennett's debts). These two sums, which amounted together to 114,441l. 17s. 11d., were sufficient to satisfy the Masters' deficiencies, and to leave a surplus of 13,570l. 11s. 8d. The order, therefore, directed that the whole of Lord Macclesfield's fine and interest, and the sum of 49,510l. 17s. 4d., part of the produce of the rates and duties, should be carried over to the Masters' General Deficiency Account, which was thereby balanced, and that the several accounts in question, so far as related to the deficiencies of the Masters, should be closed.

37. The surplus of 13,570l. 11s. 8d., which thus remained, was disposed of by an act of the 23 Geo. 2, c. 25, intituled "An Act for making good a Deficiency upon the Revenue of the Office Keeper or Clerk of the Hanaper, and for preventing any future Deficiency therein to answer the Public Services provided for out of the same; and for augmenting the Income of the Master or Keeper of the Rolls," (which is also left unnoticed in Mr. Parkinson's statement). After reciting the acts of the 12 Geo. 1 and 9 Geo. 2, by which the rates and duties were imposed and continued, and that, after satisfying the deficiencies of the Masters, the above-mentioned surplus of 13,698l. 1s. 11d. remained unapplied, and subject to the disposition of Parliament, the act proceeds to state the sources from which the income or revenue of the ancient office of Keeper or Clerk of the Hanaper in Chancery was derived; that such income was in its nature uncertain and contingent, and had been for several years insufficient to provide the various fees, salaries, and disbursements which were payable thereout; and that there was then due and in arrear to the persons entitled thereto the sum of 10,590l. 12s. 11d., which, as the ancient revenue of the office would in all probability continue to be deficient, would be lost, while the services to which the same were for the future to be applied would remain unprovided for. The act further recites that the revenue belonging to the office of Master of the Rolls was not adequate to the trouble, dignity, and importance of the office; and it then proceeds to enact, that out of the before-mentioned unapplied surplus of 13,698l. 1s. 11d., then remaining in the Bank of England, 10,590l. 12s. 11d. should be paid to the creditors of the Hanaper Office as the Court of Chancery should direct, and that the residue should be placed out at interest in Government securities, the dividends whereof should be paid to the Clerk of the Hanaper; that the rates and duties imposed by the former acts, which had expired in the month of August, 1746, should be revived as from the 24th June, 1750, and made perpetual; and that from the produce thereof 3000l. should be paid yearly to the Clerk of the Hanaper as part of the ordinary income and revenue of his office, out of which he was to pay to the Master of the Rolls for the time being the yearly sum of 1200l.

38. We have entered thus minutely into the provisions of these several statutes because they appear to us to have an important bearing on the main question submitted for our consideration. We shall proceed to trace the subsequent history of the funds now in question, referring for the details to the statement of Mr. Parkinson, before mentioned, of which an ample summary is given in the evidence of Mr. Rogers, annexed to this our Report.

39. It was found that the fees authorised to be taken in the office of the Accountant-General were disproportionate and unequal, and in small transactions a great burthen to the suitors. It was also found, that as all monies paid into court by the suitors, as well as those arising from the rates and duties before mentioned, were required to be accounted and taken as one common and general fund, and to be promiscuously used to answer the demands of the suitors, there had always been a large accumulation of suitors' cash lying dead and unemployed in the Bank of England. In the year 1739, therefore, an act was passed, (the 12 Geo. 2, c. 24), by which the Court of Chancery was authorised to lay out in Government securities a sum not exceeding 35,000l., part of the then unemployed cash balance, and out of the interest arising from the investment certain fixed salaries were to be paid to the Accountant-General and his clerks, in lieu of fees, the surplus interest being treated as part of the suitors' common and general cash.

40. Under the authority given by this act, and in pursuance of an order of the Court of Chancery of the 2nd July, 1739, (a copy of which will be found in the Appendix), the sum of 34,939l. 1s. 6d. cash was invested in the purchase of 36,850l. Exchequer Tallies, which in 1752 were exchanged for the same amount of Bank 3l. per Cent. Annuities. And this was, in fact, the foundation and commencement of that particular fund which bears the name of, and is known as, the "Suitors' Fund." To this we shall hereafter have occasion to refer as Fund A.

In 1749 the deficiency of the Masters was, as we have shewn, declared by the court to have been fully made up and satisfied, and on balancing the Accountant-General's books in October, 1749, and comparing the same with the books kept at the Bank, the amount of cash in court belonging to the suitors was found to be 196,545l. 4s. 11d., which was represented as follows:—

Balance of cash then in the Bank of England	£161,806	9	6
Invested in Exchequer Tallies, (under the 12 Geo. 2, c. 24), as above mentioned ..	34,939	1	6
	£196,545	4	11

41. As the business of the Court of Chancery increased with the expanding commerce and growing wealth of the country, so the balances of unemployed cash belonging to the suitors continued to accumulate in the Bank, and repeated investments were from time to time made in respect thereof. In each case the investment was specifically authorised by a separate act of the Legislature, and all the acts passed for the purpose are enumerated in the statements of Mr. Parkinson and Mr. Rogers, to which we have before referred. But in the year 1838 an act was passed, (the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 54), by which the Lord Chancellor was invested with a general authority from time to time to order the placing out on Government securities of such portions of the suitors' cash, lying dead and unemployed in the Bank, as he might judge to be expedient. Large investments have accordingly been made in pursuance of the said act, and in addition thereto, the act of the 5 Vict. c. 6, by which the equity jurisdiction of the Court of Exchequer was abolished, directed that all the funds which had been purchased out of the general cash belonging to the suitors of that court should be transferred to the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, and should be added to, and consolidated with, the funds held by him under the provisions of the various acts above referred to.

42. The general result of these operations has been, that the invested fund purchased with suitors' cash, which we have called Fund A., and which commenced in the year 1739 with the sum of 36,850*l.* stock, had, on the 1st October, 1859, reached the large amount of 2,613,360*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.* stock, purchased with the sum of 2,264,744*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.* cash. The dates and particulars of the several investments, by means of which this aggregate sum was made up, will be found in the accounts accompanying the valuable evidence of Mr. Parkinson, jun., given before us, from which it also appears, that on the 1st October, 1859, the amount of cash in court belonging to the suitors was 2,962,991*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*, which was made up as follows:—

Balance of cash then in the Bank of England	£668,947	1	11
Invested in stock as above .. .. .	2,264,744	1	10
	£2,962,991	3	9

43. Such is the history of Fund A., and with this, also, it must be clearly understood that we do not in any way propose to interfere.

44. We shall now proceed to explain the origin, progress, and present condition of that part of the Sutors' Fund to which we have already referred, and shall hereafter have frequent occasion to refer, as Fund B.

45. It will have been seen, that by the act 12 Geo. 2, c. 24, which we have treated as the commencement of the Sutors' Fund, the interest of the sum thereby directed to be invested was to be applied in payment of certain salaries to the Accountant-General and his clerks, and the residue of such interest was to constitute part of the common and general cash of the suitors. Similar provisions were contained in succeeding acts; that is to say, the income arising from the investments thereby directed to be made was to be applied to the augmentation of the salaries of the Masters and other existing officers of the court, or the payment of the salaries to new or additional officers thereby appointed, and the surplus income was to be added to the suitors' general cash.

46. In the year 1768, however, an act was passed, (the 9 Geo. 3, c. 19), by which it was directed, that as the interest of these various investments was more than sufficient to pay the salaries charged thereon, the surplus interest which had arisen and should thereafter arise therefrom, together with the interest of the securities to be purchased with such surplus interest, should from time to time be placed out on Government securities, the interest or annual produce of which should be carried, part thereof, to a distinct and separate surplus interest account, to be designated as therein mentioned, and the remainder to another like separate and distinct account, but with a different designation. For what purpose this separation of accounts was made is not very obvious, nor is it material to inquire, since by a subsequent act the two accounts were directed to be blended into one. It is sufficient to say that the directions of the act were carried into effect, and the surplus interest therein referred to from time to time duly invested in Government securities. And as we have described the act of the 12 Geo. 2, c. 24, as the commencement of Fund A., so this act of the 9 Geo. 3, c. 19, may be considered as the foundation of Fund B., which has been properly termed the "Profit or Accumulation Fund."

47. In the year 1774 an act was passed, (the 14 Geo. 3, c. 43), from the recitals in which it appears that the securities purchased with such surplus interest, and then standing to the credit of the respective accounts above referred to, (forming the Profit or Accumulation Fund), amounted together to the sum of 10,200*l.* Bank 3*l.* per Cents., which securities the act declared to be "unappropriated." This sum, together with the interest to arise from a sum of 50,000*l.* suitors' cash thereby directed to be invested on account of Fund A., and also the surplus interest thereafter to arise from any of the preceding investments made on account of the same fund, the act directed to be applied, under the orders of the Court of Chancery, towards rebuilding the Six Clerks Office, and purchasing ground and houses for the purpose, and erecting suitable offices for the Registrar and Accountant-General of the court. When the purposes of the act had been accomplished, the appropriation of funds thereby directed was to cease, and the surplus interest thenceforth to arise from the before-mentioned securities was to be from time to time invested as before, and the interest to be added to and accumulated with Fund B.

48. The provisions of this act were slightly varied by two acts of the 15 Geo. 3, one for vesting part of the garden of the Society of Lincoln's-inn in the Accountant-General and his successors, for the purpose of erecting thereon offices for him and for the registrar of the court; and the other for authorising the funds provided by the act of 1774 to be applied in building a new office for the Six Clerks in the gardens of Lincoln's-inn, instead of rebuilding the old office in Chancery-lane.

49. In 1777 another act was passed, (the 17 Geo. 3, c. 59), which dealt in a remarkable manner with Fund B. From the recitals in this act it appears that in consequence of the mode in which successive Masters of the Rolls had exercised the right of granting and renewing leases of certain portions of the Rolls estate, under leasing powers contained in an act of the 12 Car. 2, the beneficial interest in the improved rents thereof had become absolutely vested in the Master of the Rolls, by whom such leases were granted, and on his decease accrued to his family as part of his private property, to the exclusion of his successors in the office, by means whereof the income intended for the support of the office was rendered uncertain and precarious. It further appears therefrom, that Sir Thomas Sewell, the then Master of the Rolls, and the Earl of Macclesfield, as residuary legatee of Sir Thomas Clarke, the late Master, were respectively entitled to the beneficial interests in certain of the said improved rents, and that with a view to the power of granting leases for the future being properly regulated, and in order that the Master of the Rolls for the time being might not be deprived of so considerable a part of the income necessary to the support of the rank and dignity of his office, it had been proposed to them, and they had respectively agreed, to accept, as an equivalent for the relinquishment and surrender of their rights, sums amounting together to 21,029*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*, at which the same had been valued. The act further states, that the offices for the Registrar and Accountant-General had been erected and finished, and great progress had been made in erecting the offices for the Six Clerks, and that all the purposes of the three acts of the 14 & 15 Geo. 3, above referred to, had been in a great measure answered out of the funds thereby provided; that the surplus income arising from these funds amounted to 2682*l.* 18*s.* per annum, "which was unappropriated," except only as to what still remained to be raised thereout in order to complete the buildings in progress; and that it was computed that, in case the said sum of 21,029*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*

were borrowed on a mortgage of the Rolls estate, such mortgage might be discharged out of the said surplus income in about ten years, besides what might appear to be still wanting fully to answer the purposes of the acts of the 14 & 15 Geo. 3. It was therefore enacted, that out of the suitors' cash then lying dead and unemployed in the Bank of England the expenses of obtaining the act should be defrayed, and the said sum of 21,029*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* paid to the Earl of Macclesfield and Sir Thomas Sewell, in the proportions therein mentioned, in full satisfaction of their respective interests in the Rolls estate under the before-mentioned leases, which sum was to be considered as advanced on the security of, and was to be a charge by way of mortgage on, the said estate, but was to be repaid and discharged, and the said mortgage redeemed, out of the surplus interest before mentioned.

50. It appears by an order of the 25th August, 1794, (a copy of which will be found in the Appendix), that the whole of this sum was repaid and made good to the Sutors' Fund out of the surplus interest, and the account thereof was finally balanced. By a recent act (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 46) the Rolls estate has become vested in the Crown.

51. Various acts were subsequently passed, whereby charges of large amount were thrown on the surplus income arising from Funds A. and B. Thus, in 1792, the Lord Chancellor was authorised to expend a sum not exceeding 30,000*l.* out of such income in erecting new offices for the Masters in Chancery and their clerks, and for the secretaries of bankrupts and lunatics and their clerks, and fire-proof repositories for the records, &c. in the said offices, together with a public office for the suitors. Again: in 1810 a sum not exceeding 12,000*l.* was authorised to be taken out of the same surplus income, and applied in building offices for the examiners, cursitors, clerk of the Crown, and clerks of the Petty Bag of the Court of Chancery. In addition to these charges, provision was from time to time made from the same source for augmenting the salaries of the Masters, Registrars, and other officers, for paying the numerous additional clerks and others required by the continually-increasing business of the court in all its branches, for pensioning officers retiring after a certain duration of service, or incapacitated by any permanent infirmity, and for compensating the holders of abolished offices.

52. Notwithstanding, however, these numerous charges, Fund B. continued rapidly to increase. For many years the income of Fund A. alone was more than sufficient to answer all the charges thrown upon the income of both funds, and the surplus was annually transferred to Fund B., and invested and accumulated with the income arising from the latter fund. From the Appendix to the Chancery Commissioners' Report of 1826 it appears that Fund B. then amounted to 537,800*l.* stock. Mr. Parkinson, in his evidence before the committee of 1848, stated that it had then reached the sum of 1,094,604*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.* stock. And from the evidence of Mr. Rogers and Mr. Johnson, given before us, it appears that in 1852 it amounted to no less than 1,291,629*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.* stock, which had been purchased with cash amounting to 1,032,053*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.* At that date, (1852), however, the further accumulation of this fund wholly ceased by the operation of the act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, the 53rd section of which directed that the surplus income of Funds A. and B., after meeting the annual charges to which those funds were then respectively liable, should thenceforward be annually carried over, and added to the Sutors' Fee Fund Account, the nature and objects of which we shall presently explain. From the returns made by the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery for the years 1858 and 1859, (an abstract of which will be found in the Appendix to this our Report), it appears that such surplus income for the former year (1858) was 55,789*l.* 18*s.*, and for the latter year (1859) 51,825*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.*

53. Having entered thus fully into the history of the Sutors' Fund, we shall next proceed to explain the nature of the Sutors' Fee Fund.

54. By the act 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 94, commonly known as Lord Brougham's Chancery Regulation Act, extensive alterations were made in the proceedings and practice of the Court of Chancery. Amongst other things, the fees paid by suitors to certain officers of the court, and which had been theretofore retained by them for their own benefit, were directed to be thenceforward accounted for by such officers, and paid into the Bank of England, to the credit of an account to be there opened in the name of the Accountant-General, under the title of "The Sutors' Fee Fund Account," and which fund we will, for the present purpose, call Fund C. Out of this fund various salaries and compensation allowances were directed to be paid; and it was provided, that if, at the end of any year, there should be a surplus standing to the credit of the account after payment of such salaries, &c., the Lord Chancellor might order the same, or such part thereof as he should think fit, to be invested in Government securities in the name of the Accountant-General, to be placed to a separate account, to be intitled "Account of Monies placed out to provide for the Officers of the High Court of Chancery;" and might, in like manner, order the accruing dividends on such securities to be carried to the same account, and to be re-invested and accumulated therewith. This second fund we will, for the present purpose, call Fund D. On the other hand, in the event of there being at any time a deficiency in Fund C. for payment of the salaries and other expenses charged thereon, the Lord Chancellor was empowered to direct the Accountant-General from time to time to make good such deficiency, by resorting to the interest and dividends to arise from Fund D., or, in case of need, by a sale of a portion of the capital thereof; and further, in case the capital and interest of Fund D. should be at any time insufficient to meet any such deficiency, then the Lord Chancellor might direct the Accountant-General from time to time to resort to the income of the Sutors' Fund (Funds A. and B.) for the purpose of making good the deficiency.

55. For several years after the passing of this act there was a considerable annual surplus on the Sutors' Fee Fund Account, (Fund C.), arising from the excess of fees received from the suitors, and paid over to that account, beyond the charges thrown upon it, and this notwithstanding large reductions in the fees from time to time effected by successive orders of the court. This surplus was carried over to a separate account and invested, as directed by the act, and the sums so invested constitute Fund D., which consists of the sum of 201,028*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.* stock, and is the second of the three funds to which we have above referred as in our judgment properly available in aid of the erection of courts and offices.

56. In 1852 another act was passed, (the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87), intituled "An Act for the Relief of the Sutors of the High Court of Chancery." By this act fixed salaries were substituted for fees throughout all the offices of the court; the Lord Chancellor was empowered to vary, reduce, or abolish any of the existing fees payable in relation to the proceedings of the court, to substitute other fees in lieu thereof, and to direct that all fees should be collected by means of stamps, of which the Commissioners of Inland Revenue were to keep separate accounts, and to pay the monies received and collected in respect thereof into the Bank of England, to the credit of the Sutors' Fee Fund Account. The brokerage theretofore received by the Accountant-General was to be accounted for and paid by him to the credit of the same account, an additional salary being allowed to him in lieu thereof. Some offices were altogether abolished, and the emoluments of others reduced; and provision was made for giving compensation to the holders of such offices, which compensations, together with various superannuation and retiring allowances, were charged upon and directed to be paid out of the income of the Suitsors' Fund, viz. Funds A. and B. By the 53rd section of the act the surplus income arising from the two last-mentioned Funds A. and B. was no longer, as before, to be invested and accumulated, but was to be carried over to the Suitsors' Fee Fund Account (C.), and to become part thereof. And, lastly, it was provided that the annual surplus (if any) of Fund C. might be invested in Government securities, and added to Fund D., and that any deficiency in Fund C. might from time to time be made good out of the income or capital of Fund D.; but the power to supply such deficiency by a resort, in case of need, to the income of Funds A. and B. was not included in this, as it had been in the act of 1833.

57. Since the passing of this act no addition has or could have been made to Fund B., and no addition has, in fact, been made to Fund D. The surplus interest arising from the stocks and securities constituting the three Funds A., B., and D., has been from year to year carried over to Fund C., (which is entirely an income account); and the surplus of this latter fund has, to a considerable extent, been employed in the further reduction of fees of court, though there is still a surplus on the whole income, as we shall hereafter more particularly shew.

F. A. CARRINGTON, Esq.—We have to record the death of this gentleman. Mr. Carrington was called to the Bar in 1823. CHITTY'S COLLECTION of STATUTES of PRACTICAL UTILITY. With Notes thereon. Intended as a Circuit and Court Companion. The Second Edition. Containing all the Statutes of Practical Utility in the Civil and Criminal Administration of Justice to the Present Time. By W. N. WELSBY and EDWARD BEAVAN, Esqrs., Barristers at Law.

* In the debate on the proposed consolidation of the Statutes, on the 9th February, 1854, Lord Campbell said, "that the Statutes at Large extended to about fifty volumes folio, but all the Statutes which were usually required by lawyers for reference might be found in three octavo volumes compiled by his learned friend Mr. Welsby. When he (Lord Campbell) was upon the bench he always had this work by him, and no Statutes were ever referred to by the Bar which he could not find in it."

This important Work is continued annually, by an Edition of the Statutes, arranged on a similar plan, with a full Index, being published shortly after the close of each Session. Edited by E. BEAVAN, Esq. Five Supplements are now ready, containing the Statutes of 1854, price 9s. 6d.; 1855, price 9s. 6d.; 1856, price 6s.; 1857, price 10s. 6d.; and 1858, price 6s., sewed.

* The Supplements of 1854 to 1857 inclusive, with a General Index to the whole, can be had done up in one volume, cloth boards, (uniform with Chitty's Statutes), price 11. 16s. 6d.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 18, 1860.

THE case of Beatson v. Skene (6 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 790) is an important addition to our law of evidence. Before stating the points decided in it, it will be necessary to give an outline of the case itself. It was an action for slander. At the trial, before Bramwell, B., the slander was proved, and the defence was, that the words were spoken under circumstances which rendered them privileged. It appeared that during the Crimean war the plaintiff was appointed to the command of an irregular corps of cavalry called the "Bashi Bazouks," which command he retained until September, 1855; and that the defendant was a civil commissioner attached to the corps. General Vivian, who commanded in the place where that corps was, had directed Colonel Shirley to inquire into and report on its condition, referring him for information to the defendant, who was, by another letter from the General, directed to give it. In a written communication respecting the state of the corps made by Colonel Shirley to the General were some defamatory observations on the conduct of the plaintiff, and the defendant having adopted the responsibility of the contents of that letter, this action was brought. Mr. Sidney Herbert, the Secretary at War, was subpoenaed on the part of the plaintiff; and on his appearing was asked to produce certain letters written to him by the plaintiff, and also the minutes of a court of inquiry, which had sat to inquire into the conduct of Colonel Shirley in writing as he did to General Vivian. To this Mr. Sidney Herbert objected, saying it was essential to the public service that those documents should not be produced; to which the judge replied, "You represent her Majesty, and are the best judge of that. I shall not compel you to produce them." The jury having found a verdict for the defendant, a rule for a new trial was obtained, on the ground (among others, to which it is needless to refer) that the judge ought to have compelled the Secretary at War to produce those documents. This rule was argued, and, after time taken to consider, an elaborate judgment was delivered by the Lord Chief Baron in the name of the Court.

That State papers are privileged from production, when their production would be injurious to the public, may be taken as an elementary principle of law, and, we might add, of common sense also. It is a well-known maxim, that the law will allow injury to an individual sooner than a general inconvenience, and it is obvious that mischiefs to a private individual are as nothing when weighed against those that might result to the community from the disclosure of the contents of many kinds of State papers. But the great point in Beatson v. Skene was, by whom is the question, whether the production of a given State paper would or would not be injurious to the public, to be determined—should it be decided by the judge, or is he bound to take the word of the officer who has the custody of the document? And this point became of the more importance since the recent case of Dickson v. The Earl of Wilton, (1 Fost. & F. 419), where a clerk from the War Office, who was called on to produce a letter, having submitted, on behalf of the Secretary at War, whether it ought to be produced, Lord Campbell, C. J., said,

(without, however, argument, or even objection taken), "You must produce the letter."

Such being the question, the following principles are laid down in the judgment of the Exchequer in Beatson v. Skene:—

"We are of opinion that if the production of a State paper would be injurious to the public service, the general public interest must be considered paramount to the individual interest of a suitor in a court of justice; and the question then arises, how is this to be determined? It is manifest it must be determined either by the presiding judge, or by the responsible servant of the Crown in whose custody the paper is. The judge would be unable to determine it without ascertaining what the document was, and why the publication of it would be injurious to the public service—an inquiry which cannot take place in private, and which, taking place in public, may do all the mischief which it is purposed to guard against.

"It appears to us, therefore, that the question, whether the production of the document would be injurious to the public service, must be determined, not by the judge, but by the head of the department having the custody of the paper; and if he is in attendance, and states that in his opinion the production of the document would be injurious to the public service, we think the judge ought not to compel the production of it. The administration of justice is only a part of the general conduct of the affairs of any state or nation, and, we think, is (with respect to the production or non-production of a State paper in a court of justice) subordinate to the general welfare of the community. If, indeed, the head of the department does not attend personally to say that the production will be injurious, but sends the document, to be produced or not, as the judge may think proper; or, as was the case in Dickson v. The Earl of Wilton, before Lord Campbell, (reported 1 Fost. & F. 419), where a subordinate was sent with the document, with instructions to object, but nothing more, the case may be different."

This judgment is not, however, quite an unanimous one, Martin, B., being of opinion that "whenver the judge is satisfied that the document may be made public without prejudice to the public service, he ought to compel its production, notwithstanding the reluctance of the head of the department to produce it." On this the Lord Chief Baron remarks, in the general judgment of the Court—"Perhaps cases might arise where the matter would be so clear that the judge might well ask for the document, in spite of some official scruples as to producing it; but this must be considered rather as an extreme case; and extreme cases throw very little light on the practical rules of life."

In consequence of this discrepancy of opinion on the Bench, Beatson v. Skene, although throwing much light on the law on this important subject, can scarcely be said to have settled it; and, indeed, it is one not very easy to settle. Some assistance may, perhaps, be derived from the authorities on a somewhat similar and equally unsettled point; which was not, however, attended to in that case. It is a well-known principle of law, that no person shall be compelled to answer any question the answering which has a tendency to expose him either to a criminal prosecution, or to proceedings for a penalty, or a forfeiture; but when a particular question is put to a party to a suit, or a witness, who is to determine whether the question has that tendency? Some eminent judges have said, that if the witness will pledge his oath to that effect, the Court is bound by it, and must disallow the question. Others deny this; and, indeed, it is obvious, that to adopt such a rule in its integrity would supply an unprincipled witness with the means of evading the giving any evidence whatever. In one case on this subject, (Adams v. Lloyd, 3 H. & Norm. 361; 4 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 590), Pollock, C. B., suggested an intermediate course, holding that the statement on oath of the witness ought to be accepted, "unless the judge is perfectly certain that the witness is trifling with the authority of the Court, and availing himself of the rule of law to keep back the truth, having, in reality, no ground whatever for claiming the privilege." This seems much the view taken of the other question in Beatson v. Skene, and it seems near the truth. We should, however, suggest this addition—"or if the judge is certain that the scruples of the witness are unfounded in fact, as being the offspring either of ignorance of law, or the result of idle terror and misapprehension."

The Court also decided, in Beatson v. Skene, that "when once a confidential relation is established between two persons with regard to an inquiry of a private nature, whatever takes place between them relevant to the same subject, though at a time and place different from those at which the confidential relation began, may be entitled to protection as well as what passed at the original interview; and it is a question for the jury whether any further conversation on the same subject, though apparently casual and voluntary, does not take place under the influence of the confidential relation already established between them, and is therefore entitled to the same protection."

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS

58. From the evidence of Mr. Rogers and Mr. Johnson, and from the annual returns made by the Accountant-General, and laid before Parliament, for the years ending the 1st October, 1858 and 1859, (of which an abstract will be found in Appendix D.), the following appears to be the state of these respective funds:—

FUNDS A. AND B.—1858.

Total income, including balance of cash brought from preceding year .. ..	£137,788	9	10
Total payments, viz. salaries, pensions to retired officers, and miscellaneous charges £30,216 0 11
Compensations in respect of abolished offices, including terminable salaries .. ..	31,370	11	3
			61,566 19 9
Surplus .. ..			76,196 17 6
Of which was carried over to Fund C. ..			55,789 18 0
Leaving balance of cash to credit of account on the 1st October, 1858 .. ..			£20,406 19 8

Total income, including balance of 1858 ..	£185,636	1	8
Total payments, viz. salaries, &c. .. ..	£33,184	5	5
Compensations .. ..	30,724	4	11
	63,908	10	4

Surplus .. ..	71,727	11	4
Of which was carried to Fund C. .. ..	51,825	0	6

Balance of cash on the 1st October, 1859 ..	£19,902	10	10

FUND C.—1858.

Income.
Balance brought from preceding year ..	£68,510	5	3
Fees levied on suitors .. ..	101,969	5	8
Dividends of Fund D. .. ..	5,880	1	5
Brokerage paid over by Accountant-General	4,078	18	7

Brought over from Funds A. and B. ..	180,438	10	11
	55,788	6	0

Payments, viz.—
Salaries, rents, expenses of copying, and miscella- neous charges .. ..	£112,053	15	6
Compensations .. ..	44,162	14	2
	156,216	9	8

Balance of cash .. ..	£80,010	7	3
-----------------------	---------	---	---

1859.

Income.
Balance as above .. ..	£80,010	7	3
Fees from suitors .. ..	97,984	4	0
Dividends of Fund D. .. ..	5,905	4	0
Brokerage .. ..	4,646	1	3

Brought from Funds A. and B. .. ..	188,545	16	6
	51,825	0	6

Payments.
Salaries, &c. .. ..	£113,141	2	0
Compensations .. ..	43,672	1	4
	156,813	3	4

Balance of cash .. ..	£83,557	13	8
-----------------------	---------	----	---

Excluding the balances brought from pre- vious years, it seems that, in 1858, the total income of Fund C. from all sources (including the amount of cash brought over from Funds A. and B.) was ..	£167,718	11	8
And the total expenditure .. ..	156,216	9	8

Leaving a surplus income of .. ..	£11,500	2	0
-----------------------------------	---------	---	---

In the year 1858–9 there was some falling off in the fees received from suitors, a diminished transfer from Funds A. and B., and some increase in the payments for salaries, in consequence of which—

The income was only .. ..	£160,960	9	9
While the expenditure was .. ..	156,813	3	4

Thus reducing the surplus income to .. ..	£3,547	6	5
-------------------------------------------	--------	---	---

Again: treating all these funds as, for practical purposes, one entire fund, and excluding, as before, the balances of previous years—

The aggregate income for 1858 was ..	£223,486	7	9
--------------------------------------	----------	---	---

And the aggregate expenditure, viz.
Salaries, pensions, &c. .. ..	£142,269	18	5
Compensations .. ..	75,533	5	5
	217,803	1	10

Leaving a clear surplus income of .. ..	£8,683	5	11
-----------------------------------------	--------	---	----

While, owing to the circumstances above adverted to, in 1859—

The entire income was .. ..	£223,764	11	3
-----------------------------	----------	----	---

And the expenditure, viz.
Salaries, &c. .. ..	£146,325	7	5
Compensations .. ..	74,396	6	3
	220,721	13	8

The surplus of income being .. ..	£3,043	17	7
-----------------------------------	--------	----	---

59. It remains for us to explain the nature of the third fund to which we have above referred, as being in our judgment properly available for the proposed objects. It consists of a sum of 83,254*l.* 5*s.* 1*d.* cash, forming part of the public balances now standing to the credit of the Paymaster-General at the Bank of England, and wholly unappropriated.

60. From the evidence of Mr. Seton, it appears that, under the authority of certain recent acts of Parliament, an account of all fees received from suitors in the superior courts of law is annually rendered to the Treasury by the Masters and other officers of the several courts, and the net amount of such fees, after deducting certain rents, salaries, and other expenses incurred in the respective offices, is paid over to the Treasury. A separate account is kept of the monies so received, and of other payments subsequently made thereon by the Treasury, and the net surplus thereof is shewn by Mr. Seton to have amounted, on the average of the last six years, to upwards of 14,000*l.* per annum. The sum of 83,254*l.* 5*s.* 1*d.*, above referred to as Fund E., is the aggregate amount of such surplus from the year 1852 to the 1st January, 1860, and that sum now stands to the credit of an account called “The Fee Fund Account, Superior Courts of Law.” For the fund thus accumulated, and for the monies hereafter to be received from the same source, no appropriation whatever has hitherto been provided by Parliament.

61. We have felt it necessary to enter thus fully into the nature and history of these several funds, the mode in which they have been from time to time dealt with, the conditions under which they are held, and the charges and incumbrances to which they are respectively liable, because, without such a statement, it appeared to us that it would be impossible to arrive at any satisfactory conclusion on the practical question, whether they may, or may not, be made to supply the means of effecting the objects recommended in the earlier part of this our Report. To that question we shall now address ourselves; and in so doing our first inquiry will be, whether there is, in principle, any valid objection to the appropriation of these funds to the proposed objects; that is to say, whether such appropriation would involve the violation of the rights of property, or of any other existing right, legal, equitable, or moral? If it would, there is, of course, an end of the question, and the discussion of points of detail would be an idle waste of time and labour. If it would not, we may then fitly proceed to consider in what manner, to what extent, and subject to what conditions and limitations, those funds may, with your Majesty’s sanction, and by the aid and under the authority of Parliament, be made available for carrying into effect the contemplated scheme.

62. For all practical purposes, indeed, the scope of our inquiry may be in a great measure limited to the first of the three funds in question. Upon the applicability of the Profit or Accumulation Fund B. the controversy substantially turns; and unless that fund can with justice be so applied, it would be superfluous to prosecute the inquiry with regard to the remaining funds. In that case, our reply to the question which your Majesty has referred to us, as to the existence of adequate means for the accomplishment of the desired end, must necessarily be in the negative.

63. The first question, then, which we have to consider is, whether the appropriation of Fund B. in the mode proposed would involve the violation of any rights of property? A majority of us are clearly of opinion that it does not, for the following reasons*.

64. It has been submitted to us, that this Fund B. belongs to the suitors of the Court of Chancery; that it is, in truth, a part of their, the suitors' fund; that it has been produced entirely by the profitable employment of their money; and consequently, that if not as matter of strict legal right, yet upon principles of justice, and by analogy to the recognised doctrines of courts of equity, it should be considered as their property. In support of this view, it has been suggested that, as regards money paid into court in the course of litigation, the Court of Chancery stands towards the suitors in the same relation in which an ordinary trustee stands towards his cestui que trust; and that as a trustee having trust money in his hands, and employing it to a profit, must account for such profit to the cestui que trust, so the court must account to the suitors for the profit which it (the court) has made by the investment of the suitors' cash.

65. We are of opinion that there is no foundation for this argument, and that the supposed analogy on which it rests wholly fails. The Court of Chancery can, in no proper sense of the term, be considered in the light of a trustee for the suitors. It exists for the purpose of administering justice between litigants; and lest, whilst their rights are under investigation, the money which may be the subject of litigation should be wasted by the actual possessor, whose possession may ultimately turn out to be wrongful, the court orders it to be impounded, and placed in secure deposit, to abide the eventual decision. When so deposited, the parties themselves may apply to have it invested, and if they do, they bear the loss or take the profit of the investment, as the case may be. If they do not, the court (which, as regards the possession of the money, is in the position of a mere stakeholder) transfers the stake to the successful litigant, when the litigation is terminated, without diminution on the one hand, and without increase on the other.

66. Independently, however, of the question as to the position of the Court of Chancery as a trustee, it appears to us that the course of the preceding narrative furnishes in itself the most complete answer to any claim which could be put forward to Fund B. as being the property of the suitors. It is clear that previously to 1725 the suitors' cash deposited with the Masters of the court was employed by them for their own profit, and that the profit derived from that employment constituted a portion of their official remuneration. But when, in the year 1725, that state of things was put an end to, and the office of Accountant-General was created, the money of the suitors, not required to meet current demands, remained in the Bank of England (to use the language of the statutes) "dead and unemployed." The court had no power to employ it, or, except at the instance of the suitors themselves, to direct its investment. It was not until the year 1739 that the Legislature for the first time interfered, and (by the act of the 12 Geo. 2, c. 24) gave to the court a power for that purpose which it did not before possess, limited, however, to the specific and definite sum mentioned in the act. When that sum was invested the power of the court was exhausted, and the suitors' cash again accumulated in the coffers of the Bank of England, until a further power, similarly defined and limited, was given by a succeeding act. And thus, by a succession of statutes, extending over the period from 1739 to 1852, the Fund A., representing the suitors' invested cash, has been, as we have shewn, gradually formed. The formation of this fund, therefore, was not the act of the court, exercising its inherent functions for the benefit of the suitors, but was the result of special legislative interference; and although each separate investment was made by an order of the court, yet those orders were issued in pursuance only of a delegated authority, and for a specific and limited purpose.

67. But in what manner did the Legislature deal with the fruits of these investments? Did it direct that the income should follow the capital, and that the profit should belong to those by the employment of whose money such profit had been produced? Quite the reverse. It from time to time, and on the occasion of each investment, specially appropriated the income arising therefrom to such objects and purposes as appeared suitable to the particular exigencies of the moment. Thus, at one time the expenses of the Accountant-General's office were to be provided for; at another, the salaries of the Masters were to be increased; at another, new buildings were to be erected for the transaction of the varied business of the court; at another, pensions were to be given to incapacitated or retiring officers, and compensations to be provided for the holders of abolished offices; and in one remarkable instance, which has been specially noticed in the preceding narrative, the profits of the suitors' cash were employed, to the extent of 21,000*l.* and upwards, in making good to the income of the Rolls' estate the dilapidations which had been occasioned therein, either by the laxity of Parliament itself in the creation of leasing powers, or by the unscrupulous manner in which those powers had been exercised by successive Masters of the Rolls. And when all these various purposes had been answered, how did the Legislature deal with the surplus profit? Having from time to time declared the same to be "unappropriated," it directed this unappropriated income to be carried over to a distinct and separate account, and to form a new fund, the income of which was, in its turn, applied to similar purposes. Thus it is that Fund B. has been gradually formed, and this latter fund is as much the child and creature of legislation as Fund A., from which it was originally derived. It appears to us that these various dealings are entirely inconsistent with, nay, utterly destructive of, the theory that the profit made by the employment of the suitors' cash belongs to the suitors. They shew, on the contrary, that Parliament, by whose direct interference alone the profit was made, expressly reserved to itself the right of directing the mode in which it should be applied, and the purposes to which it should be from time to time appropriated. The profit was made, not by the Court of Chancery, but by Parliament, and Parliament determined for itself the purposes for which the same should be employed.

68. But further, as the fund in question is alleged to be the property of the suitors, we must proceed to inquire to what suitors it so belongs. The cash from time to time invested was not the cash of individual suitors, but such portion only of the general floating balance of suitors' cash, then lying dead and unemployed in the Bank of England, as was not required to answer current demands. The income arising from such investments was uniformly directed to constitute part of the "common and general cash of the suitors," and to be promiscuously used and applied to answer the purposes to which it was destined. All traces of individuality are therefore lost, and no suitor could point to, and as it were earmark, his own cash, and affirm that such cash had been the specific subject of investment and profit. It is in evidence before us that in 1826 Fund B. amounted to 537,800*l.* stock. This stock had been the produce of investments of the surplus interest of Fund A. made at antecedent periods, from 1739 downwards. Upon what principle, then, could the suitors of 1860 claim to participate in the profits made by the employment of the cash of other suitors prior to 1826? Between the year 1739 and the present time cash to the amount of some hundreds of millions has been paid into and drawn out of court by suitors, and yet during the whole of this long period not one single suitor has ever received anything beyond the cash actually paid into court, or has claimed any portion of the profit to which we are referring. It appears to us that this fact conclusively proves that such profit was never considered to be the property of the suitors, either by the court or by the suitors themselves.

60. But it has next been suggested to us, that although individual suitors may have no property in Fund B., and no right to interfere with its appropriation, yet that the collective body of suitors have just ground for objecting to its application to any purposes other than those by which they, as a body, are immediately benefited; and consequently, that the application of any portion of Fund B. to the erection of common-law courts and offices would be a violation of their equitable and moral rights and claims. This argument is rested upon two grounds—first, that the fund in question, having been derived exclusively from the monies of the suitors of the Court of Chancery, ought not to be employed except for the benefit of the suitors of that court; and, secondly, that Parliament having uniformly and exclusively dedicated the income, from the surplus of which the fund in question has arisen, to purposes connected with the Court of Chancery, has thereby impressed the fund with a species of trust, which would be violated by the application of any portion thereof otherwise than for the benefit of the suitors of the Court of Chancery.

70. We have given to this argument all the consideration to which the learning, character, and station of the eminent person by whom it has been propounded justly entitle it; but, after mature reflection, we find ourselves unable to concur therein.

71. In the first place, it appears to us to be founded upon a distinction between courts of equity and courts of law, for which there is, in our judgment, no just or solid foundation. We cannot but consider that all the courts, whether of law or of equity, including therein the Courts of Divorce and Probate, and the High Court of Admiralty, and all the branches of each court, whether judicial or administrative, form together one great system for administering justice, in which all the subjects of the realm have a common interest, and to which, therefore, any funds, from whatever source derived, if those funds are at the free disposal of Parliament, may be legitimately applied; and we think that this may be more confidently affirmed at a time when, as we have already observed, the tendency of legislation is to assimilate the courts of law and equity by an attribution to each of powers and functions hitherto exercised exclusively by one of them.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, AUGUST 25, 1860.

At the Spring Assizes of Durham, in the present year, a case arose involving a moot and rather difficult point in the law of evidence, which has attracted considerable public attention, and given rise to a bill in Parliament by Sir G. Bowyer. We allude to the case of Reg. v. Hay, where the question arose as to whether, and how far, a Roman Catholic clergyman is privileged from being compelled to disclose, in a court of justice, matters confided to him by a penitent in confession. It was said at the time that Hill, J., denied the existence of the privilege, and committed the priest for contempt of Court for refusing to make the disclosure. A report of the case has now appeared in the recently published part of the Reports of Messrs. Foster & Finlason, (Reg. v. Hay, 2 Fost. & F. 4), which puts the matter in a very different light, and the report is accompanied by a learned note by the latter gentleman. The case is as follows:—

William Hay was indicted for stealing a watch. An inspector of police stated, that from information he received he went to the house of the Rev. John Kelly, a Roman Catholic priest, from whom he received a watch, which the prosecutor identified as his. The Rev. Mr. Kelly was then called, and objected to take the oath, saying, "As a minister of the Catholic Church, I object to the part that states that I shall tell the whole truth." Hill, J., said—"The meaning of the oath is this: it is the whole truth touching the trial which you are asked—which you legitimately, according to law, can be asked. If anything is asked of you in the witness-box which the law says ought not to be asked, you would be entitled to say, 'I object to answer that question,' and the law would sustain the objection. You can, therefore, have no objection, as a loyal subject, and in duty to the laws of the country, to answer the whole truth touching the case which may be lawfully asked. Therefore you must be sworn." The witness was then sworn, and deposed that he received the watch produced; and on being asked from whom, answered, "I received it in connexion with the confessional."

His Lordship.—"You are not asked at present to disclose anything stated to you in the confessional; you are asked a simple fact—from whom did you receive that watch which you gave to the policeman?"

Witness.—"The reply to that question would implicate the person who gave me the watch; therefore I cannot answer it. If I answered it, my suspension for life would be a necessary consequence. I should be violating the laws of the church, as well as the natural laws."

His Lordship.—"I have already told you plainly I cannot enter into this question. All I can say is, you are bound to answer, 'From whom did you receive that watch?' On the ground I have stated to you, you are not asked to disclose anything that a penitent may have said to you in the confessional. That you are not asked to disclose; but you are asked to disclose from whom you received stolen property. Do you answer it, or do you not?"

Witness saying he really could not, was adjudged guilty of contempt of Court, and committed accordingly.

Previous to this case it was the common opinion that a confession to a clergyman of any denomination was not privileged from disclosure; for which several cases were usually relied on, especially Rees v. Gilham, (1 Moo. C. C. 186), which we cannot help thinking has been much misunderstood. With respect to Roman Catholic clergymen in particular, the right was expressly denied by the Irish Master of the Rolls in 1802, in a case of Butler v. Moore, (MacNally's Ev. 253). The authorities on this subject will be found in the treatises on Evidence. Now, in the case before us, Hill, J., draws a marked distinction between what is disclosed to the priest in confession, and any act done by or to him in consequence of that confession; holding the former privileged, but the latter not. As, however, Hill, J., does not assign any reasons for his decision, Mr. Finlason, in the note in question, proceeds to assign reasons for him, some of which seem sound, while others are open to much question.

Mr. Finlason begins by assuming, we believe rightly, that, previous to the Reformation, confessions to a priest were protected from disclosure, except perhaps when the matters disclosed amounted to high treason. This privilege, he contends, applied only to sacramental confession, accompanied by sacramental absolution. He then argues that the privilege, not having been taken away by any statute, necessarily subsists still, so far as regards clergymen of the Church of Rome, and also those of the Church of England. On this latter subject, however, it will be better to let him speak his own language:—"Although it is a common idea that the Church of England denies that confession is a sacrament, that is an error; for the answer in the Catechism as to the number of the sacraments, 'two only [as] generally necessary to salvation,' does not amount to a statement that there are only two sacraments; nor even that only two are ever necessary to salvation, but that only two are generally so. And it has been held, that, according to our law, marriage is a sacrament, (Richards v. Dovey, Willes, 622); and it seems, from some decisions, to follow that confirmation is so." We much regret that Mr. Finlason has not given these latter decisions; for the former part of the above sentence will not bear much examination. In Richards v. Dovey the question was, whether a custom, that every man inhabiting one parish, who marries by license in another, shall pay a fee to the rector of the first, as if the marriage had been solemnised there, is good. The Court, consisting of Willes, C. J., Abney, Burnett, and Birch, J.J., held that it was not; and Abney, J., says, "Marriage is a sacrament, and therefore no fee ought to be paid for it." For this proposition he refers to six authorities, the two first of which—Lyndw. Prov., and a canon, A.D. 1222—were before the Reformation; and the rest are as follows:—Anderson v. Walker, (Lutw. 1080), where a prohibition was awarded to the Ecclesiastical Court, in which a party was libelled for not paying a fee for baptism, according to an alleged custom in a certain parish; Toppeall v. Fervers, (Hob. 178), where it was held that a custom in a parish that a passenger dying there should pay burial fees there, though buried elsewhere, is void; Burdeaux v. Dr. Lancaster, (12 Mod. 171; 1 Salk. 332), where it was held that by the common law no fees are due for baptism; and The Dean and Chapter of Exeter's case, (1 Salk. 334), that by the common law no fees are due for burials—a frail foundation for the assertion that "it has been held that marriage is a sacrament;" and, indeed, to be consistent in their argument, Abney, J., and Mr. Finlason must contend that "burial" is so too. The language of the Church Catechism, to which Mr. Finlason refers, we should have thought sufficiently explicit on the subject; but the Twenty-fifth Article of the Church of England puts the matter beyond question, for it says, "There are two sacraments ordained of Christ our Lord in the Gospel; that is to say, Baptism and the Supper of the Lord. Those five commonly called sacraments—that is to say, Confirmation, Penance, Orders, Matrimony, and Extreme Unction—are not to be counted for sacraments of the Gospel." There are some other theological matters in this note, into which we deem it needless to enter.

If Mr. Finlason is right in his notion, that the privilege from disclosure arises solely from the sacramental character of the confession, it follows, as an inevitable consequence, that a confession to a dissenting minister of any persuasion is not protected; and where the confession is made to a clergyman of the Church of England, the Court, before deciding the question of privilege, must determine the theological one, whether confession in the Church of England is necessarily sacramental. For our own parts, without undertaking to say positively what the law is upon the general subject, we cannot help thinking that a good suggestion is to be found in the following provision in one of the statutes of New York:—"No minister of the Gospel, or priest of any denomination whatsoever, shall be allowed to disclose any confessions made to him in his professional character, in the course of discipline enjoined by the rules or practice of such denomination." It is a maxim of law—"Quando lex aliquid alicui concedit, concedere videtur et id sine quo res ipsa esse non potest." In early times, when no religion but the Roman Catholic was tolerated by law, it was only with respect to the ministers of that religion that questions of this nature could present themselves. But at the present day, when all forms of Christianity are tolerated by law, and it is a well-known principle of them all that there are cases in which the spiritual advice of a minister of religion may properly be sought, the above maxim indicates that it should be allowed freely, and with safety to both parties, without entering into a theological inquiry as to the consequences which, in the eye of that particular creed, may be supposed to follow from it.

In the latter part of his note Mr. Finlason refers to some analogous cases of privilege which seem to support the ruling of Hill, J. To these may be added, that it has frequently been held, that although, when a prisoner has made a confession after an illegal inducement to confess has been held out to him, the confession is inadmissible, yet any discovery made in consequence of that confession—e. g. the finding of stolen goods—is perfectly admissible.

The judgment of Hill, J., on the first objection made by the witness in Reg. v. Hay, is also worthy of notice, as it may serve to remove a difficulty with respect to the form of oath administered in our courts of justice which has frequently presented itself to the minds of well-intentioned, but ignorant or unreflecting persons. Such parties labour under the impression that the oath binds them to tell everything—all they know, have heard, believe, think, or conjecture—respecting the matters in dispute. Not so—it only requires that the "evidence" which they give "shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." Now, the question as to what is legal evidence is determined by the judge, not the witness, who is, therefore, only bound to speak the truth with relation to all matters which the judge adjudicates to be legal evidence in the cause.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—I venture to offer a few remarks on the article on the case of Turner v. Wright contained in your number of the 21st July, differing as I do from the conclusion to which the writer there arrives. I submit that, upon principle, a tenant in fee, with an executory devise over to another, cannot, in the absence of any intention to be gathered from the will, be restrained from committing waste other than equitable waste.

First, because the gift of the fee carries with it every power legally incident to it not expressly excluded by the donor. The donor must be deemed to be acquainted with the legal incidents of the estate conferred, and the use of the words of inheritance must be taken as equivalent to an express declaration of the intention of the donor to confer a power to commit waste.

It appears to me to be begging the question to argue that because the devisee cannot alien the land, therefore equity will interfere to prevent the alienation of the timber which is accessory to it. The same argument would prevent a tenant for life without impeachment of waste from exercising the power which those words confer, on the ground that the property was subsequently given over, with no variation in description, to the next taker.

Secondly, because, except in the case of equitable waste, which is on a different footing, equity has never interfered to restrain the exercise of the legal right. At law the action of waste lay only against tenants of particular estates, viz. tenants in dower by the curtesy, guardians, tenants for life and for years. Equity has interfered when, from technical grounds, as the intervention of an intermediate estate, the action could not be brought; but it has especially refrained from extending the nature of the relief, e. g. as in the case of permissive waste, (see Powys v. Blagrave, 2 De G., Mac., & G. 448), and it has refused to interfere in the case of persons holding other estates than those against whom the action lay, e. g. in the case of tenant in tail after the possibility of issue extinct. (Williams v. Williams, 15 Ves. 419; 12 East, 210).

The case of tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct is exactly analogous to the case in point; he cannot alien the lands, but the nature of his estate enables him to commit waste.

Equitable waste is defined to be destructive or malicious waste. The jurisdiction of equity in preventing waste of this kind does not depend only upon the existence of particular words implying the donor's intention that specified property, such as a mansion-house, should go over intact; though this is frequently a sufficient test. In cases where the description is perfectly general, and affords no specific indication of the intention, equity will interfere—e. g. to prevent the destruction of saplings, &c. It applies to cases for which the law affords no remedy at all; it is more analogous to the jurisdiction in the case of fraud, and proceeds on the assumption, that whatever legal rights the tenant in possession may possess, the donor could never have intended that he should deal with the property otherwise than as an absolute owner in the reasonable exercise of his powers could do.

That Lord Hardwicke was not quite accurate as to the jurisdiction of equity in cases of waste is shewn by the case of Parterich v. Poulett, (2 Atk. 383), in which a judgment of his, charging a tenant for life with permissive waste, was overruled; but neither in the case of Robinson v. Letton, nor in that before Lord Eldon, did the bare question which we are discussing call for a decision.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
Lincoln's Inn, Aug. 1. H. B. C.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS

72. If it could with justice be assumed that the fund in question had arisen exclusively from the profitable employment of the monies of the suitors of the Court of Chancery, yet, if it is not the property of those suitors, and cannot be claimed by them, we are unable to perceive on what reasonable grounds the discretion of Parliament should be fettered as to the mode of its future application. It has been justly observed by one of the witnesses examined before us, that the suitor in Chancery to-day may be a suitor at law tomorrow, and that next week, or next month, his property may become the subject of disposal by the Court of Probate. The due and proper maintenance of all the courts is, therefore, an object in which all suitors have a common interest. If the fund in question absolutely belongs to the suitors of one particular court, it cannot be alienated from them without a breach of the rights of property. If it does not belong to them, but is the mere child and creature of legislation, surely it is for Parliament, in its wisdom, from time to time to decide, in what manner, and for what purposes, it can be most usefully employed. It is true, that in times past this fund has been exclusively employed for the benefit of suitors in Chancery; but this may have been because the exigency of the moment rendered such an application thereof necessary or expedient. Circumstances, however, have now changed; new and varied exigencies have arisen; and the wants of the present day urgently call for a different appropriation.

73. The broad principle which we have thus stated—that is to say, the substantial identity of all the courts as component parts of one general system for the administration of justice—appears to us to have been emphatically asserted, and practically enforced and acted upon by Parliament, on several of the occasions which have been adverted to in the preceding narrative. Thus, when, in 1725, it was found that the money of the suitors of the Court of Chancery had been fraudulently misappropriated by certain Masters of that Court, in what manner, and at whose expense, were those suitors relieved? By the imposition of a tax, to which every suitor in a court of law, from the highest tribunals of the realm to the humblest court for the recovery of small debts, and every suitor in the courts ecclesiastical, was called upon to contribute. Again: when, in 1736, a further deficiency was discovered in the cash of the suitors in Chancery, caused by the fraudulent conduct of another of the Masters, the tax on the suitors at law and in the ecclesiastical courts was continued for a further term, in order to make good this deficiency. Once more: when, in 1749, it was found that the revenue of the office of Clerk of the Hanaper (an office exclusively belonging to the Court of Chancery) was insufficient to cover its expenses, and that the salaries and allowances payable out of such revenue were in arrear to the extent of more than 10,000*l.*, not only was the arrear discharged out of the surplus produce of the tax on the suitors in the common-law and ecclesiastical courts, but the tax was revived, and made perpetual, in order to provide a sufficient revenue for the future wants of the Hanaper Office, and at the same time to increase the income of the Master of the Rolls, which was considered to be “not adequate to the trouble, dignity, and importance” of this high office; and this tax continued to be levied until its abolition, in 1824, by the act 5 Geo. 4, c. 41. Thus, upon three separate occasions—when the suitors of the Court of Chancery were to be relieved, and their losses made good, when an important office of the court was to be maintained, and when the income of one of its highest judges was to be rendered adequate to the support of his dignity—Parliament deliberately called in aid the suitors of the courts of law and the ecclesiastical courts, and compelled them to contribute to the wants of the Court of Chancery. It is manifest that, except on the broad principle to which we have adverted, those suitors had not the remotest interest in the purposes to which their money was applied, and that neither individually nor collectively did they derive the slightest benefit from its application. If, nevertheless, it was consistent with justice that Parliament should take money directly from the pockets of the common-law suitors, and apply the money so taken for the exclusive benefit of suitors in Chancery, we are at a loss to perceive how it can involve the violation of justice for Parliament to apply a fund which, as we have shewn, does not, and never did, belong to the suitors in Chancery, and in which they can have at the utmost only a constructive interest, not for the exclusive advantage of any one class, but towards the furtherance of a general and comprehensive scheme, from which all suitors alike, whether at common law or in Chancery, will derive a common benefit.

74. But the theory which we have been considering involves two assumptions in matters of fact—first, that the fund with which we propose to deal (Fund B.) has arisen exclusively from a Chancery source, i. e. from the use of the monies of the suitors of the Court of Chancery; and, secondly, that those suitors will derive no benefit from the application of a portion of that fund to the erection of courts of law. To neither of these assumptions, however, can we give our assent.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 1, 1860.

In the case of Hoghton v. Houghton (15 Beav. 278, 321) an opinion is expressed which has given rise to much doubt in the Profession, and it may perhaps be useful to call attention to it, as, if it be unsound, the acting upon it seems likely to cause some practical mischief.

In the case above referred to, a deed settling family estates was set aside in equity, as having been obtained by undue influence, and was ordered to be delivered up to be cancelled. On the question being discussed whether a reconveyance of the legal estate was necessary, the Master of the Rolls said his impression was, that the deed, being by a competent Court declared void and cancelled, could not be afterwards set up or used in a court of law, and that a reconveyance was unnecessary. In the later case of The Attorney-General v. Magdalen College, Oxford, (18 Beav. 255), his Honor expressed his opinion to be, "that a deed which was delivered up to be cancelled, and which was marked 'cancelled' by this Court, put the parties in exactly the same situation as if no such deed had ever been executed." In Sugden v. Croftland, (3 Sm. & G. 192), Sir J. Stuart, V. C., expressed a similar opinion, and, as is stated in the report, (4 Weekly Rep. 343), on the authority of Hoghton v. Houghton. The view, therefore, has certainly a considerable amount of judicial authority in its favour.

We must own, however, that to us there appears considerable difficulty in supporting it. Though the jurisdiction of Courts of law and Courts of equity as to fraud is to some extent concurrent, the fields over which their actions extend are by no means co-extensive. If every fraud which made a deed void in equity necessarily made it void at law, there would be less ground for doubting the correctness of the view in question; for it might be urged, with much shew of reason, that where a competent Court had decided that such fraud existed as would make the deed void in any court, all other Courts must act upon that sentence. It is plain, however, that a deed is often set aside by Courts of equity on grounds which would not affect its validity at law; and we apprehend that the case of Hoghton v. Houghton itself is an instance of this. The decision of a Court of equity setting aside a deed, therefore, does not involve a decision, even assuming the Court to have jurisdiction to decide, that it is void at law. The Court does not declare that no legal estate passed by the deed, whatever the effect of such declaration if made would be.

We apprehend, indeed, that under the Common-law Procedure Act, the fact of a deed under which the plaintiff claims having been declared void in equity would in general be a good defence by way of equitable plea; but this does not remove the whole of the difficulty. The decree makes the plaintiff in equity the beneficial owner. It may prevent the possibility of the legal estate being used against him, but how does it give him that legal estate? The Master of the Rolls appears to consider that a Court of law would refuse to look at the deed after it had been cancelled by a Court of equity; that, in fact, it would be of no more avail in any court than a blank parchment for any purpose whatever. But can this be so? It is difficult to see how the cancellation of the deed can have such effect. A Court of equity acts in personam, and we can conceive that a cancellation by a Court of equity would have the same effect as if all the persons interested under the deed had been sui juris, and concurred in its cancellation; but we do not see how it can have more. Now, that effect, we apprehend, would be, that the deed, as regarded the covenants contained in it, would be at an end, but the legal estate would not be revested. Mr. Preston, in his note to Shep. Touch. 69, says, "As to deeds which pass an estate of freehold, it is now the settled rule of law, that no cancellation of the deed (Gilb. Eq. Cas. 285) can divest the estate." This, we believe, is in accordance with all the recent authorities; and the law was so laid down, without hesitation, by the Court of Exchequer in the very recent case of Lord Ward v. Lumley, (8 Weekly Rep. 184). Apart from the cancellation, the case must rest upon the declaration in the decree, that the deed is void in equity. Now, does that declaration amount to any more than this—that according to the principles of a Court of equity the deed has been improperly obtained, and that the equitable ownership is not affected by it? Except so far as the recent statutes have given a Court of equity power to transfer the legal estate, we apprehend it has no jurisdiction to do so. Assuming it to have jurisdiction to declare that a legal estate does not pass under an instrument, it is clear that in such a case as Hoghton v. Hoghton such a declaration could not be made, it being quite plain that the legal estate did pass. The declaration that the deed was void amounts, then, to a declaration, that, according to the principles of a Court of equity, the legal estate ought not to have been conveyed as it was; but how either this or the cancellation can enable a Court of law to shut its eyes to a deed which at law was originally valid, and to refuse to admit the legal estate to be where that deed placed it, we must, with all deference to the able judges who decided the cases above referred to, admit ourselves to be unable to see. The result which appears to follow from a decision that the legal estate has been improperly conveyed would seem to be, that it ought to be reconveyed. To rest upon the declaration and cancellation only, appears to us to be an unsafe application of the converse of the well-known maxim, that what ought to have been done shall be regarded as done. It appears to us a matter of regret that a rule of such a doubtful character should have been introduced and acted upon, when the Trustee Act of 1850, which applies to constructive trusts, appears in most cases to furnish a ready means of avoiding the question, without any additional expense.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS

APPOINTED TO INQUIRE INTO THE EXPEDIENCY OF BRINGING THE COURTS TOGETHER INTO ONE PLACE OR NEIGHBOURHOOD.

75. With regard, in the first place, to the fund itself, we have seen, that although the produce of the rates and duties imposed by the 12 Geo. 1, c. 33, was, in accordance with the provisions of the act, entered to a separate and distinct account in the books of the Bank of England, yet such produce was, in fact, blended with the other monies paid into the Bank on account of the suitors, and formed therewith one common and general fund, which was promiscuously used and applied towards answering their demands. The particular demands, to meet which the duties were imposed, were not finally ascertained until 1749; but in the meantime, viz. in July, 1739, the first investment of 35,000*l.* was made on Fund A., under the authority of stat. 12 Geo. 2, c. 24, to which we have before referred. The money thus invested was taken from the general balance of cash then lying dead and unemployed in the Bank; and as it is in evidence before us, that while, on the 1st October, 1738, the total balance of cash in the Bank, out of which that investment was made, was only 181,825*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*, there had been received up to that time, in respect of the duties in question, no less a sum than 37,501*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.*, it is clear that a portion of the latter sum, whether more or less, found its way into the stock thus purchased. The exact proportions in which the component parts of the common fund contributed to this investment it would be difficult, perhaps impossible, now to determine; nor for the present purpose would the inquiry be of any practical value, as enough has been said to shew that the Profit Fund B., with which we are proposing to deal, derives its origin from a mixed source, and has not arisen, purely and exclusively, from the monies of the suitors in Chancery. There is, however, one remarkable circumstance, bearing directly on the point under discussion, which we must not omit to notice. We have shewn that, in 1749, the sum of 49,510*l.* 17*s.* 4*d.* was carried over from the produce of the duties in question, for the purpose (with the aid of the produce of the investment of Lord Macclesfield's fine) of fully satisfying the Masters' deficiencies, which were then finally ascertained and settled at the sum of 100,871*l.* But it has been proved before us, that out of this sum, only 96,726*l.* has been actually paid over, the balance of 4145*l.* never to this day having been claimed by the suitors to whose account it then stood, and still remains, in the books of the court. Now, the act by which the duties were imposed expressly provided that any surplus thereof, not required for the purpose of satisfying the Masters' deficiencies, should be reserved for the benefit of the public, and should be applied to such uses only as should thereafter be directed by Parliament. The unclaimed balance of 4145*l.*, therefore, not having been so required, falls strictly within this reservation, and, with its accumulations, remains at the disposal of Parliament; and to this extent, at the very least, the accumulated fund has arisen from a common law source, and not from monies belonging or equitably appropriated to the suitors in Chancery. We think we are justified in treating this sum as having formed part of the earliest investment; and if we do so, and add thereto the produce of the investment half-yearly of the accumulated interest thereon from 1739 to the present time, at the rate of 3*l.* per centum per annum, the total amount would fall very little short of 150,000*l.*

76. From the other proposition which we have noticed above, viz. that the suitors in Chancery will derive no benefit from that part of the scheme which involves the erection of courts of law, we must equally withhold our assent. It has been proved by an overwhelming mass of testimony, that the suitors of all the courts suffer alike from the defects and inconveniences of the existing system. It must be remembered that the very same body of persons who, as solicitors, conduct the business of the suitors in Chancery, represent, as attorneys, the suitors at law, as well as in the Courts of Divorce and Probate and the High Court of Admiralty. Whatever, therefore, clogs their proceedings in the one character, indirectly affects those for whom they are, at the same time, acting in the other. We have examined several of the most eminent members of this body, and they have expressed their unanimous opinion, that as the existing separation and dispersion of the various courts and offices are the prolific sources of delay and expense, so their concentration in a central situation, and in close proximity to the Inns of Court, will greatly facilitate the transaction of business in all the courts, and will thus promote efficiency, economy, and dispatch in the general administration of justice. All classes of suitors suffer alike from the present evil—all will derive a common benefit from the proposed remedy.

77. For these reasons we are of opinion that Fund B. may be legitimately appropriated to the purposes of the proposed scheme, without interfering with the rights of property, or violating any trust which Parliament can be considered as having created, either expressly or by construction, in favour of the suitors of the Court of Chancery.

78. But another objection has been brought under our notice, which addresses itself, not to the lawfulness, but to the expediency of such appropriation; and this objection we shall proceed to consider with all the respect which is due to the learned and eminent person by whom it has been propounded.

79. It is objected, then, that by the abstraction of Fund B., and its dedication to other purposes, the Court of Chancery will, to the extent of the income of about 39,000*l.* per annum, which is now derived therefrom, be deprived of the power of reducing the fees paid by the suitors. It is conceded that those suitors have no legal right to the fund in question, either as individuals or as a collective body; that it does not belong to them in the sense of property; that it has not been impressed, by legislative enactment or otherwise, with any specific trust in their favour; and that if it were a legitimate application of the fund to employ it in building courts at all, there is no sound distinction to be drawn between courts of law and courts of equity. But it is said that the suitors possess a moral right to have the fund applied in the manner and to the purposes which will be most beneficial to them, and that they will gain a great deal more by having no fees to pay in the progress of their suits, than by the concentration and consolidation of the courts of law and equity. The controversy is, therefore, narrowed to the point of comparative benefit to the suitors.

80. Now, assuming, for the purpose of the argument, that the suitors in Chancery have a moral right to appropriate to their own exclusive benefit the income of a fund which has arisen, to some extent at least, from a tax on common-law proceedings, and confining our attention to the question of comparative benefit, we cannot assent to the proposition which has been above stated. Whether it is right to compel suitors to contribute towards the expense of the administration of justice by means of fees is a question on which there is much difference of opinion. Into that question we shall not enter, as it lies beyond the sphere of the inquiry which your Majesty has committed to us. We may well admit that, if it were possible, it would be desirable to relieve suitors from the payment of all fees of court, and that this remission would be an undoubted advantage to them, as would be every reduction in the actual cost of litigation. The existing fees, however, are by no means high; they have been of late years very largely reduced, and they form a very small proportion (not more than 8 per cent.) on the whole cost of litigation. If the income of Fund B. were wholly applied in the same direction, a further reduction might be effected of nearly half that amount. We cannot, however, consider this as an equivalent for the advantages which the suitors would derive from the proposed concentration; and we are assured by witnesses of great intelligence, of extensive and varied experience, and whose habits of intercourse with the suitors themselves render them more especially competent to form a correct judgment on a question of this nature, that the benefit to the suitors from such a remission of fees would be as nothing compared with the boon they would obtain from the proposed scheme, by reason of the greater economy and dispatch with which it would enable their business to be transacted. The providing of suitable courts and offices in which that business may be conveniently carried on has become a matter of urgent necessity; and we are assured that the total abolition of all fees of court would be scarcely felt by the suitors in comparison with the gain which they would derive from the proposed concentration.

81. Assuming that, for the reasons above set forth, there is no valid objection in principle to the application of Fund B. towards the execution of the proposed scheme, it remains for us to state in what manner, and subject to what conditions, it may be made available for that purpose, with due regard to existing charges and incumbrances, whether on the capital or the income thereof.

And first as to the capital.

82. It will have been seen from the foregoing narrative, that Fund B. has been derived from the surplus income of Fund A. re-invested from time to time, so as to accumulate at compound interest; and that Fund A. represents such portion of the suitors' cash as has been invested in securities under the authority of the various acts of Parliament to which we have referred. On the 1st October, 1859, the cash so invested amounted to the sum of 2,264,744*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*, and the securities purchased therewith to the sum of 2,613,300*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.*, the average rate of purchase being a trifle under 87 per cent. It is to these securities that the suitors must look for the repayment of their cash; and if the whole of the latter were now called for, and the securities were realised at the present market price, (say 93), there would be a profit of more than 150,000*l.* accruing to the State from the transaction. Thus—

Produce of 2,613,300 l. stock, at 93 .....	£2,430,424 16 0
Deduct suitors' cash, to be provided for as above .....	2,264,744 1 10
Surplus .....	£165,680 14 2

83. But if, on the other hand, the Court of Chancery were to close its doors, if every suitor were at once to claim his own, and if the securities were realised for the purpose of satisfying those claims at any price below 87, there would be a deficiency, more or less, according to the price of stock at the time of sale. This deficiency would have to be made good out of Fund B., the whole capital of which stands pledged to the suitors, by way of guarantee or indemnity, for the sufficiency of Fund A. to answer their demands.

84. It is scarcely necessary, however, to remark that the case we have supposed is not merely an extreme, but practically speaking an impossible, one. No reasonable person will act on the supposition that the Court of Chancery is about to close its doors, and to suspend the exercise of its ordinary functions; nor, except on that supposition, is it possible that the whole body of suitors should concur in a simultaneous demand for the repayment of the whole of their cash. Fund A., which represents that cash, has been the silent and steady growth of 120 years, during which the money paid into court by the suitors has constantly exceeded the money drawn out by them, the fund itself being, in fact, the gauge and measure of that excess. With the increase of population and wealth, the extension of commerce, and the multiplication of those complex and ever-varying relations which are perpetually springing up in a community like our own, there is likely to be a corresponding increase, rather than a diminution, in the business of the Court of Chancery, and in the funds from time to time placed under its charge. From the original foundation of Fund A. in 1739 to the present time there have only been seven occasions on which it has been found necessary to resort to a sale of stock, and on those occasions the necessity did not arise from the insufficiency of the cash in hand to meet the current demands of the suitors, but because, from accidental causes, the floating balance in the Bank of England had been reduced below the sum which it was considered right the Bank should hold in order to afford a proper remuneration for their trouble in keeping the accounts of the suitors. The risk, therefore, of Fund A. being found insufficient to answer the demands of the suitors is practically none.

85. Against this risk, however, shadowy and unsubstantial though it be, the suitors have now, by law, the guarantee of Fund B.; and if that guarantee be taken away, as it will be if Fund B. is appropriated to the purposes of the proposed scheme, they are entitled to claim that another shall be substituted in its room. We think that such guarantee should be given in the shape of a parliamentary indemnity; the State, which takes Fund B. for an object of vast public utility, undertaking to stand in the place of that fund, so as to make good any deficiency in Fund A., should such deficiency ever arise.

86. If precedents were needed to justify an engagement on the part of the State, in itself so just and reasonable, a series of precedents may be found so apposite, not only to the particular point with which we are now dealing, but to the whole question which has been under our consideration, that we shall proceed to refer to them with some degree of minuteness.

87. In the year 1790 an act of the Irish Parliament (the 30 Geo. 3, c. 41) was passed, intitled "An Act for enabling the Lord High Chancellor and the Court of Exchequer respectively to make Orders on the Governor and Company of the Bank of Ireland for Payment, out of the General Fund of Monies belonging to the Suitors of the Courts of Chancery and Exchequer, of the Sum therein mentioned, towards building the Principal Courts of Justice of Dublin and Law Offices, and for amending an Act intitled 'An Act for better securing the Monies and Effects of the Suitors of the Court of Chancery and Court of Exchequer,'" &c. After reciting that the providing of convenient courts for the administration of justice in his Majesty's principal courts of justice in Dublin, and of offices for the keeping and preserving of the records thereof, and of the transaction of the business of such offices, would be of advantage to the public, and that it might require the sum of 30,000*l.* to complete the building thereof, the act in question directed, that "out of the general fund of the monies of the suitors of his Majesty's High Court of Chancery and Court of Exchequer," (which court at that time possessed and exercised an equitable jurisdiction in Ireland, as the Court of Exchequer did in England), deposited in the Bank of Ireland, there should be paid to the Lord Chancellor and Chief Judges, towards building such courts and offices, the sum of 30,000*l.*, by yearly payments of 10,000*l.* each. The 2nd section of the act provided, that if the general fund belonging to the suitors should at any time be reduced to the sum of 30,000*l.* thereby directed to be paid, then the Bank of Ireland should be reimbursed, "from and out of his Majesty's Treasury," the whole of the said sum of 30,000*l.*, or so much thereof as should have been paid by virtue of the act.

88. In 1794 another act of the Irish Parliament was passed, (the 34 Geo. 3, c. 6), intitled "An Act for enabling the Lord High Chancellor of Ireland and the Court of Exchequer respectively to make Orders on the Governor and Company of the Bank of Ireland for Payment, out of the General Fund of Monies belonging to the Suitors of the Courts of Chancery and Exchequer, of the further Sum therein mentioned, towards building the principal Courts of Justice at Dublin, and Law Offices, and for declaring" &c. This act recited the previous act of 1790, and that a further sum of 13,500*l.* might be required to complete the building of the courts and offices therein mentioned; and it accordingly proceeded to direct, that "out of the said general fund of the monies of the said High Court of Chancery or Court of Exchequer," deposited in the Bank of Ireland, there should from time to time be paid to the Lord Chancellor and Chief Judges such further sum, not exceeding 13,500*l.*, as might be required towards building such courts and offices. The 2nd section of this act in like manner provided, that if the general fund belonging to the suitors should at any time be reduced to a sum not greater than the amount of the sums mentioned in the former act, and the said sum of 13,500*l.*, then the Governor and Company of the Bank of Ireland should from time to time be reimbursed, "from and out of his Majesty's Treasury," so much of the said sums as should appear to the Lords of the Treasury to be necessary in order to provide a fund sufficient to answer the demands of the suitors.

89. In 1832 an act of the Imperial Parliament was passed, (the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 32), intitled "An Act for the Erection of a Nisi Prius Court-house in Dublin," by which, after reciting the two last-mentioned acts of the Irish Parliament, and that the dispatch of business in the courts therein mentioned would be much facilitated by providing an additional court-house, in which causes might be tried at Nisi Prius during term, so as not to interrupt the business of any of the other courts, and in which the Court of Exchequer Chamber might also hold its meetings without interruption to the business of the Rolls Court, it was enacted, that any further sum, not exceeding 4000*l.*, might be advanced "out of the general fund of the monies of the suitors of the Court of Chancery and Court of Exchequer," for building the said court-house, and also for improving the accommodations of the present principal courts of justice in Dublin. The 3rd section of this act contained a similar provision, that if the general fund of the suitors should at any time be reduced to a sum not greater than the amount of the sums mentioned in the former acts, and the sum of 4000*l.* above mentioned, then the Bank of Ireland should be reimbursed, out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom, so much of the said several sums as should appear to the Lords of the Treasury to be necessary in order to provide a fund sufficient to answer the demands of the suitors.

90. In 1834 another act was passed, (the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 68), intitled "An Act to authorise an Advance out of the General Fund of Monies belonging to the Suitors of the Courts of Chancery and Exchequer in Ireland, towards the purchasing of Ground, and building thereon Offices necessary to the Courts of Justice in Dublin." After reciting the three last-mentioned acts, it states that it was necessary to insulate the courts of justice in Dublin, and the public record offices adjoining thereto, for the purpose of protecting the various records and public documents there deposited from the hazards of fire and embezzlement, to which they were continually exposed from the surrounding buildings, and that a further sum of 50,000*l.* was estimated to be required for the purpose of purchasing the necessary ground, and of erecting different offices connected with the said courts, and otherwise increasing the accommodation of such offices. It was accordingly enacted that the Bank of Ireland might advance to the Commissioners of Public Works, out of the Suitors Fund of the Court of Chancery or the Court of Exchequer, such sums, not exceeding 50,000*l.*, as they should require for the purposes before stated. The 2nd section of the act contained a similar provision to those contained in the previous acts, for reimbursing to the Bank, "from and out of his Majesty's Treasury," so much of the various sums mentioned in such former acts, and of the said sum of 50,000*l.*, as the Lords of the Treasury should consider necessary to provide a fund sufficient to answer the demands of the suitors.

91. Lastly, by an act passed in the year 1848, (the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 77), intitled "An Act to authorise the Application of Part of the Unclaimed Money in the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in enlarging the Court-house of the said Court," after reciting that a sum of 67,000*l.* or thereabouts remained unclaimed in the said court, and which was then invested in Exchequer Bills, and that it had become necessary to enlarge the court-house in Portugal-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields, and for that purpose to purchase and alter an adjoining messuage and buildings, and that it was expedient to apply part of such unclaimed monies in defraying the expense which would be thereby incurred, it was enacted, that a sum not exceeding in the whole 21,300*l.* should be raised by sale of a sufficient part of such Exchequer Bills, and paid to the credit of the Commissioners of Woods, Forests, and Public Works, to be applied by them in paying the expenses of enlarging and fitting the court-house. The 4th section of the said act provided, that in case the money remaining in the Insolvent Debtors Court should be insufficient to meet the claims thereon, the deficiency should be made good out of the Consolidated Fund, to an extent not exceeding in the whole the amount which should have been raised and paid to the Commissioners of Public Works for the purposes before mentioned.

PAYMENT OF WITNESSES IN CRIMINAL CASES.

THE following important presentment was made at the Liverpool Assizes:—

"The grand jury for the southern division of the county of Lancaster, at the August Assizes, 1860, desire to state their opinion that the reduction in the scale of allowances to witnesses at sessions and assizes, made under an order of Secretary Sir George Grey, bearing date the 9th February, 1858, has produced, and is likely to continue to produce, a most important influence upon the administration of justice and the state of crime.

"The scale of allowance in force previous to the above order may be described as recognising the general principle, that all persons attending under recognisances to give evidence in criminal prosecutions should receive reasonable compensation for their necessary expenditure, and, to some extent and in certain cases, for their loss of time.

"The scale was, no doubt, in some cases, abused by the granting of excessive and improper allowances, and the grand jury is of opinion that measures for the prevention of such abuses would have been proper and desirable.

"But the scale sanctioned by Sir George Grey proceeds upon a principle which is entirely opposite to that of the previous one, and which may be described as being, in substance, that a uniform and low scale of payment, not more than fairly adequate to the wages of an unskilled labourer, should be adopted in all ordinary cases, with a higher one in the case of members of the profession of the law or of medicine, and a lower one in the case of the police.

"The full effect of the new scale was not immediately felt, as its character did not at once become generally known. Its practical result is now clearly found to be—and those members of the jury who habitually discharge the ordinary duties of magistrates are painfully aware of the fact—that there is in the great majority of instances a decided and increasing disinclination to forward the administration of justice, by aiding in the apprehension and conviction of offenders, inasmuch as every person so doing now subjects himself not only to trouble and inconvenience, which probably he might be very ready to undergo, but to a direct pecuniary loss, which in many cases is a very serious one to himself and his family, and that such should be the case is generally felt to be grossly unreasonable and unjust.

"Persons who are robbed are now, in many cases, most reluctant to prosecute, inasmuch as prosecution only subjects them to a certain serious loss, in addition to what they have already incurred; and with all persons, whose general or special duty it would be to aid in the detection of crime, there is a general disposition, more or less, to escape, if possible, the performance of a duty which subjects the person who fulfils it to an inevitable, and to him often a serious, pecuniary penalty.

"As a striking illustration of these facts, it may be stated, that in the case of the police, who receive their ordinary pay when in attendance at sessions and assizes, the further allowance is so inadequate to meet the additional expenditure which they unavoidably incur when living away from their own homes, that it is a great hardship upon them to be required to undertake the discharge of any duty involving attendance at sessions or assizes; and they naturally feel most reluctant to do so, unless when imperatively required, or unless they are held harmless against loss from some other source.

"In the very serious duty of proving previous convictions, generally performed by governors and other superior officers of gaols, and which often can be satisfactorily performed by no one else, the allowance is so inadequate to the needful expenditure incurred, that governors of gaols cannot ordinarily discharge this duty without serious pecuniary loss in every instance; and governors of gaols cannot now ordinarily be relied upon to discharge it at all unless served with a subpoena, which involves expense to the public, but does not save the governor from pecuniary loss. It may be further stated, that in the case of pawnbrokers, whose assistance is constantly needed in the tracing of stolen property, the grievances of the present system are very serious, and are the subject of strong complaint.

"The grand jury, while giving all due credit to the promoters of reformatories and schools, whose efforts the grand jury earnestly desire should not be counteracted by other causes, believe that the results of the circumstances to which they have adverted may be distinctly traced in this county as a material cause of the lighter calendars at assizes and quarter sessions, and the reduced number of inmates of our gaols, and as leading to the existence of a larger amount of criminal population at large and unchecked, engaged in the perpetration of crimes themselves, and in the corruption of others. A natural consequence appears to be the extension in this county, and probably elsewhere, of crimes of the more serious class, to which your Lordship adverted in your charge.

"And the grand jury finally declare their belief, that unless the scale to which they have adverted—introduced, it may be observed, by the sole authority of the Secretary of State, without any sanction of Parliament—be abandoned, and a more equitable system introduced, all efforts for the diminution of crime, and for the amelioration of society, will be rendered comparatively unavailing by a misplaced economy, and that the amount of serious crime shewn in the calendar for the present assizes, which your Lordship and the grand jury alike lament, is likely to continue, and probably to increase."

The bill sent down from the Lords to abolish the plea of "not guilty," and to substitute for it a statement that the prisoner wishes to be tried, has been thrown out by the House of Commons, on the motion for going into committee, by 37 to 19.—Law Times.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 8, 1884.

AN incident of an unusual and unpleasant nature, which took place at the Surrey Summer Assizes of this year, has attracted a share of the public attention. The high sheriff of that county, Mr. Evelyn, is a gentleman of family and fortune, and a descendant of the celebrated Evelyn. When the grand jury, having concluded their business, came into court with the last of the bills, Mr. Justice Blackburn dismissed them, thanking them in the usual manner for the assistance they had rendered to the administration of justice. The high sheriff of the county had requested the judge to pay the compliment to the gentlemen who had attended, but who had not actually served on the grand jury, of thanking them for their attendance, as many of them had come a considerable distance to perform the duty; but the judge said he considered it unnecessary to do so, and it is understood that the high sheriff expressed his intention of thanking them himself. The judge had addressed the grand jury, and was about to proceed with a trial that was before the Court, when the high sheriff rose, and, addressing a number of magistrates who were on the bench, said that he also—

Mr. Justice Blackburn interposed, and said that he could not allow the high sheriff to proceed, and he must request him to desist. The high sheriff seeming determined to go on, the judge laid his hand on his shoulder, and said he could not permit him to speak, and he must request him to sit down. The high sheriff still persisted, and Mr. Justice Blackburn threatened that if he did not desist he would fine him. This had no effect; the high sheriff would not sit down, and Mr. Justice Blackburn said, "Mr. High Sheriff, I feel myself called upon to fine you 500l." His Lordship then directed Mr. Avory, the deputy clerk of assize, to record the fine. The imposition of the fine did not have the effect of inducing the high sheriff to desist, and Mr. Justice Blackburn then threatened to commit him for contempt of Court, and interfering with the administration of justice. The high sheriff then resumed his seat.

This event naturally caused great sensation among the magistrates, and also among the bar. It is reported that a correspondence passed, in which Mr. Justice Blackburn offered to remit the fine, and that Mr. Evelyn, in answer, only sent a cheque for the money. This, however, seems apocryphal; at least, we have not been able to trace it to any authoritative source. Be that, however, as it may, the high sheriff and his friends brought the matter before the other judge of assize, Lord Chief Justice Cockburn; and the result was, that at a later period of the day the high sheriff entered the Crown Court, and, standing beside Mr. Justice Blackburn, read a written apology for his conduct, which Mr. Justice Blackburn accepted, declaring that he had no personal feeling in the matter, and remitted the fine.

This took place on the 3rd August, and the affair was supposed to be at an end, the more especially as the high sheriff, with the concurrence of the justices of assize, left the town a few days after; but not so. On the 13th August the following placard was posted on the outside of the court in which, the criminal business having been disposed of, Mr. Justice Blackburn was trying causes:—

"To the freeholders and inhabitants of the county of Surrey.—Gentlemen, on Friday, the 3rd August, Mr. Justice Blackburn, in my presence, but without addressing himself to me, ordered that part of the court which is appropriated to the public to be cleared, at a time when perfect quietness prevailed among the public who were then present according to custom. From that time the public have been barred out from the court where Mr. Justice Blackburn presides, and the prisoners have been tried and causes heard without the possibility of the law being fulfilled, which requires that 'so many as will, or can,' shall 'come so near as to hear.' As your sheriff, and feeling that the general dissatisfaction is well grounded, it is my duty to record my protest against this unlawful proceeding, and I have given directions that the court shall be open again to the public, according to the custom and the law. All persons, so long as they conduct themselves with decorum, have a lawful right to be present in court, and I hereby prohibit my officers from aiding and abetting any attempt to bar out the public from free access to the court....

"I am, gentlemen, your faithful servant,

"WILLIAM JOHN EVELYN, Sheriff."

The judges, upon this, commanded the high sheriff to attend in that court next day. Accordingly, at nine o'clock on the 14th, the high sheriff, in court dress, came into court, and was quickly followed by Lord Chief Justice Cockburn and Mr. Justice Blackburn, in their robes, escorted by their marshals and officers.

The Lord Chief Justice then called upon the high sheriff to state whether the placard that had been posted outside the walls of the court had been placed there by his authority.

The High Sheriff replied that it had.

The Lord Chief Justice then inquired what explanation he had to give for such a proceeding.

The High Sheriff then rose, and bowing to their Lordships and the Bar, of whom there was a full attendance, said he was glad to have that opportunity of offering an explanation of the course he had pursued in publishing the placard which was now the subject of remark. That course he had not taken without deliberation, and he was bound, with the greatest respect and deference to their Lordships, to affirm that he believed he had discharged his duty to the county of Surrey as the high sheriff appointed by her Majesty. He proceeded to say that Mr. Justice Blackburn had ordered the court to be cleared of several of the audience, and that the officers effectually executed the command. This, he respectfully contended, was an illegal act, and had the effect of invalidating the verdicts which had been afterwards returned; and this being so, he considered it obligatory on him to do what he believed the duties of his office required at his hands—viz. to assert the illegality of the course pursued by the learned judge, and to command his officers not again to obey such orders from the Court. The high sheriff then stated that he had left the town on Thursday with their Lordships' sanction, that he had departed on terms of amity and good feeling with their Lordships, and he now distinctly disavowed, on his honour as an English gentleman; the least intention to offer any personal insult to Mr. Justice Blackburn. [Mr. Justice Blackburn bowed his assent to this remark.] He could only say, in conclusion, that he desired to treat the Court with all respect and submission, and that the step he had taken was taken upon a sound conviction, that in ordering an English court of justice to be cleared of the auditory, the learned judge had assumed an illegal authority, and one which he (the high sheriff) felt bound to disobey, as the chief officer of the county.

Their Lordships having briefly consulted,

The Lord Chief Justice said that the Court had heard with anxiety and sorrow the statement which the high sheriff had addressed to them, amounting, as it did, to an entire justification of what their Lordships, as her Majesty's judges of assize, sitting as the representatives of the Sovereign, felt to be a most improper, unlawful, and unseemly contempt of their office and of the administration of justice. The high sheriff had most unquestionably mistaken the law to the utmost, and he (the Lord Chief Justice) now declared that the power and authority of her Majesty's judges, acting in pursuance of her Majesty's commission, were perfectly well defined and established, and that the course taken by his learned brother was one which he had the most undoubted right to adopt. His Lordship said that he at once conceded that English courts of justice were open to the public in the fullest sense, and he trusted they ever would remain so; but it was going far beyond either law or necessity to avow, as the high sheriff had done, that there was no power reposed in the presiding judge to order such modifications of the arrangements of the court as were indispensable to that which it was the office of a judge to carry out—viz. the efficient administration of justice. His Lordship then adverted to the great structural inconvenience of the courts in which the judges had presided, and to the fact that his learned brother had ordered the lower part of the court, open to the street, and not the other parts of the court, to be cleared, because the examination of witnesses in criminal cases, when prisoners were standing on their trial, was inaudible to the court and jury, and this was surely a transparent necessity for the order which his learned brother had conveyed to the officers of the high sheriff. His Lordship then observed that the high sheriff had not made the least complaint or remonstrance before he left the assize town, and stated that the Court were nevertheless perfectly assured that the high sheriff, who was an honourable English gentleman, neither had intended nor was capable of offering any personal indignity to her Majesty's judges; but the course the high sheriff had pursued was clearly a painfully contumacious contempt of the Court as such, and a most serious reflection upon the authority of the judges' commission, which emanated from the Throne, and demanded, especially from the high sheriff, as one of her Majesty's important officers of justice, obedient and respectful observance.

The Lord Chief Justice then fined the high sheriff 500*l.*, and the fine was immediately recorded.

Two days after this, on the 16th August, a letter from the high sheriff appeared in The Times newspaper, from which the following is an extract:—

"I must reiterate, that on the 3rd August, at the Crown Court at Guildford, the whole of the space appropriated to the public was entirely cleared, and from that date to Monday, the 13th August, when I interfered, that space was empty. The only entrances left open were, first, the entrance for counsel, witnesses, jurors, and officials; and, secondly, the judges' entrance; and numerous complaints were made to me on the subject. I cannot but maintain that I was substantially right in the course taken."

On the 22nd August a letter appeared in The Times, addressed to the editor of that paper, from Mr. Avory, the associate on the Home Circuit, in reply to the above:—

"Sir,—My attention having been called to the letter of Mr. Evelyn, the high sheriff of Surrey, inserted by you in The Times last week, it may, perhaps, be as well that the public should learn from an official source the causes which led to the order of the presiding judge, that the public should be excluded from a particular part of the Crown Court (so called) at Guildford during the recent assizes.

"As deputy clerk of assize and clerk of the Crown, I have been during many assizes officially present in the Crown Court at Guildford, and I have on no one occasion been there without hearing most grievous and oft-repeated complaints of the extreme and painful difficulty of conducting the public business with decorum, owing to the disgraceful state of the 'barn' provided as a court for the administration of justice. Without a plan it is very difficult to convey a notion of the arrangements of this 'barn,' which, at one end, consisting of two arches, is open to and actually adjoins the public paved road, and I must therefore content myself with saying that about one-third of the whole area of the 'barn' is separated from the rest by a wooden barrier, and is appropriated as standing room (there not being a single seat in it) for a continually changing and noisy crowd, finding ingress and egress through the open end of the 'barn.'

"The other two-thirds are occupied by judge, counsel, jury, and officials, and by seats for magistrates and for the general public.

"The standing room which I have referred to above being the space next adjoining to the open street, it was found impossible to prevent the crowd from moving about and making a great clatter of feet; and, in fact, the din and disturbance were so great that it was extremely difficult to hear or be heard. Add to this the noise (in spite of straw laid down to prevent it) made by heavy country waggons and vehicles of all kinds passing along the paved road at the open end of the 'barn,' and you may readily understand that the proceedings should be frequently absolutely stopped until the noise had subsided.

"On the day referred to by Mr. Evelyn, the 3rd August, the tumult was so great that the effort to hear and be heard was of the most painful kind, and I was really astonished that the judge did not order the whole court to be cleared of the public; but it was not until he had time after time commanded silence, and found that he did so without the slightest result, except for a few minutes, that he gave directions to have the standing room above referred to cleared of its noisy occupants.

This was done, but the public was left undisturbed in possession of every seat in the court, and of the whole of the standing room in the other two-thirds of the court, and they attended daily in considerable numbers until the end of the business. Mr. Evelyn's statement, then, that 'the whole of the space appropriated to the public was entirely cleared and remained empty,' should, therefore, be read as follows:—

"That portion of the court in which there were no seats provided for the public, and in which a noisy crowd continually disturbed the public business, was entirely cleared, but the orderly part of the public continued in possession of the excellent accommodation provided by the justices of Surrey, and a crowd of persons, sufficient to create difficulty in passing and re-passing, continued to attend and take great interest in the proceedings. On and after the 3rd August many orderly stragglers might also have been seen in the space which had been ordered to be cleared."

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"HENRY AVORY,

Deputy Clerk of Assize, Home Circuit.

"10, King's Bench-walk, Temple."

Such is the full account of this proceeding, in which we have no hesitation in pronouncing the high sheriff wrong throughout. Mr. Evelyn is a gentleman much, and we believe deservedly, respected in the county of Surrey, and it is said that, in compliment to him, the gentlemen of that county attended in much larger numbers than usual at the assizes in question. If, therefore, the affair had ended with his apology and the remission of the fine on the 3rd August, it might have been imagined that the previous conduct of the high sheriff, however illegal and indecorous in itself, was a mere error in judgment, arising from a cause creditable to him as a man—namely, the desire to express his gratitude to those gentlemen who had attended for the special purpose of doing honour to his shrievalty. But the issuing the placard is an act of a very different nature, and is one which, taken in connexion with the former part of his conduct, compels us to put a very different interpretation on the whole. There is a report that this last act was done under the advice of counsel; at all events it was done after the lapse of ten days, and consequently cannot be set down to precipitancy or want of time for consideration. We do not stop to inquire whether Mr. Justice Blackburn ought to have thanked those gentlemen who were not sworn on the grand jury—a course, we believe, unusual—or whether Mr. Evelyn is correct in his statement—in which, however, he is contradicted both by the Lord Chief Justice and Mr. Avory—that Mr. Justice Blackburn excluded the public from court. Assuming, for the purpose of the argument, that Mr. Justice Blackburn acted indiscreetly, or even illegally, in respect to both these matters, that forms no justification for Mr. Evelyn. If a judge of assize neglects or oversteps his duty, the constitution has provided remedies; but he is not to be publicly called to account, and have his acts overruled before his face, by the high sheriff, who is his subordinate, and indeed, in some sense, his servant for the time being. The high sheriff has, indeed, precedence in his own county, but that does not absolve him from the duty of obedience and respect to his Sovereign, or the judges of assize who represent that Sovereign—"In presentia majoris potestatis, minor potestas cessat." (Jenk., cent. 5, cas. 53). We hope that this affair is now at an end, and that we shall never again have to record a similar instance of insubordination to constituted authority in any of those whose peculiar duty it is to wait upon it and execute its commands.

REGISTRY OF JUDGMENTS.

Lord St. Leonards' new Law of Property Act.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—In my letter published in "THE JURIST" of the 11th August, 1860, I stated that "a reference must be made to the execution-book in every case of a registered judgment being found." This statement now requires some correction, as the registrar has, on the suggestion of Lord St. Leonards, entered a memorandum on the register of judgments when an execution is registered, and the date of such registering.

Therefore a searcher will have notice on the judgment register if he is affected by an execution, and will not find it necessary to examine the register of executions unless he wishes to procure the particulars relating to the execution referred to.

But on searching the local registers of Middlesex and Yorkshire for judgments, a purchaser must take the particulars of the creditor's name, and examine the register of executions kept in the Common Pleas in the name of such creditor, before he can ascertain whether he is affected by a judgment, as no memorandum to shew that execution has issued can conveniently be made in the local register.

It must be borne in mind that a judgment entered up before the 23rd July, 1860, will still be binding, although no execution has been issued on it, as the act is not retrospective.

I would also call the attention of the Profession to a convenient alteration in the practice of entering satisfaction.

The 23 & 24 Vict. c. 115, provides, as to Crown debts, that the provisions of sects. 195, 196, and 197 of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, shall be extended to all bonds to the Crown; therefore a certificate (instead of a judge's order) must be obtained in all cases to enter satisfaction; and as to judgments, an acknowledgment in the form provided by the act.

I am, Sir, yours obediently,

JAMES PARK,

Registrar's Chief Clerk.

Serjeants' Inn, Aug. 31, 1860.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS

92. These precedents appear to us to be conclusive, not only on the question immediately before us as to the propriety of a guarantee by the State to the suitors, but on the larger question which we have above discussed. We have already shewn that common-law suitors have been repeatedly taxed for the exclusive benefit of suitors in Chancery. The precedents last cited shew that funds belonging to suitors in Chancery have been repeatedly applied by Parliament for the exclusive benefit of suitors at law. We think no reasonable doubt can remain as to the moral right to appropriate the profits of a mixed fund, not for the exclusive benefit of either one class or the other, but for the common benefit of both.

Next as regards the income.

93. We have shewn that the income arising from each of the Funds A. and B. is charged with various annual payments of large amount, for salaries, pensions, compensation allowances, and other miscellaneous purposes, the surplus income, after making all such payments, being carried over to "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account," (Fund C.) We have also shewn that for the last year, ending November, 1859, the aggregate income of all the funds, A., B., C., and D., amounted to 223,764*l.* 1*l.* 3*d.*, while the aggregate expenditure was 220,721*l.* 13*s.* 8*d.*, leaving a surplus of only 3042*l.* 17*s.* 7*d.* It is manifest, therefore, that if the capital of the two Funds B. and D. be appropriated as proposed, the income arising therefrom, amounting to 45,000*l.* per annum, will be withdrawn from the common Fund C., and instead of a surplus, there will be a large deficiency. It is true, that out of the whole expenditure above mentioned, no less a sum than 74,396*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.* consists of annual payments for compensations to the holders of abolished offices; and it is estimated that these payments are diminishing at the rate of more than 2000*l.* per annum, by the falling in of existing lives; so that in a very few years the deficit will be thereby made good, and the infant Fund C. will right itself. We do not here refer to salaries and pensions which, as they drop, will, in the natural course of things, be replaced by others, and the total amount of which may even be increased, as the increasing business of the court may from time to time render necessary an augmentation of its personal staff; but we are speaking exclusively of terminable annual charges, which in the course of a few years will entirely cease. In the meantime, however, and until the fruits of this process of reduction have been fully realised, means must be provided to meet the charges to which the fund is now subject, and to prevent the machinery of justice from being brought to a stand.

94. We are of opinion that this temporary deficiency should be made good by the public, by means of an annual payment from the Consolidated Fund. It appears to us that the providing suitable courts and offices for the due and convenient administration of justice is an object of supreme national importance, and involving the weightiest national obligations; that it is, in fact, one of the primary and paramount duties of the State. If its fulfilment involved even a large and permanent addition to the public burthens, we humbly conceive that the State could not with propriety shrink from the obligation. But we are happy to say that the charge we recommend to be imposed would not only be extremely moderate in amount, but may also be temporary in duration, as will appear by the following statement.

95. Assuming that the scheme which we have recommended should be adopted and carried into effect, and that the cost of acquiring the necessary site, and erecting thereon the proposed buildings, should entirely absorb (as we believe it would) the capital of Funds B. and D., there would, as we have before stated, be an eventual loss to Fund C. of the whole income now derived from Funds B. and D., amounting to 45,000*l.* per annum. From this, however, must be deducted the present surplus income of Fund C., of 3000*l.*, and also the rents, amounting to 2000*l.* per annum, now paid out of Fund C. for various offices used by the Court of Chancery, but which, on the completion of the proposed new buildings, would be no longer required. These two sums, amounting together to 5000*l.*, being deducted, the net deficiency to be made good out of the Consolidated Fund would thus be reduced to 40,000*l.* per annum. The real charge upon the public, however, would fall very far short of this sum.

96. We have stated that the net surplus of the fees paid over to the Treasury by the several Masters of the superior courts of common law have amounted, on the average of the last six years, to upwards of 14,000*l.* per annum. But out of the gross fees received by the Masters, rents are now paid by them to the amount of more than 1600*l.* per annum for various buildings at present occupied by the officers of the common-law courts, which, when the new buildings are completed, will cease to be required. The surplus will therefore be increased by the sum thus saved, and will then amount to 16,000*l.* per annum. Again: the surplus of the fees of the Court of Probate, now paid over to the Exchequer, are proved to amount to 7000*l.*, and of those of the High Court of Admiralty to about 1200*l.* per annum. These three sums, amounting together to 24,000*l.*, must therefore be placed to the credit of the account, and the real contribution to be borne by the public will thus be reduced from 40,000*l.* to 16,000*l.* per annum, as shewn by the statement below*.

97. But even this is not the whole case. We have dealt above with the existing figures, but we are assured by most competent authority, that if sufficient accommodation were provided for the Court of Probate, arrangements for the conduct of the business of that court, which are now retarded only by the want of adequate space, would be at once matured, and by means thereof the surplus fees would be increased certainly to 14,000*l.*, but more probably to 20,000*l.*, per annum. Taking the smaller only of these two sums, the net annual charge to the public would thus be reduced from 16,000*l.* to 9000*l.* per annum.

98. We recommend, therefore, that there shall be annually paid to the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, out of the Consolidated Fund, such sum, not exceeding 40,000*l.*, as shall be equal to the dividends on so much of the capital of Funds B. and D. as shall be from time to time withdrawn for the purposes of the proposed scheme. It will be remembered that the money will be required, not all at once, but gradually only, as the purchases of land and the erection of buildings proceed, and that until stock is actually sold for those purposes the dividends on the unsold portion thereof would continue to be received by the Accountant-General as heretofore. The annual sum so to be paid to him would be applied to the same purposes to which the Suitors' Fee Fund (Fund C.) is now applied, and would be accounted for by him accordingly, as he accounts for the income of that and the other funds now under his control.

99. It must be manifest to every one that the buildings at Westminster now used by the superior courts of common law, the Probate and Divorce Courts, and the High Court of Admiralty cannot long continue to be employed for the purposes of those courts. Not only are they an unsightly excrescence, marring the beauty and disturbing the uniformity of the magnificent structure of which they form a part, but they are wholly inadequate and unsuitable for the transaction of the business for which they are now permitted to be employed. Every one concerned in the administration of justice—the Bench, the Bar, the attorneys, jurymen, witnesses, the public attending the courts—all concur in condemning them as grossly unfit for the important uses to which they are devoted. If, then, they are removed—as sooner or later they must be—a new site must be found for the courts of law, and new buildings erected thereon at the public expense. This outlay will be saved by the execution of our proposed scheme.

100. Again: the defective state of the Probate Court and its offices, and, in particular, the inadequacy of the existing depository of wills, has been urgently pressed on our notice by most competent witnesses, and one of our own number, from his personal knowledge, corroborates their testimony; the want of accommodation operating, in fact, as a serious impediment to the due working out of many of the objects and purposes of the act by which the court was established, and thus tending to defeat its policy. We believe, indeed, that a sum of 70,000*l.* has been actually voted by Parliament for the purchase of a site for new buildings at Doctors' Commons. This outlay will also be saved if our proposed scheme is carried into immediate effect.

101. In order to effect these large savings to the public, to provide proper courts for the due administration of justice, and at the same time to secure the great advantages which we have above pointed out as resulting from the concentration of all the courts and all the offices connected therewith in a central situation, some assistance may well be given from the public resources. The annual payment which we have above recommended would be in the nature of a rent—and, taking its net amount at 16,000*l.* per annum, a very moderate rent—paid by the State for the use of buildings dedicated to purposes of the very highest public utility and importance. Whether this rent should be paid only for a limited time, or in perpetuity—that is to say, whether the charge on the Consolidated Fund should be a temporary or a permanent one—may fairly admit of question.

102. The advantage of making the charge permanent would be, that the Court of Chancery would thereby be enabled to reduce, and ultimately to extinguish, the fees now paid by the Chancery suitors. It is obvious, that if the State takes possession of the Funds B. and D., and applies the entire capital thereof towards the purposes of the proposed scheme, the income of those funds will no longer be available, as heretofore, for the reduction of fees. If, however, Parliament should consider that, under the special circumstances of the case, the public may reasonably be called on to assist in reducing the fees of the Chancery suitors, by means of a permanent charge on the Consolidated Fund, the deficit created by the withdrawal of Funds B. and D. would then be supplied, and, on the falling in of the existing terminable annuities, the available resources of the Court of Chancery would be exactly what they are at present.

103. But if Parliament should not deem it consistent with the public interests to impose any permanent burthen, however moderate in amount, on the finances of the State, then we recommend that the sum to be annually paid over from the Consolidated Fund to the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery should be reducible and reduced from year to year, as the existing terminable annuities fall in, until the deficiency caused by the absorption of Funds B. and D. shall be thereby made good. It is computed that these annuities will diminish at the rate of above 2000*l.* per annum; and taking the net annual contribution from the public funds to be 16,000*l.* at the commencement, it will wholly cease in eight years; while, if the anticipated increase in the fees received by the Probate Court should take place, the charge on the public will be extinguished in less than half that period.

UNCONDITIONAL ASSURANCE ON LIFE.

THE LIFE ASSOCIATION OF SCOTLAND has adopted a NEW SCHEME of "UNCONDITIONAL ASSURANCE," which entirely obviates the objections to the ordinary system of other offices.

Omission to pay a Premium by oversight does not affect the Assurance, and, after a time, payment may be intentionally postponed for a year.

The ASSURED is not subject to any restriction as to Occupation or Residence; and NO EXTRA PREMIUMS can ever be payable.

The ASSURANCE is virtually Non-forfeitable and Unquestionable.

The POLICY-HOLDER, on surrendering his Policy, can withdraw a fixed and unusually large proportion of his payments, or take a paid-up policy for double the amount; or he may withdraw the same sum as a Loan, and still continue the Policy.

So complete and satisfactory a system of Unconditional Assurance is not to be found in the arrangements of any other Assurance Office. Explanatory Pamphlets may be had on application.

ENTRANTS to the PROFIT CLASS on or before the 5TH DECEMBER NEXT will secure ONE YEAR'S BONUS more than will be allocated to later entrants.

THE LIFE ASSOCIATION OF SCOTLAND was founded in 1838, and has issued upwards of THIRTEEN THOUSAND POLICIES for Life Assurances, amounting to nearly SIX MILLIONS STERLING. THE ANNUAL INCOME is upwards of 160,000l. The Policies under the original Scheme have also for many years been unusually free from restrictions and imperfections, and the Assured have received large benefits. The Prospectuses of this Scheme also may be had on application.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 15, 1860.

THE unsatisfactory state of the practice respecting the subject of insanity in criminal proceedings is again forced upon our attention by the recent trial of William Godfrey Youngman for murder, and also by a statute passed in the session of Parliament which has just expired, the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 75.

Youngman was indicted for the murder of his mother; and there were three other indictments against him, for having at the same time murdered his two infant brothers, and a young woman to whom he was engaged to be married. Having been convicted and executed on the first of these indictments, the others were not tried. The defence set up by the accused was, that on the occasion in question his mother had, unprovoked, attacked and killed the three other persons, and then attacked himself, with the view of killing him also; whereupon he killed her in his own defence—a story improbable in itself, and inconsistent with the facts in evidence. In support of this defence, a medical witness deposed, on cross-examination, that a person might labour under insanity so as to be excused from responsibility, although his reasoning powers were not in the least affected. This is reproducing a question respecting which a contest has long been going on between the law of the land and a portion of the medical profession. From the earliest time the law of this country—and we believe that of every other also—has held that insanity consists in the presence of delusion in the mind, which prevents the unhappy object of it seeing and understanding things as they really are; and if, under the influence of such delusion, he does an act which in a man of sound mind would be criminal, he stands excused from responsibility, on grounds alike of humanity and policy. But since the great development of the valuable science of medical jurisprudence in modern times, many medical jurists, and some very eminent persons who have devoted themselves to the study of mental disease and the treatment of the insane, profess to have discovered that there is a species of insanity where no delusion of any kind exists, but the moral character of the patient is revolutionised, and he is hurried to the commission of crimes, of the guilt of which he is perfectly aware, by what they call an "irresistible impulse." To this form some of them have given the name of "moral insanity," and some have even subdivided it into species—as the mania to commit homicide, arson, theft, &c. The law has, however, always sternly refused to acknowledge the existence of this species of insanity; although there is every reason to believe, that in certain cases, owing to the weakness of judges and jurymen, defences founded on it have been allowed to prevail to the defeat of justice. For our own part we have no belief in its existence; but at least we may safely venture to affirm that it is not proved; and it is needless to observe, that the onus of proving the existence of so singular a phenomenon lies on those who assert it.

This is not, as is often hastily assumed, a peculiarly medical question—it is a metaphysical or psychological one, on which legislators and tribunals are as well, if not better, capable of judging than physicians. Is man a responsible agent at all? is clearly a metaphysical question; and so must be the branch of it, Is man a responsible agent so long as he retains his reason? Add to which, the common sense of men in every age has indorsed the judgment of their laws, that so long as reason is on her throne responsibility exists. If, indeed, the whole medical profession had in all times held a contrary opinion, it would be a matter deserving of grave attention, although even this could hardly be allowed to outweigh the established opinion and practice of the human race. But the theory of which we are speaking is not held by medical men in general—it is a theory started in modern times, and confined to a particular school. We should strongly advise every person anxious of studying the subject to read attentively the cases on which the dogma is founded; most of them will be found collected in Beck. Med. Juris. 436, 477, 7th ed., and Tayl. Med. Juris. 791 et seq.; see also p. 787, 3rd ed.; and we venture to say they fall far short of establishing it. In many of them the aberration of reason is plain enough; and in the rest, although there is ample evidence of preternatural impulse to crime, we find no ground for the hypothesis of irresistible impulse. Indeed, the whole doctrine seems based on the fallacy of confounding preternatural (we do not say supernatural) with irresistible impulse. A man may feel a sudden preternatural impulse to crime, but it is his bounden duty to resist that impulse; and when this kind of defence was once urged to a certain learned judge, he sarcastically said, "Laws were made to compel men to resist these irresistible impulses." If a man feels, what many persons have been known to feel, an impulse to throw himself down when standing on the brink of a precipice, it is his duty to conquer that feeling if possible; and if not, to take the remedy which common sense dictates—not to go near precipices: and if a man feels an impulse to commit a crime, it is his duty to conquer that feeling; and if he cannot, or thinks he cannot, then to avoid all occasions which might lead him into the temptation.

When we recollect how often the defence of insanity is resorted to with success—sometimes when it is well founded, but very frequently when it is not—it becomes of importance to consider the legal consequences of such a defence. Until the 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 94, the prisoner was acquitted simpliciter, and let loose upon society to repeat, if so inclined, the mischief he had already done. By that statute, when a person is acquitted on the ground of insanity, the Court is directed to detain him until the pleasure of the Sovereign is known; and, according to the practice, he was placed in some lunatic asylum, where such lunatics were kept apart from others. But by the statute just passed, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 75, the Crown is empowered to appoint asylums for criminal lunatics, and the Secretary of State may direct criminal lunatics to be confined in them, (sects. 1 and 2); he may also (sect. 4) appoint any persons, not less than three in number, to be a council of supervision for any asylum under that act, and also appoint a resident medical superintendent, &c. The 7th section contains the following proviso:—"Provided always, that any order for removal or discharge, which may now be made by the Secretary of State on the certificate of two physicians or surgeons, may be made on the certificate of the resident medical superintendent of the asylum and any two of the council of supervision." The 9th section then enacts, "that it shall be lawful for the Secretary of State, by his warrant, to permit any person confined in the asylum to be absent from such asylum upon trial for such period as he may think fit, or to permit any such person to be absent from such asylum upon such conditions in all respects as to the Secretary of State shall seem fit; and in case any person so permitted to be absent upon trial for any period do not return at the expiration of such period, or in case any of the conditions on which any person is so permitted to be absent be broken, the person not returning at such expiration, or absent after any such condition has been broken, as the case may be, may be retaken as herein provided in the case of an escape." Whether the large discretion left to the Executive by this statute, and the facilities which it affords for getting rid of confinement in the asylums which it has created, are consistent with the safety of society against the acts of real or pretended lunatics, especially if moral insanity is to be recognised as a defence to a criminal charge, is a question on which our readers may judge for themselves, but which time alone can effectually determine.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS

APPOINTED TO INQUIRE INTO THE EXPEDIENCY OF BRINGING THE COURTS TOGETHER INTO ONE PLACE OR NEIGHBOURHOOD.

(Concluded from p. 339).

104. With regard to Fund D., which we have referred to as one of the sources properly available in aid of the scheme, little remains to be said, as most of the arguments by which its appropriation may be justified have been anticipated in our preceding observations. It will be remembered that this fund amounts to a sum of 201,028*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.* stock, now standing to the credit of an account intitled "Account of Monies placed out to provide for the Officers of the High Court of Chancery;" that it has arisen from the surplus of the fees levied on the suitors between the years 1833 and 1852, not required for defraying the expenses of the court; and that the whole income thereof, like the surplus income of Funds A. and B., is carried over to, and forms part of, the income of Fund C. We are of opinion that if Funds B. and E. should prove inadequate to the complete execution of the proposed scheme, Fund D. may most properly be applied in aid thereof. But in that case we think that Parliament should guarantee the due and punctual payment of the salaries and compensation allowances to the officers of the court, for the security of which this fund now stands charged. The income of Fund C. will, of course, be diminished pro tanto by the abstraction of the capital of Fund D., but provision will have been made for the deficiency thereby caused, by means of the annual sum of 40,000*l.*, which we have already recommended as proper to be paid to the Accountant-General, until the falling in of the terminable annual charges has restored the equilibrium of the entire income.

105. As to Fund E. no observations seem to be required. The sum of 88,254*l.* 5*s.* 1*d.*, arising from the common-law fees which have accumulated between the years 1852 and 1859, both inclusive, and of which that fund consists, is wholly free and unappropriated; and it appears to us that there cannot be a more legitimate application thereof than towards the completion of a scheme from which the suitors at common law will derive the most essential advantage.

106. In the commencement of this last division of our Report we have expressed our opinion that the funds, the nature and amount of which we have now submitted to your Majesty, would be sufficient for carrying into effect the concentration we have recommended. Upon this matter it is, for obvious reasons, very difficult to arrive at an absolute certainty, and we have not thought ourselves justified in incurring the expense of minute and detailed surveys and estimates, which would have been necessary to enable us to speak with certainty, but which would at present have been premature. In the minutes of evidence annexed to this our Report, however, will be found general evidence on the subject, on which we think we may rely with some confidence for the opinion we have ventured to express.

107. From this evidence it appears that the site we have recommended may be acquired for about 675,000*l.*, and that an equal sum would probably be required for the erection of the proposed buildings, making together 1,350,000*l.* Adding to this sum 150,000*l.* for contingencies, we have an aggregate amount of 1,500,000*l.*, which would be about the produce of the three Funds B., D., and E. But as, on the completion of the proposed new courts and offices, large and valuable blocks of building, (which have been acquired and erected out of the profits of the suitors' unemployed cash, under the provisions of the various acts of Parliament to which we have above referred), and the freehold of which is now vested in the Lord Chancellor or the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, would no longer be required for the business of the court, such buildings and the site thereof might be sold, and the produce of the sale brought in aid of the proposed scheme, if such aid were found to be necessary, or, if not, might be carried over to the Suitors' Fund.

All which we humbly submit to your Majesty.

APPENDIX A.

Observations of Vice-Chancellor Wood, referred to in the Report†.

I object to the appropriation of any part of the Suitors' Fund, or of the Suitors' Fee Fund of the Court of Chancery, towards the expense of erecting courts for the transaction of any business other than that of the Court of Chancery.

The reasoning upon which the justice of such an appropriation is founded would equally justify an application of the fund in discharge of the National Debt. It is said that the suitors have neither collectively nor individually any right or interest in the fund in question beyond the guarantee which the Fund B. (as it is designated in the report of the majority of the commissioners upon this subject) affords them—namely, a guarantee against any deficiency in Fund A. in the event of a fall in the 3*l.* per Cents. below 87*l.*: that there is no trust beyond this impressed upon the fund for the benefit of the suitors as a body: that there is no possibility of tracing the interest that any individual may have in the accumulations made by employment of his money, even if a quasi trust in such accumulations were supposed to exist for his benefit, and it were assumed that the State is not at liberty to make a profit of money held by one of its tribunals during litigation as a stakeholder for the successful party. It is further said that the fund is, in fact, in part constituted of monies raised by taxes on common-law proceedings, and that at various epochs common-law proceedings were taxed in order to make good the defalcations of the Masters, and to provide for the salaries of officers or judges of the Court of Chancery; and that in Ireland an application has been made of the money of the suitors in Chancery to the building of courts for the use of several other tribunals.

Now, I do not think it necessary to insist on any abstract right being vested in the suitors of the Court of Chancery, whose money has been properly employed under the sanction of divers acts of Parliament, to claim, either collectively or individually, any part of that profit. There can be no doubt that it is not a right capable of being enforced by any remedy; but, on the other hand, there is something startling in the proposition, that the profit arising from investment of money, of which the Court of Chancery became possessed merely as stakeholder for litigants, could be legitimately transferred by Parliament to the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the purpose (say) of carrying on the Russian or Chinese war. The principle, however, contended for goes to that full extent. As a matter of fact, this has not, up to the present moment, been the view of the Legislature. No application, in England at least, has been made of that which in the several acts of Parliament is always called the "Suitors' Fund of the Court of Chancery" to any purpose unconnected with the benefit of the suitors in the court.

I conceive the view of the Legislature to have been, that as it could not, without violation of the general rights of property, have compelled, a priori, the suitor to deposit his cash in court for the purpose of obtaining a banker's profit for State objects, so it cannot with propriety subsequently apply a fund thus realised to the general purposes of the State. On the contrary hypothesis there would be an impression on the mind of every suitor that his money was impounded, not so much for his own security as for the purpose of trafficking with it for State objects, and that which he new regards as a valuable protection of his interests would assume the equivocal shape of a Government speculation at his expense. This feeling would certainly be aggravated if on a close examination he became aware that part of the fund appropriated to Government purposes was a material guarantee for his own security of cash payment in the event of the funds falling below 87*l.* However remote the probability of a loss from such a fall, (though during the great war they fell very far below that value), yet I am of opinion that the suitor would feel himself aggrieved, and that his confidence in the administration of justice would be shaken, were the fund in question appropriated by the State to any general purpose, or any purpose in which he has no direct interest.

I would give, as a case analogous to that which I am now considering, the case of a charitable foundation for a school, but partly supported by the payment of a given sum of head-money annually contributed by the scholars. Assume a fund accumulated beyond the immediate necessities of the school, and the question to be, whether the accumulated fund should be applied in providing better teachers or school buildings, or in diminishing the tax of head-money in future, on the suggestion of the trustees on the one hand, or should be applied, on the application of the governors of a hospital in the town, on the other, to improve their charity. I put the case much lower than the principle asserted—namely, of absolute State control over the fund; for that would invite a suggestion of applying the accumulated school fund to the national defences or the like. I think few would hesitate to say which was the more reasonable application of the fund. A moral fitness seems to suggest that that money, contributed for the supposed necessities of the school, should not be applied to any other purpose, though no former pupil or body of pupils could assert a specific right to any portion of the accumulation. The true analysis of this feeling of moral fitness shews it, I think, to be founded on the disquiet and irritation that would be produced in all future contributors of money for school purposes after such first diversion of the fund. They would feel that they too might be constantly overcharged in order to make a profit for other purposes than the school purposes. So, when the State applies the profit of the Sutors' Fund to providing accommodation for the suitor, or to the diminution of the fees payable to the court, although the former suitors who have contributed to the fund may derive no profit from such application, (a fact not to be assumed as incontestable with regard to many of them), yet each successive body of suitors feels that the profit to be made of his money is required for his benefit, inasmuch as he would otherwise have to pay heavier fees to the same court where his money is deposited. It is no small evil to the suitor that whilst waiting for the decision of the court he cannot employ his money as he will, and he might reasonably ask to have some share at least in the profit made by its investment, even where he has not chosen to incur the risk of an investment in 3 $\frac{1}{2}$  per Cents. The court, operating on a large fund, and for long periods, is sure of its profit; the suitor, waiting in uncertainty for his fund, is afraid of having to realise it at a loss.

* Dissenting from so much of the Report as relates to the appropriation of the funds arising from the cash or fees paid by the suitors of the Court of Chancery. (See Appendix A.)

But as the Court of Chancery is not a mercantile concern, it should employ the accidental advantage it possesses in the large deposits of the aggregate body of suitors for their benefit. How can this be done better than by diminishing the fees they would otherwise have to pay?

I confess that I myself entertain a strong opinion that all courts for the administration of justice should be supported by general taxation; and that the protection of property requires that the maintenance of the civil tribunals, no less than the police and military force of the country, should be a public burthen. Hitherto, however, this principle has not been generally admitted, and the courts have more or less been supported by a tax on the suitors of each court in the shape of fees. What pretence, however, can we have for making a profit of the suitor's money, and yet charging him with fees to obtain justice?

The fees have hitherto been greatly diminished by means of this profit. This is, in my judgment, its most legitimate application; and in some twenty or thirty years, when compensations now payable for suppressed officers will fall in, I believe all fees might be abolished. The fees of court now amount to 8 $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. of the suitors' total expense of litigation—a very considerable item; but if you now take all the profit derived from the suitors' cash in order to build common-law courts, an Admiralty court, &c., and prevent the abolition of fees on Chancery proceedings, you will, in fact, levy fees on a man engaged in a Chancery suit in order to enable other persons to conduct suits more at their ease before the common-law, divorce, or Admiralty judges. If the principle of levying fees on the suitor be just, it can only be on the ground that the court sits for his benefit. But how is the Chancery suitor benefited by the better accommodation afforded to an applicant for a divorce? It is almost a humorous suggestion on the part of one witness, that many men have the misfortune of becoming litigants in every court in succession. They would at least, I think, like to wait till the misfortune occurred, rather than be taxed for such possible advantages by anticipation.

It is, however, urged, that the Legislature more than a hundred years ago imposed a tax upon proceedings at common law in order to replace the funds of the suitors in Chancery which had been lost through the insolvency of the Masters of that court; that the tax was afterwards made perpetual, and applied to the payment of officers of the Court of Chancery. To this I reply, that the State was bound to remedy the wrong done to the suitors in Chancery by the officers of a public tribunal. I do not think the means taken to redress that wrong justifiable; but at that period special taxes were raised for meeting special public charges, which would now be charged generally on the Consolidated Fund. Thus, the robbery of the City Orphan Chamber, in the time of Charles II, was made good by a tax on coals imported into London; and many other yet more objectionable cases might be cited of taxes levied for purposes singularly remote from any matter in which the taxpayer was concerned. I do not think that such a course as that of levying fees at common law to pay officers in Chancery would now meet with a single supporter in Parliament. It is suggested that a part of the very fees so levied on common-law proceedings remained unappropriated. If this portion can be now earmarked, I see no objection to its being employed in erecting the common-law courts. It is further said that suitors in Chancery will be benefited by the contiguity of the other courts, inasmuch as all business in which solicitors are employed will be better and more economically performed after a consolidation of the courts has taken place. This is the argument generally used to reconcile the taxed classes to a new tax, viz. that they will reap the benefit of it by some circuitous and indirect results. It is not, however, found to be satisfactory or convincing. The Chancery suitors would certainly prefer a reduction of 8 $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. in the cost of a Chancery suit to any speculative benefit of the nature suggested.

I think, therefore, that Parliament has justly and wisely hitherto confined the application of the profit made by the suitors' money to the benefit of the suitors in Chancery, without stopping to inquire minutely whether the suitor to be relieved be identical with the suitor whose cash produced the profit; because it thereby satisfies every successive suitor, whose money is made use of, that a profit is not made at his expense without a corresponding benefit to him; for if that profit were not applied to purposes connected with the Court of Chancery, usually paid for by fees, he would have to submit to the payment of fees for the same purposes; when, if the profit resulting from the suitors' cash be now applied to the building of common-law, Admiralty, and other courts, the fees payable in Chancery will probably have to be increased, and the suitor, already sufficiently vexed by litigation, will justly feel that a profit is in effect made by the State of his misfortune; for the State will be saved the expenditure of money by making use of the profits derived from the suitors' payments into court.

I think that on general principles of political expediency, also, much might be urged against the propriety of allowing the Chancellor of the Exchequer to look to such a source of revenue as the profitable employment of the money held in deposit for litigants. On that branch of the subject I forbear, however, to enter, and will conclude these observations by saying, that although the great weight of the contrary opinion entertained by the majority of the commissioners has pressed much upon me, I cannot help entertaining a conviction (fortified by the evidence of the Master of the Rolls and Lord Justice Turner) that the first step towards the appropriation of the Sutors' Fund to purposes unconnected with the business of the suitors would be erroneous and unjust.

W. P. Wood.

Containing all the Statutes of Practical Utility in the Civil and Criminal Administration of Justice to the Present Time. By W. N. WELSBY and EDWARD BEAVAN, Esqrs., Barristers at Law.

* In the debate on the proposed consolidation of the Statutes, on the 9th February, 1854, Lord Campbell said, "that the Statutes at Large extended to about fifty volumes folio, but all the Statutes which were usually required by lawyers for reference might be found in three octavo volumes compiled by his learned friend Mr. Welsby. When he (Lord Campbell) was upon the bench he always had this work by him, and no Statutes were ever referred to by the Bar which he could not find in it."

This important Work is continued annually, by an Edition of the Statutes, arranged on a similar plan, with a full Index, being published shortly after the close of each Session. Edited by E. BEAVAN, Esq. Five Supplements are now ready, containing the Statutes of 1854, price 9s. 6d.; 1855, price 9s. 6d.; 1856, price 6s.; 1857, price 10s. 6d.; and 1858, price 6s., sewed.

With an Appendix, containing the Common-law Procedure Act of Will. 4, the recent Acts on Evidence, the New Rules of Michaelmas Vacation, 1854, and an Introduction. By W. F. FINLASON, Esq., Barrister at Law.

"This is, in our judgment, a most excellent and carefully written book. The equity powers given to the Common-law Courts are admirably done. The views taken by Mr. Finlason of the practical bearing and operation of these acts are remarkably shrewd and suggestive. Such men, and their editions of statutes, tend very greatly to improve the laws they expound, and powerfully assist the objects of the Legislature."—Law Magazine, Feb. 1855.

"We have now before us the work of Mr. Finlason, whose previous labours in expounding other statutes entitle him to the favourable consideration of the Profession. The notes to the various new enactments are very full and valuable."—Legal Observer, Jan. 6, 1855.

SELWYN'S NISI PRIUS.—New Edition.

In 2 vols. royal 8vo., 1859, price 21. 16s. cloth.

SELWYN'S ABRIDGMENT of the LAW of NISI PRIUS. Twelfth Edition, with considerable Alterations and Additions. By DAVID POWER, Esq., one of her Majesty's Counsel, Recorder of Ipswich.

"No book has shewn by its longevity the original strength and soundness of its constitution more than Selwyn's Nisi Prius. It is one of the standard classics of the law to be found in every professional man's library in the kingdom, and the lapse of years has but proved its value and excellency. Selwyn's Abridgment of the Law of Nisi Prius has now reached its twelfth edition; and, in consequence of the very able revision, and, we may almost say, in some parts of the work, the admirable judgment and care displayed by Mr. Power in the entire reconstruction of some of the most important chapters of the work, its value is enhanced greatly—alike to the student and the practitioner in both branches of the Profession. . . . In bringing our notice of the twelfth edition of Selwyn's Nisi Prius to a close, we can assure Mr. Power that he has fully succeeded in the laborious task which he has undertaken. The whole Profession will feel that it is indebted to him for a work that is in every way deserving high praise and recommendation. A new edition of Selwyn's Nisi Prius has long been wanted by students, attorneys, and counsel, and at last we are happy to say the task has been accomplished, and a work produced that ought to be found on the shelves of every professional man's library in the kingdom."—County Courts Chronicle, July 1, 1859.

"We may be sure that a law book which passes through 'twelve editions' has been fully tested and generally approved of by the Profession. The work before us comes with this high recommendation, and has well earned its title to a renewal of its term on the ground of public utility. It is a good sound work, well conceived and well arranged—a favourite alike with the law student and the advocate in full practice. A judicious combination of old and modern law, of principles and practice, renders it very useful, as a book to be carefully studied, as a work of reference in chambers, and as a circuit companion. It is far more readable than the works which bear a similar title, and, indeed, may rather be termed a treatise upon actions at law than a mere Nisi Prius book. We thank the learned editor for having given to the Profession an excellent edition of this valuable work."—Jurist, June 4, 1859.

"On the whole, therefore, we believe that we can conscientiously recommend this new edition of a very celebrated work to our readers. It has throughout the appearance of having been worked up with much care; and Mr. Power's reputation is no slight guarantee that this industry has been generally successful."—Solicitors Journal, May 21, 1859.

"Great was the reputation of Selwyn's Nisi Prius in our young days. It was the handbook of the practitioner in office or chambers, and the authority in all the courts. The law and the practice of the law have been changed. As we have him now, Selwyn is no longer an antiquity; but, resuscitated by Power, his youth is restored, so that he combines whatever of wisdom there was in him, with the knowledge of this latter era in the world's history. Seriously, Mr. Power has reproduced Selwyn."—Law Times, June 18, 1859.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 22, 1860.

THE Report of the commissioners* appointed by her Majesty to inquire as to the expediency of bringing together into one place or neighbourhood all the superior courts, with their various offices, will, we feel assured, be read with great interest by all members of the legal Profession, and especially by those practising within the metropolis.

The inconvenience and expense occasioned by the separation of the superior courts, now scattered about town in all directions, have long been deeply felt, and loudly complained of, both by practitioners and suitors. Numerous plans have been suggested, some by interested bodies or individuals, suggesting what they wish the public to believe would either cure, or at any rate palliate, the evils complained of. Doctors' Commons, Lincoln's-inn, and Lincoln's-inn-fields have, in turn, been pointed out or offered as admirable sites either for the whole, or at any rate some, of the superior courts. We are, however, glad to see that the commissioners have rejected these schemes, and have recommended, as a site for the superior courts and their offices, a locality which we have long since stated to be, in our opinion, by far the best for that purpose, viz. "the site bounded by Carey-street on the north, Pickett-street and the Strand on the south, Bell-yard on the east, and Clement's-inn on the west."

The associations connected with Westminster Hall no doubt will have influence with many, and have not been overlooked by the commissioners in coming to the conclusion at which they have arrived. They have, however, very wisely, in our opinion, preferred the convenience of the public and the Profession to mere sentiment, in proposing that the Courts of Common Law, following the recent example of the Courts of Chancery, should emigrate from Westminster Hall, henceforth to be exclusively dedicated to the service of Parliament. The site recommended by the commissioners has one very great advantage over all others—it is equally accessible to Lincoln's-inn and the Temple, in the former of which localities the practitioners in Chancery, in the latter the practitioners in the courts of common law, have their chambers and offices. Moreover, since the practice in the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Courts is thrown open to the whole Profession, and as the practice in bankruptcy has long been open to all, though practically, and as we think unfortunately, confined to a few, great benefit will result from the Courts of Probate, Divorce, Admiralty, and Bankruptcy being under the same roof as the superior courts of common law and equity.

Two courts only appear to be excepted from the general plan—the courts of ultimate appeal, viz. the House of Lords and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; and as the number of appeals to those tribunals is not large, and as the number of practitioners usually employed therein is small, no great amount of inconvenience may be sustained by such appeals being disposed of in the localities where they are now heard. But, at the same time, if new courts worthy of the nation are to be built on one great central site, we do not see that noble Peers or Privy Councillors would lose ought of their dignity by sitting in courts there provided for them.

Not only do the commissioners recommend that all the superior courts (with the exceptions we have mentioned) and their offices should be brought under one roof, but they also strongly, and, as we think, very rightly, urge that various accommodations, in which our present courts are miserably deficient, should be attached to each court. "It would be indispensable," they observe, "that there should be provided, simultaneously with the courts, robing-rooms for the Bar, an adequate number of consultation-rooms, and a reading-room; waiting-rooms for attorneys and jurymen in attendance; a withdrawing-room for the jury impanelled, to consider their verdict; and two waiting-rooms for the witnesses in attendance for the respective parties in the cause before the Court."

The expenditure for purchasing the site and constructing the courts proposed by the commissioners will necessarily be great, and such as, if required from the public purse, they could not reasonably hope, in the present state of our finances, to extract even from the most reckless Chancellor of the Exchequer. The commissioners, however, have suggested that there are certain funds which may with propriety be available for these purposes, "without imposing any, or, if any, only a moderate and temporary, burthen on the finances of the State."

These funds are three in number—first, "the Sutors' Fund" of the Court of Chancery, consisting of 1,291,629*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.* stock; secondly, a sum of stock arising from the accumulation of surplus fees received from suitors in Chancery, and forming part of the fund called "the Sutors' Fee Fund," amounting to 201,023*l.* 2*s.* 3*d.* stock; and, thirdly, a sum arising from the surplus fees received by the officers of the superior courts of common law, amounting to 88,254*l.* 5*s.* cash. These sums, if they can properly be applied for the purposes suggested, are certainly adequate in amount.

In order that they may justify their application, the commissioners give us a very clear history of the funds, and of the mode in which they have from time to time been accumulated until they have reached their present amount.

The majority of the commissioners are of opinion that the whole of the funds may be appropriated for the purposes of the new courts without any violation of the rights of property. The controversy, however, may be said to turn substantially upon the applicability of the Sutors' Fund, which appears to have arisen in this manner:—When money is brought into court, and the parties interested therein, either anticipating a speedy termination of their litigation, and not choosing to incur the risk of a fall in the funds, or for some other reason, or it may be from mere forgetfulness, decline or neglect to apply to the Court to have the same laid out and invested—in all such cases the money, as between the suitors and the Court, remains in the hands of the Court as so much cash, and at the termination of the litigation the exact sum so brought in is paid to the successful party, without increase or diminution. Under various acts of Parliament the Lord Chancellor has been empowered to invest in stock such portion of the suitors' cash lying unemployed in the Bank of England as exceeds what may be required to answer current demands; and it is from the profits of such investments that the Sutors' Fund arises.

The objection to the appropriation of this fund is certainly deserving of consideration, for it is suggested that the Court stands towards the suitors in the relation of trustee, and therefore, according to the well-known doctrine of equity, is not entitled to derive any profit from the investment of money the property of the suitors, who are to be considered in the light of cestui que trust.

The majority, however, of the commissioners look upon the Court rather in the light of a banker or stakeholder, and as being in such capacity entitled to the profits of the investment authorised by the Legislature, in the event of the suitors neglecting themselves to make an application for any investment. Moreover, the majority of the commissioners clearly shew that the formation of the Sutors' Fund was not the act of the Court, but the result of special legislative interference, and that the Legislature has from time to time dealt with the fruits of these investments, not for the benefit of the suitors, by directing that the income should follow the capital, and that the profits should belong to those by the employment of whose money such profits had been produced, but, on the contrary, it has from time to time applied the income of such investments to a variety of purposes of a public character—such as providing for the expenses of the Accountant-General's office, for the increase of the salaries of the Masters, for pensions and compensations for officers of the Court, and for new buildings for the transaction of the business of the Court. Moreover, as the income arising from the investments has been uniformly directed to constitute part of "the common and general cash of the suitors," and to be promiscuously used and applied to answer the purposes to which it was destined, "all traces of individuality," as the commissioners well observe, "are therefore lost, and no suitor could point to, and as it were earmark, his own cash, and affirm that such cash had been the specific subject of investment and profit." They add, moreover, what appears to us to be conclusive as to the applicability of this fund, that "between the year 1739 and the present time, cash to the amount of some hundreds of millions has been paid into and drawn out of court by suitors, and yet during the whole of that long period not one single suitor has ever received anything beyond the cash actually paid into court, or has claimed any portion of the profit to which we are referring."

Independent, then, of the question, whether the practice of the Court, founded upon the enactments referred to, is right or just in principle, we think that the funds in question may at any rate be treated as derelict, and that they could not be applied to a better public purpose, or more in accordance with the former acts of the Legislature, or more for the benefit of suitors, than in providing proper courts for the administration of justice; nor do we think the Legislature could do better than to adopt in toto the admirable suggestions of the commissioners.

At the same time we may be allowed to suggest, that at least grave doubts may be entertained whether the present practice of the Court in dealing with the money of suitors paid into court, and for the investment of which they have made no application, does not, in some instances, operate with injustice, but we have no doubt that such injustice might and ought to be remedied.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE AND THE ROAD MURDER.

Our readers are doubtless aware that in the month of June last a murder of an atrocious character was committed at Road, in Wiltshire. The subject of it was a very young child, the son of a person of the name of Samuel Saville Kent, which was taken out of its cradle during the night, and its remains were afterwards found mutilated in a water-closet, all the members of a somewhat numerous family, as well as several servants, being in the house at the time. Suspicion at first naturally fell on the female servant who slept in the same room with the deceased, but, having been brought before the local magistrates, no case appeared against her, and she was discharged. The attention of Government having been drawn to the matter, an experienced detective officer was sent from London to investigate it, and a young lady, one of the half-sisters of the deceased, was brought before the magistrates, charged with the murder, on evidence, as it appears to us, of a most flimsy kind. At all events, the magistrates seem to have been of that opinion, and she also was discharged. After this a man, in another part of the kingdom, voluntarily came forward and declared himself the murderer; but on being brought to the neighbourhood where it was committed, and examined before the magistrates there, the falsity of his self-accusation became apparent, and he was discharged; and, if we may trust the statement of a local paper, (The Sherborne Journal), instead of being dismissed from court with the contempt due to a convicted impostor and trifle with the administration of justice, was sent back to London by the magistrates, who considerably paid his fare.

As might have been expected, such a state of things has caused great excitement in Wiltshire and the neighbouring counties, and memorials have been got up appealing to Government to grant a royal commission to inquire into the affair. We subjoin that sent from Bath, together with the answer of the Secretary of State:—

“To the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

“The memorial of the mayor and other inhabitants of the city of Bath, being magistrates, clergymen, bankers, commissioned officers in her Majesty’s two services, members of the legal and medical professions, &c., sheweth,—That an extraordinary crime, and, as far as we know, a crime unique and unparalleled in the annals of this country, was committed on the 29th June last at Road, in the adjoining county of Wilts: that, as living in the immediate neighbourhood, our attention has been specially directed to it: that a miscarriage of justice has occurred through the defective manner in which the coroner’s inquest was conducted, that inquest having been closed after one sitting, without any attempt to ascertain and name the murderer: that, in consequence of this, Samuel Saville Kent, his family and household, have never been examined and cross-examined: that the condition of the doors, windows, and fastenings of the house prove that Road House was not forcibly entered from the outside during the night: that therefore the murderer was an inmate of that house, or was secreted there for the purpose, and that his accomplices before and his accessories after the fact are to be sought in that mansion: that Mr. Kent’s household are, therefore, collectively responsible for that murder, and that the innocence of no one of them is to be assumed: that nevertheless the inmates of that house have never been examined: that we, therefore, humbly pray you to grant a special commission for the investigation of this crime, as the ordinary means have entirely failed: that a special commission is an unusual procedure, but that the crime is extraordinary and unparalleled in its character and circumstances. We therefore pray you to grant such special commission.”

We wonder what notions the framers of this memorial entertain as to the power of the Crown in granting special commissions to investigate the authors of crimes of which no person in particular is accused; or with what powers they think such commissions could be armed beyond those possessed by the ordinary tribunals of the law and the justices of the peace. Physical torture to extract evidence has always in this country been prohibited by law; and, whatever may be said in favour of subjecting persons actually on their trial to the moral torture of judicial interrogation, the subjecting a whole family to such a process, on the assumption, which may or may not be well founded, that a given crime must have been committed by one or more of them, is a proceeding hitherto unknown among us. But, whatever the views of the memorialists on these subjects, the Secretary of State has returned the following sensible and constitutional answer, to the three last paragraphs of which we particularly wish to direct attention:—

“Whitehall, Sept. 3.

“Sir,—I have received and laid before Sir G. Lewis a memorial signed by yourself and many other highly respectable gentlemen of Bath and its neighbourhood, calling the attention of the Secretary of State to the murder lately committed at Road.

“You represent in this statement that the family in whose house the murder took place may be collectively responsible for it, but the individuals of which it is composed have not, in the proceedings which have taken place, been examined and cross-examined as to their complicity in that frightful transaction.

“You add, that in your opinion such an inquiry is necessary for the ends of justice, and you pray Sir George Lewis to grant a special commission for the investigation of the crime, as the ordinary means have entirely failed.

“I am directed by Sir George Lewis to inform you that he is satisfied, upon deliberate consideration of this matter, that he would not be justified in advising her Majesty to create an exceptional and extraordinary tribunal for the purpose of interrogating persons suspected of this murder.

“To supersede, in a case of this description, the established courts of justice, which are governed by well-known and carefully-defined rules, and to establish by royal authority, in their stead, a commission exercising new and arbitrary powers of examination, unknown to the English law, would be, in his opinion, highly unconstitutional, and a departure from the principles upon which this country has long been governed.

“The doctrine, that in cases of great obscurity and difficulty, like the present, on which the existing law appears at first sight to be insufficient, that law is to be strained or altogether superseded, appears to Sir G. Lewis to be of a most dangerous description.

“The rules which govern our ordinary courts are intended not only for the detection of guilt, but also for the protection of innocence from unjust accusations; and when the crime is of so grievous a nature as to excite a strong feeling of horror and indignation in the public mind, a strict adherence to those rules is absolutely necessary for the fair and impartial administration of justice.

“I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

“H. WADDINGTON.

“The Right Worshipful the Mayor of Bath.”

But although the Government have refused to comply with the unconstitutional and dangerous request of the memorialists, they have taken measures for placing the case in the hands of a local solicitor in order to be investigated de novo. It is superfluous to add, that we wish this gentleman every success; but there is no disassembling that the delay which has taken place, and the want of ability which has hitherto been displayed throughout the whole affair, have considerably added to the murderer's chances of escape.

Rebibo.

The Lawyer and his Profession. A Series of Letters to a Solicitor commencing Business. By J. ORSON SMITH.
[V. & R. Stevens & Sons, S. Sweet, and W. Maxwell.]

THIS little work is precisely what its title designates. Mr. Smith disclaims all intention of laying down rules for the higher branch of the Profession, or for solicitors of standing and experience—his observations are intended solely for young solicitors commencing business, and apparently for those who are without a connexion. We may not approve of all his suggestions, but many of them are valuable, and much useful information may be obtained from his book. Besides, we are pleased with the moral tone which pervades it.

Thus Mr. Smith states what, in his opinion, constitutes the essential difference between a trade and a profession, as follows:—

"In the former a man has simply to consider—of course, consistently with honesty—the best way of securing large profits to himself; whereas a man should enter the latter with the consciousness that his own profit, though his immediate object, is to be a secondary consideration, his first being always the advantage of those who place their confidence in him. This will hold good of all the three learned professions. No one, I think, will doubt that it is true of the law; certainly it is true of the church and of physic." This may require some little qualification, but the notion seems just in the main.

Again, on the subject of "charging:"—"You will find sufficient difficulty in arriving at the 'happy medium' in charging. . . . It is not very easy to make a fair and reasonable charge, and at the same time to satisfy your client, who expects something more—cheapness, in short. If the truth were told, it is mainly because it is thought that a young lawyer will do business more cheaply than the older members of the profession that he ever gets any business to do at all. A young solicitor is, I think, perfectly justified in getting all the business he can by obtaining a reputation for being moderate in his charges. But it is not well to go too far in this respect; you have, morally, no right to sell an article at less than its real value, to the prejudice of your neighbour who is exercising the same calling as yourself; by doing so, you lead the purchaser to believe that the same article is to be everywhere had at the price which he has paid you for it. . . . The best advice, in short, which I can give you is to do your work thoroughly well, and to charge for it moderately, not looking so much at the fees to which you may be actually entitled, as at the extent of the benefit your client has received from your services, and the amount of value involved in the business done. Your object should be to let your client feel that he has been well advised, well served, and conscientiously and reasonably charged."

So, in the letter on "giving advice," the soundness of the following will, we think, be at once recognised:—

"You are bound to advise your client to such a course as will most conduce, in your opinion, to his interests. . . . A man heated with passion will tell you a tale of woe and wrong sufficient to fire you with righteous indignation at the conduct of the villain who is stated to have injured him. As a man of business, however, and as one professing to be peculiarly qualified to give your client the best advice under the circumstances, your duty is not to be fired with indignation at all; and it is scarcely necessary to remind you that in all probability the 'villain' is pouring out the vials of his wrath against your client to some other solicitor, who is duly informed that your client is the concentrated essence of all that is base and rascally. Of course I am supposing rather an extreme case, but yet by no means a very uncommon one. Few men have the self-command and the good sense to remember—if they ever heard it—Lord Macaulay's excellent observation, that 'scarcely any quarrel ever happens in which the right and wrong are so exquisitely balanced that all the right lies on one side, and all the wrong on the other.' . . . Do not think I would seek to chill and deaden all your best feelings; nothing is further from my thoughts; but I would earnestly caution you against letting these influence you in a direction which will be prejudicial at once to your client's interests, and to your own success in life."

PRISONS AND PRISONERS.

We take the following from The Times of the 17th August, 1860:—

"The annual reports of the Directors of Convict Prisons in England have been issued—documents necessarily of much interest now that the Penal Servitude Act retains in this country large bodies of convicts who were formerly sent abroad. Of course, these reports do not touch the county and borough prisons, in which there were at the latest return (Michaelmas last) 16,674 prisoners. During the twelvemonth 126,861 persons had been committed to those gaols, but many of them for short periods and slight offences, there being not a few who were afterwards acquitted, and 15,120 who were but debtors; and it is satisfactory to have to add that the average number of prisoners shewed a decrease, the re-committals of the same prisoners were fewer, the proportion of juvenile offenders decreased, and the punishments for prison offences diminished in a greater degree than the prison population. It is of the worst, most depraved, and most dangerous of this class that the Convict Prisons Reports treat—those who are sentenced to penal servitude, and removed from these local gaols to Government prisons to undergo their sentence, first in separated confinement, and then in associated labour. There were 11,007 prisoners in the convict prisons of England at one time or other in the year 1859; the number at the beginning of the year was 8115, and at its close 8122, and of this last number 1188 were women. In the course of the year 224 of the men were transported to Western Australia, 421 were sent to labour at the public works of Gibraltar and Bermuda, and 215 men and 20 women were released under orders of license, or, as they used to be called, tickets of leave. No less than 1837 were set at liberty in consequence of the expiration of their sentence. While in separate confinement the convicts are employed in work, and instruction is given to them—many learn there for the first time to read; they meet at school, at chapel, and in exercise, but are punished if they communicate with one another, the punishment being generally a dark cell and punishment diet. At Millbank the women made last year 43,728 shirts for a city firm, without a single rejection. In the next stage the men are employed on public works at Portland, Portsmouth, or Chatham, where they work ten hours a day when there is light enough, but are allowed half a day's schooling in the week. Endeavours are made to educate them sufficiently to qualify them for useful situations, and the effort is appreciated. They are divided into classes, according to character and conduct; and in the last few months of their time men of exemplary prison character are placed in posts of some confidence, without any immediate supervision over them. Some small gratuities may be earned by diligence, to accumulate against the day of discharge, being then paid with precautions. Those who are only fit for light labour are sent to Dartmoor Prison, which is in a highly oxygenised and bracing spot; and convicts unfit for labour have been hitherto sent to Lewes Invalid Prison, now merging in the new prison at Woking. A considerable number of these last improve in health sufficiently to be draughted to Dartmoor. In speaking of the diet allowed them, the surgeon notes that the men most difficult to please are from the vagrant class, or from the lowest grades of society. From all these convict prisons the reports are satisfactory. The convicts behave in an orderly manner, and work well. The maintenance of such good order is, in a great measure, attributed to the system of remitting a considerable part of the sentence to well-conducted, industrious men, who appear likely to endeavour to earn an honest livelihood on their discharge. As for the question whether there is any real reformation wrought, it seems to be considered that of the regular habitual thieves there is little hope—their reformation, as Mr. S. Redgrave says, is as difficult a task to themselves as to their teachers. The experienced chaplain of Millbank Prison classifies the convicts received there in 1859 thus:—61 per cent. (869) were professional thieves, following crime as a business; 25 per cent. (304) were careless profligates, but not hardened men; 6 per cent. (89) were occasional offenders, on the whole working honestly for their living, but committing a dishonest act when a favourable opportunity occurs; the remaining 8 per cent. (108) were comparatively respectable, but had resorted to a crime to extricate themselves from difficulties, generally caused by their not having had sufficient self-denial to live within their means. Of all but the regular thieves he has hope that, with few exceptions, they leave the prison better men than when they came, and with sufficient right principle to prevent their relapsing into crime. Of the lads at Parkhurst the governor reports that in no one of the sixteen years during which he has had charge of that prison was the conduct of the inmates so satisfactory; it has been marked by order, obedience, and cheerful industry. The Directors of Convict Prisons consider that this section of the juvenile population is gradually yielding under the influence of ragged school teaching, district visiting, and the juvenile reformatory movement of the last few years. Of the female convicts (at Brixton and Fulham) the report is, that ‘they are generally in extremes.’ The most troublesome are young women who know that their ill-health will shield them from punishment. But no extent of punishment could ever keep some of them in order. Their perverse depravity makes their cases appear, humanly speaking, hopeless. These cases, however, are few. Among many at Brixton, and more generally at Fulham, (to which the best conducted are sent for final training), there is a strong desire to lead an honest life. Efforts are made to inspire them with self-respect, enable them to break off strongly-rooted evil habits, and take a lively interest in their work, with a desire to turn it to a good account hereafter. Two-thirds of the women discharged from Fulham refuge in 1859 got into situations where they were likely to do well, and were at the end of the year going on satisfactorily. Both to men and women the Discharged Prisoners’ Aid Society is rendering most important service at a most critical season. But any attempt to trace prisoners for a length of time in after life interferes with their object of hiding their disgrace and merging in society. A suggestion made by the chaplain of Parkhurst raises a grave question; he considers that, as there is a system of liberating before the time, there should also be a discretionary power to detain after the time. It can do no good to release such men as one of whom we are here told, who said plainly, ‘It’s not likely I’ll work for 15s. a week when I can get pounds.’ But, at all events with very many, much improvement is now effected by prison discipline and teaching. The prisoners are treated fairly, with consideration and humanity, often with great judgment; they have no just ground of complaint; they are accustomed to regular habits and self-restraint, and have held out to them every encouragement to good conduct and industry. Such seed will surely bring some harvest.”

The Chief Justice of the Common Pleas has appointed Mr. T. W. Erle, now Registrar of Certificates and Affidavits of Acknowledgments, to be Associate of the Common Pleas, in the room of Mr. John Jervis, deceased. The Chief Justice has also appointed Mr. W. Morgan Bennett a Master of the Court, in the room of Mr. John H. Cancellor, deceased.—Observer.

BOW-STREET POLICE COURT.—We have to announce the decease of David Jardine, Esq., one of the magistrates of this court, and recorder of Bath. Mr. Jardine was called to the bar in 1823, and was the author of “A Reading on the Use of Torture in England,” and some other works.

STARKIE'S LAW OF EVIDENCE.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE on the LAW of EVIDENCE. By THOMAS STARKIE, Esq. Fourth Edition, with very considerable alterations and additions; incorporating the Statutes and reported Cases to the time of publication. By G. M. DOWDESWELL and J. G. MALCOLM, Esqrs., Barristers at Law. In 1 vol. royal 8vo., 1853, price 1*l.* 16*s.* cloth.

"Fortunately for the Profession, the new edition has been intrusted to gentlemen, of whom one is well known, not only as a ripe and accomplished lawyer, (doctrinæ malidus), but as a judicious editor, knowing how to withhold as well as how to apply his hand. Amid the present plague of reports mere industry is not sufficient to qualify even a second-rate editor. . . . It is evident that the editors have not been blinded by their respect for the author, but have altered, corrected, and amended wherever they have seen occasion. Such a course could not be pursued safely upon a small stock of learning or of judgment; and in our opinion it has been pursued, not only with safety, but with manifest advantage to the book; so that the fourth edition of Starkie is to the existing law what the first edition was to the law in 1824. . . . We wish we had some means of identifying Mr. Malcolm's portions of the work. As it is, being hitherto unknown in authorship, he must be content with the praise of having borne a part where all was good."—Jurist.

"It is also the only work of which a new edition has been brought out at such a time as to render it possible that it should apply to practice, with any degree of consideration and accuracy, the modern changes in the law. . . . We think the editors will have gone far towards restoring the admirable work of Mr. Starkie to its original character of the best work on the law of evidence which has yet been produced."—Legal Observer.

UNCONDITIONAL ASSURANCE ON LIFE.
THE LIFE ASSOCIATION of SCOTLAND has adopted a NEW SCHEME of "UNCONDITIONAL ASSURANCE," which entirely obviates the objections to the ordinary system of other offices.

Omission to pay a Premium by oversight does not affect the Assurance, and, after a time, payment may be intentionally postponed for a year.

The Assured is not subject to any restriction as to Occupation or Residence; and NO EXTRA PREMIUMS can ever be payable.

The ASSURANCE is virtually Non-forfeitable and Unquestionable.

The POLICY-HOLDER, on surrendering his Policy, can withdraw a fixed and unusually large proportion of his payments, or take a paid-up policy for double the amount; or he may withdraw the same sum as a Loan, and still continue the Policy.

So complete and satisfactory a system of Unconditional Assurance is not to be found in the arrangements of any other Assurance Office. Explanatory Pamphlets may be had on application.

ENTRANTS to the PROFIT CLASS on or before the 5TH DECEMBER NEXT will secure ONE YEAR'S BONUS more than will be allocated to later entrants.

The LIFE ASSOCIATION of SCOTLAND was founded in 1838, and has issued upwards of THIRTEEN THOUSAND POLICIES for Life Assurances, amounting to nearly SIX MILLIONS STERLING. The ANNUAL INCOME is upwards of 160,000L. The Policies under the original Scheme have also for many years been unusually free from restrictions and imperfections, and the Assured have received large benefits. The Prospectuses of this Scheme also may be had on application.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 29, 1860.

Among the bills which were brought into Parliament during the last session, but failed in passing into law, is one introduced into the House of Lords by Lord Chelmsford to carry out, in a modified form, a theory which has prevailed for some time among a certain school of law reformers—that grand juries are a useless and injurious appendage to our criminal courts. In furtherance of this view, two bills for their almost total abolition within the metropolitan districts were introduced into the House of Commons by that learned Lord when Sir Frederick Thesiger, which, however, failed of success; although it is not improbable that the discussions on them gave rise, in some measure, to a salutary statute—the Vexatious Indictments Act, to which we shall advert presently.

The principle involved in these bills was, whether the grand jury ought to be abolished as bad in principle; or whether, supposing the objections taken to it to be not altogether groundless, they are such as could be removed by judicious measures of reform; or, even if this could not be effected, whether they are not overborne by the inherent advantages of the system.

The institution of the grand jury rests on three principles—first, that no man ought to be subjected to the inconvenience, danger, and odium of a public trial for any serious offence by the mere action of the officers of the Crown, or of any tribunal appointed by it—a salutary guard to the liberty of the subject; secondly, that every subject has a right to bring a criminal to justice, whether the so doing be agreeable or otherwise to the Executive; thirdly, the placing in the hands of a number of persons taken from the upper classes among the people a right, by presentment, of their own knowledge, to bring to the notice of the Executive and of society the existence of any evils or abuses within the district where they reside, even though neither the Executive nor an individual has founded, or perhaps could legally found, proceedings upon them. The constitutional functions of the grand jury are well described by the present Common Serjeant (Mr. Thomas Chambers) in a paper read by him before the Juridical Society in December, 1858, the perusal of the whole of which we strongly recommend to our readers.

“When a conflict is going on between prerogative and liberty, between popular rights and the power of the Crown, or when some obnoxious law is sought to be enacted or repealed, at such times the press and the people are both stimulated to unwonted activity and energy, and the liberty of speaking and printing is taken full advantage of. The popular passions find vent and voice at great public meetings, where vehement speeches are made, strong resolutions passed, strong memorials and petitions adopted. All this is done roughly—sometimes even fiercely; much that is unwise, much that is unjust, much that is untrue, is uttered and believed. Authority becomes provoked, and attempts measures of repression; and it commonly begins by selecting the most prominent and noisy exponents of the popular will as the subjects of indictment for seditious or treasonable libel; or it goes lower, and apprehends the most violent members of a mob, and charges them with seditious tumult and riot. Or the Government may resort to more extreme measures—may call in the aid of the military, and the blood of the people may be spilt on the scene of some immense gathering; and then, in all probability, the criminal law will be invoked on both sides—the Government arming itself with indictments against individuals for sedition or treason; the people defending themselves with indictments against officers and soldiers for manslaughter or murder. In such crises as these the grand jury has, over and over again, rendered invaluable service: the subject has been protected by them in the fullest exercise of his right to demand (though clamorously) the redress of his grievances; the Crown has been vindicated in its constitutional efforts to repress sedition and insurrection. The force of the shock is broken when order and liberty meet in these their rudest conflicts. The bitterness of the strife is allayed, when the rulers and the populace are in angry collision with each other, by a court so constituted as to have sympathies with both parties, and fitted, therefore, to act as mediator between them. The harshness of authority is mitigated by its acting through such an organ; the lawless impulses of the disaffected subside when they have the opportunity of appeal to a proper tribunal. The scene of conflict is thus shifted from tavern halls and open commons to the arenas of justice. Both parties change the weapons of their warfare—both appeal to the law. The demagogue stops his inflammatory harangue to advise with his lawyer; the Government recalls its troops and instructs the Attorney-General. The result of this is, that the greatest political questions come on for discussion in our criminal courts, and come on under circumstances very favourable for their correct solution. By ignoring a bill, the grand jury, in sympathy with a people oppressed, calmly rebukes the Crown—by finding a bill, they tranquilly coerce the lawlessness and violence of the mob; they stand midway between the opposing parties, and avert a direct shock; they save the authorities from a more mortifying defeat by stopping their proceedings in limine; they save liberty from discredit by chastising its excesses by the law; and they accomplish all these purposes better than any other tribunal which could be devised to replace them.

“But the grand jury not only interposes a shield between the Crown and the subject to protect the latter from the oppression of power; it gives to him also a weapon wherewith he may assail the organs and ministers of prerogative, for he may go with his bill of indictment before that court, and accuse of malversation, or undue rigour, or dishonesty, or injustice in the execution of his functions, any officer of the Government; and may succeed in putting the accused on his public trial at a time when it might be difficult to find a Crown-appointed magistrate, sitting in open court, willing to place himself in an attitude of hostility to the authorities, by holding the accused person to bail. Were this right withdrawn the subject might become impatient and irritated beyond endurance by petty acts of extortion or harshness, for which the law offered him no adequate redress; were this liability removed, those in places of authority might be encouraged to misdeemean themselves in their office.”

Let us now see what are the arguments used against grand juries by the school of law reformers to which we have alluded. First, they argue against the system generally, that this institution was, or at least with the progress of time has become, valueless, and if so, an hindrance to the administration of justice; that the secrecy of the tribunal renders it irresponsible; that it furnishes facilities for fraud and oppression, by giving an opportunity to a wicked person to go before a secret tribunal, and, without notice to the party accused, to get a bill of indictment found against him, which, whether true or false, may be used as an engine of extortion—further proceedings being abandoned if the prosecutor can be bribed—so that justice is defeated if the defendant be guilty, or an infamous wrong is inflicted upon him if he be innocent. In support of this, Sir F. Theigier assured the House of Commons, when introducing one of his bills, that some old women were almost frightened out of their senses at the apprehension of bills of indictment being preferred against them. And, with respect to metropolitan grand juries in particular, it is further urged, that all cases of alleged crime are so well sifted by the police magistrates as to render all further preliminary investigation wholly needless.

In answer to the last of these arguments, it is to be observed, that, so far as the constitutional functions of the grand jury are concerned, it is impossible to take a distinction between metropolitan and provincial districts. However excellent the metropolitan police magistrates may be, still they are the servants of the Crown, and as such ~~not~~ the proper persons to decide a question which the constitution has wisely entrusted to the people. Nay, more, the entrusting such a power to them would be sure in time to work their deterioration, by holding out a temptation to the Executive to appoint to those offices persons in whom the sense of justice and constitutional freedom were not strong. As to the secrecy of the tribunal, it is one of its advantages, in many cases at least; and the proposal to abolish it on this account amounts to saying, that in no case ought proceedings to be taken to bring a criminal to justice without first giving him notice of the intention, and consequently an opportunity to escape condemnation by flight. And although the first of the above arguments has considerable foundation in fact, the remedy for the evil consists, not in abolishing the grand jury, but in taking security from persons preferring bills before them to go on with the prosecution if the bills are found, and perhaps also by strengthening the law against groundless prosecutions. There is a good precedent for the former of these, which existed at the time Sir F. Theigier first attempted to abolish the grand jury. Formerly any person might file a criminal information in the Queen's Bench for a misdemeanour against any other, and such informations were frequently resorted to as a means of extorting money; (see Arch. Crown Office Prac. 17); but the abuse was effectually put a stop to by the 4 & 5 Will. & M. c. 18, which enacts, “The Clerk of the Crown in the King's Bench shall not, without express orders given by the Court, in open court, receive or file any information for a misdemeanour, before he shall have taken or shall have delivered to him a recognisance from the person procuring such information to be exhibited, in the penalty of 20*l.*, conditioned to prosecute such information with effect.” And the Legislature last year acted on this principle in the Vexatious Indictments Act, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, which contains the following important provisions:—

By sect. 1 no bill of indictment for certain offences shall be presented to or found by any grand jury, unless the prosecutor or other person presenting such indictment has been bound by recognisance to prosecute or give evidence against the person accused of such offence, or unless the person accused has been committed to or detained in custody, or has been bound by recognisance to appear to answer to an indictment to be preferred against him for such offence, or unless such indictment for such offence be preferred by the direction or with the consent in writing of a judge of one of the superior courts of law at Westminster, or of her Majesty's Attorney-General or Solicitor-General, or (in the case of an indictment for perjury) by the direction of any court, judge, or public functionary authorised by the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, to direct a prosecution for perjury.

By sect. 2, if a charge or complaint is made of any of those offences, and a justice of the peace refuses to commit or hold the party to bail, if the prosecutor desires to prefer an indictment the justice may take his recognisance.

This statute extends to the following offences, and it may well be a question whether it might not be beneficially extended to many others, and perhaps even to all bills of indictment not really prosecuted by the Executive:—Perjury, subornation of perjury, compracy, obtaining money or other property by false pretences, keeping a gambling-house, keeping a disorderly house, and any indecent assault.

But, notwithstanding the precedent supplied by the 4 & 5 Will. & M. c. 13, the failure of his two former bills, and the passing of the Vexatious Indictments Act, Lord Chelmsford, in the House of Lords, did not lose sight of the idea cherished by him as Sir F. Thesiger in the House of Commons. Still impressed with the notion of the inutility of the metropolitan grand juries, he brought in a bill "to make better provision concerning the procedure against persons charged with indictable offences within the metropolitan district," under which modest and unpretending title is concealed, though in a diluted form, the vicious principle we have been discussing. This bill passed the House of Lords, but not the House of Commons. It provided, that after a person had been committed to take his trial by a metropolitan police magistrate, an information, to have the effect of the finding of a grand jury, should be filed in lieu of an indictment. But, evidently pressed by the weight of the arguments used against his former attempts at legislation upon this object, there was a clause empowering the prosecutor to prefer an indictment in the event of the magistrate dismissing the charge; thus placing the prosecutor in the odious and difficult position of pressing a charge that had been rejected by a magistrate—a topic sure to be urged to a tribunal with most mischievous effect by the accused and his counsel. Pressed also by the constitutional objection, there was likewise a proviso that nothing therein contained should apply to "any charge of treason or misprision of treason, or of any other offence against her Majesty, the State, or the Government; nor to any charge of any nuisance to any highway, bridge, or river, or of any nuisance affecting the safety or health of any of her Majesty's subjects." The first clause of this sentence is evidently framed on the assumption, that if an offence is against the State or Government, that fact must appear on the face of the proceedings in the first instance, and can neither lurk under a charge of an offence apparently of a different character, or be developed in the course of the proceedings. As already stated, this bill did not pass into law.

The attack on the grand jury system in our day, as observed by the Common Serjeant in the paper already quoted, is a signal example of a tendency which some time back was more active than at present. "The distinguishing feature," he remarks, "of our English administrative system, both civil and criminal, is its popular element. The distinguishing feature of all our modern changes of it is the introduction of a professional and official element. . . . The effect of our modern reforms has been to withdraw the people from the tribunals, and replace them by officials—to have more judges and fewer juries."

"Narrow reasons, plausible enough—special objections, not without weight—may be assigned as the ground of changes which may have wider consequences than the reformer contemplates. Cheapness and speed may be attained at a cost incalculable. My own opinion certainly is, that the stream of justice is not only more picturesque, but more useful, and more fresh and wholesome, when it winds, perhaps slowly, between devious but natural banks, than when it rushes through professional and official conduits, where it not only loses a grace, but may contract a hardness."

We trust that, with the failure of Lord Chelmsford's bill of 1860, we have witnessed the last attempt to overturn one of the most ancient and valuable institutions of the country; and that such attempts will be replaced by sound and well-considered measures to increase the efficiency of the grand jury, by the removal of whatever either was objectionable in its original constitution, or, through lapse of time or altered circumstances, has become injurious at the present day.

REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS ON MERCHANT SHIPPING.

THE Report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons, which was appointed to inquire into the state of merchant shipping, the operation of the burthens and restrictions especially affecting merchant shipping, and of the following statutes—the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, (an Act for compensating the Families of Persons killed by Accidents); the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854; the Merchant Shipping Amendment Act, 1855; the Passenger Act, 1855; and the Chinese Passenger Act, 1855—is a very important document, to the principal parts of which we propose to draw attention.

The following are the subjects to which it relates:—

1. Navigation laws.
2. Belligerent rights at sea.
3. Liability of shipowners.
4. Light dues.
5. Ballast.
6. Pilotage.
7. Local charges and passing tolls.
8. Recent legislation.
9. Merchant Shipping Act and shipping offices.
10. Passenger Act and Chinese Passenger Act.
11. Stamp duties.

For the 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th of these we refer our readers to the Report itself, and now proceed to the consideration of the remainder.

1. Navigation Laws.

This portion of the Report is of a political and social rather than a legal character. It will be sufficient to transcribe the following passages:—

"The policy of the repeal of the Navigation Laws, and of the expediency of reconsidering that much-contested measure, has been prominently brought under the notice of your committee; but whatever may have been the complaints preferred against the policy of the repeal of these laws in its general tendency, not one of the witnesses examined before your committee has proposed to recur, in its entirety, to the restrictive system which prevailed previously to 1850. Some witnesses, anxious to find a remedy for the present distress, go so far as to enunciate the principle of making a reservation to British ships of our colonial trade, and advocate the re-establishment of a monopoly of the carrying trade to and from all our colonial possessions. But the present extent, diversified interests, and increasing power of our possessions abroad offer insuperable obstacles to the re-imposition of restrictions on their trade; and the growing independent feelings of our colonists would revolt against a system which would place the grower of British plantation sugar and coffee in the West Indies at a greater disadvantage than at present exists, especially as against the producer of slave-grown sugar and coffee in Brazil and Cuba. A serious proposal to revert to an exclusive colonial system of navigation, the grievance which led mainly to the separation from England of the vast territory constituting the United States, might endanger the tenure of our other possessions, now growing every day more and more powerful. Your committee, therefore, looking especially to our relations with Canada, our possessions in the East and West Indies, and, above all, in Australia, think it their duty unhesitatingly to declare their opinion that any proposal, having for its object to re-establish an exclusive monopoly of the carrying trade to and from our colonial possessions, must, both on political and commercial grounds, be rejected as impracticable; and that while it would be unjust to our fellow-subjects in the colonies, it might embroil us with foreign powers, to whom we are bound by existing treaties.

"The question, however, of the expediency of requiring foreign powers having colonial possessions to reciprocate every advantage to our navigation which Great Britain has accorded unconditionally to them, is one which demands peculiar attention. The British shipowners, who carry on the present restricted and scarcely tolerated intercourse with the colonies of France, Spain, and Portugal, find their ships placed at an immense disadvantage in the unequal competition which they have to encounter, while they have the mortification to see foreign ships resort to our own colonies, and secure much higher freights than our own ships when chartered to a port in Europe.

"Your committee still hope that, through the representations of our diplomatic agents, the European States which hesitate to reciprocate a liberal system of navigation may be induced to yield to our friendly demands, in order to avoid the possibility of having recourse to any measures which may bear even the appearance of loosening the ties of amity which now subsist.

"As regards the Government of the United States, your committee feel deeply disappointed that they have not taken a more liberal course in regard to their coasting trade. The expectations entertained that the United States Government would yield the point now contended for, provided we ceded our coasting trade to American vessels, have resulted in disappointment. So strong is this feeling, that it has been pressed upon the attention of your committee from various quarters, that as the Americans did not possess any colonies, and consequently gave no equivalent in return for the cession of our colonial trade to them, and that as the trade from the eastern coast of the United States to California, either by way of Panama or round Cape Horn, has no analogy to that which is deemed a coasting trade, we ought to have no hesitation in excluding the ships of the United States from our colonial carrying trade, with a view to bring their shipowners to a juster sense of what is due to our friendly reclamations.

"But, though your committee are not prepared to recommend the adoption of this course, they are of opinion that the unremitting attention of her Majesty's Government should be directed to this important question, with a view to remove, if possible, the last and only obstruction to a more free and unrestricted commercial and maritime intercourse between the United States and this country."

2. Belligerent Rights at Sea.

This part of the Report we give in extenso:—

"The question of belligerent rights at sea, with reference to merchant shipping, affects alike the British shipowner in the prosecution of his business, and the general interests of Great Britain, and therefore the evidence given on the subject has received from your committee that attention which its gravity demands.

"Great Britain formerly asserted principles of the law of nations with reference to the rights of belligerents and neutrals, though other nations defended maxims in some points differing from our own*.

"But in the war with Russia in 1854, England having formed an alliance with France, both nations waived their rights to confiscate enemy's goods on board neutral ships, as also neutral goods, in either case, not contraband of war, found on board an enemy's ship.

This mutual but provisional waiver of belligerent rights placed the allies in harmonious action, and practically countenanced the principle that 'free ships make free goods.' Upon the return of peace, the Declaration of Paris, of April, 1856, signed by Austria, France, Great Britain, Prussia, Russia, Sardinia, and Turkey, gave a formal sanction to this principle. Privateering was also abolished.

"America was invited to be a party to this general international agreement, but demurred, and coupled at first her assent to the abolition of privateering with the condition that private property at sea should no longer be subject to capture. Finally, she refused to be a party to a convention whereby she would be precluded from resorting to her merchant marine for privateering purposes in case she became a belligerent. But this is not surprising, for the United States has obtained recognition of the rights of neutrals for which she contended throughout a former period of hostilities; and Great Britain has surrendered her rights without any equivalent from the United States. Our shipowners will thereby be placed at an immense disadvantage in the event of a war breaking out with any important European power. In fact, should the Declaration of Paris remain in force, during a period of hostilities, the whole of our carrying trade would be inevitably transferred to American and other neutral bottoms.

"From the evidence given by various witnesses, it appears that at a recent period, upon a mere rumour of war in Europe, in which it was apprehended that Great Britain might be involved, American and other neutral ships received a decided preference in being selected to carry produce from distant parts of the world to ports in Europe, whereby, even in a period of peace, British shipowners were seriously prejudiced. It seems, therefore, that the state of international law, with reference to belligerent rights affecting merchant shipping, cannot remain in its present state; for whilst England may be involved in any great European war, the United States is almost certain to be neutral; and thus our great maritime rival would supplant us in the carrying trade.

"We must therefore either secure the general consent of all nations to establish the immunity of merchant ships and their cargoes from the depredations of both privateers and armed national cruisers during hostilities, or we must revert to the maintenance of our ancient rights, whereby, relying upon our maritime superiority, we may not merely hope to guard un molested our merchant shipping in the prosecution of their business, but may capture enemies' goods in neutral ships, and thus prevent other nations from seizing the carrying trade of the kingdom during a state of hostilities.

"Your committee consider it their duty to call the attention of your Honourable House to the great importance of this question, which, if not solved during a period of peace, may cause incalculable embarrassment at the outbreak of a war. It is doubtless the prerogative of the Crown to initiate proper measures to maintain the honour and guard the interests of the country in this respect. Your committee, however, cannot but express their opinion that a compact like the Declaration of Paris, to which a great maritime power has refused to be a party, may, in the event of hostilities, produce complications highly disastrous to British interests. As matters stand, England is under all the disadvantages of the want of reciprocal pledges on the part of the United States to refrain from privateering, or from the attempt to break a blockade, which, as heretofore, a sense of self-preservation might compel Great Britain to establish; while powers so unpunished, urged by every motive of self-interest, would be in a position to inflict the deepest injury upon British interests, under the same unjustifiable pretences as were put forth during the war at the commencement of the present century.

"Your committee have thought it their duty thus briefly to point out to your Honourable House the present unsatisfactory position of this question as it immediately affects British merchant shipping. They have done so in the confidence that the whole subject will receive due attention in that quarter where the responsibility rests of taking such measures, in concurrence with foreign powers, as may place the present international regulations on a better footing. Your committee are aware that grave objections have been urged by high authorities against any further step in advance; but they cannot close this brief comment on so important a question without expressing a hope that your Honourable House will agree with them in the opinion, that in the progress of civilisation, and in the cause of humanity, the time had arrived when all private property, not contraband of war, should be exempt from capture at sea. Your committee are of opinion that Great Britain is deeply interested in the adoption of this course. This country has at all times a much larger amount of property afloat than any other nation, and consequently requires a very large naval force to protect her merchant shipping, perhaps at a time when the whole of our ships of war may be urgently wanted to defend our shores."

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 6, 1860.

In our last number we referred to a bill introduced into the House of Lords by Lord Chelmsford in the session of Parliament which has recently expired, in name, "to make better provision concerning the procedure against persons charged with indictable offences within the metropolitan district," but in reality a step towards the abolition of grand juries in this country—a project which a certain school of law reformers among us have long had so much at heart. We also mentioned, that although the above bill passed the House of Lords, it was unsuccessful in the House of Commons; and took occasion to observe, that the attack on the grand jury system in our day is a signal example of a tendency in that school to eliminate as much as possible the popular element from our administrative system, and replace it by the introduction of a professional and official element—to have more judges and fewer juries. Since the publication of that number a fresh and striking illustration of this tendency has been supplied by the speech of the Lord Advocate of Scotland, at Glasgow, to a meeting of the "National Association for the Promotion of Social Science." Among the other subjects discussed by that body, "jurisprudence" holds a conspicuous place; and the learned Lord we have mentioned made a long address, in which he suggested large and numerous alterations in the law, to one of which we now wish to direct attention. Speaking of the system of coroners' inquests, he said*, "If a coroner's inquest is intended for the protection of the subject—if it is intended for the purpose of taking care that the cases shall be investigated and examined—I think that object may be attained without the necessity of importing so large and wide a system from England. For my own part, I believe that in nowhere in Europe is crime more uniformly investigated or more efficiently detected than it is with us. But if a coroner's inquest is wished in order to detect crime—if the object is to ascertain and detect occult and latent crimes—I then say I would object to exchange a most efficient and philosophical machine for a very rough and doubtful one; because if you are only dealing with the detection of the crime, can any man doubt that inquiry which is not public is the best and most efficient mode of detecting it? If you are to send a detective down to a remote county to ascertain the truth as to some act that had been committed in private, you would hardly put an advertisement in the newspaper that you had done so, and you would scarcely tell him, on his arrival, to proclaim at the market cross what he wanted. Quite the contrary, and there can be no doubt that the quiet investigation which goes on in the Crown Office in Scotland is infinitely better adapted to detect facts than the investigation which takes place before a coroner's inquest, which gives warning to the guilty, which throws suspicion upon the innocent, and which for the most part, though it has served its turn nobly as the protection of England against arbitrary power—for the most part I believe not really to be conducive to the detection of the more secret and difficult crimes. But there is another object—another result which our system accomplishes, which the coroner's inquest is greatly against—I mean the protection of the innocent. I am not at this moment saying that the coroner's inquest should be abandoned in England. It is consonant to the feelings of the English people, and has been productive of good in England. I am only comparing it with our own system, and I say that any man who has experience of the Crown Office work in Scotland will admit that it is good for the detection of crime; it is very potent in the protection of the innocent—in preventing false rumours from getting afloat—in discouraging false accusation—in preventing colourable appearances from being tortured by the public gossip into accusations of crime. For all these things I would deprecate the introduction into Scotland of the system of coroners' inquests as it exists in England, leading sometimes as it may to the unhappy man, who is thrown into circumstances of suspicion, having the finger of scorn pointed at him during all his days, and those who hear the accusation may never hear the refutation."

The first observation that suggests itself on the perusal of this is, why is it that the Lord Advocate does not propose the abolition of the coroner's jury? Surely, if the effect of it be what he describes—to facilitate the escape of criminals from justice, and to expose innocent persons to imputations of guilt which may cling to them for life, and that these consequences necessarily flow from the publicity of its proceedings—the sooner it is abolished the better. In the second place, it is remarkable, that while for several years past continual and furious attacks have been made in England on the grand jury because it is a secret tribunal, and that it is iniquitous to proceed against a man behind his back, the coroner's jury is attacked by the Lord Advocate of Scotland because it is a public one. But, in truth, there is no analogy between them in this respect, and our law does perfectly right in constituting the former a secret and the latter a public tribunal. When the grand jury is called on to act, there is a person suspected of crime, and the giving him notice that a tribunal is sitting, to determine whether he shall be put on his trial for it, would in many instances be a mere notice to him to disappear with all possible expedition. In the coroner's court, on the other hand, no person is accused of crime—in reality, none may have been committed; it is an inquiry which the law directs to be held when any citizen has come to a violent or sudden end, in order to ascertain whether that phenomenon arose in the ordinary course of nature, or was the result of inevitable accident, or the offspring of suicide or homicide. The importance of such a tribunal as a protection to human life has in general been obvious enough to Englishmen; and we have now the testimony of the Lord Advocate of Scotland, the general character of whose speech shews him a most unfriendly witness in the matter, that the coroner's inquest has been "productive of good in England," where "it has served its turn nobly as the protection of England against arbitrary power." He deprecated, however, its introduction into Scotland—a matter on which we shall not presume to contradict him, as the learned Lord doubtless understands the institutions of Scotland and his own countrymen far better than we can pretend to do.

We do not propose at present to shew in detail the important services rendered to society by the institution of the coroner's inquisition, and will merely advert to one or two of them. First, the obvious difficulty which its existence throws in the way of murderers. If the detection of such were delegated to mere official inquiry, the murderer, to escape with impunity, would only have to deceive, influence, or corrupt one or two individuals. Secondly, a very important subject for inquiry before coroners' tribunals is, whether persons who are proved to have destroyed themselves were compotes mentis at the time; and a considerable check on suicide is necessarily created by the circumstance that that often most delicate question must be publicly investigated. How easily unpleasant revelations on the subject could be cushioned by the ignorance of officials, or by influence or money working on their minds, is obvious enough. Besides, it should be remarked, that the inquisition conducted by the coroner does not preclude the Executive, or others in authority, from carrying on any other inquiry, with respect to a supposed crime, which they may deem advisable, and which, indeed, in many instances, would be their bounden duty.

It is but justice to the Lord Advocate to add, that he does not stand alone in his views. We have observed with regret for some time past an inclination in the magistrates of a few counties in England to place impediments in the way of coroners' inquisitions, and as far as possible to delegate their functions to the police. This is a tendency which should be carefully watched; and if any deliberate proposal is ever made in this country to abolish the coroner's inquisition, we hope that the two following questions will be pressed on the notice of the Legislature. First, whether there is a greater or less amount of suicide, murder, and manslaughter in England than in those favoured lands where inquiries into the cause of sudden deaths are conducted in secret by official personages? Secondly, and if greater, whether the institution of the coroner's court, defective and susceptible of reform as it undoubtedly is, is not, in some degree at least, the cause of this great blessing to society?

REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS ON MERCHANT SHIPPING.

3. Liability of Shipowners.

After referring to the common law on the liability of a shipowner as a carrier by sea, for the conduct of the persons whom he employed, and to the modification introduced by the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, the Report proceeds—

"Your committee feel bound to direct attention to the difference between accidents on land and the casualties to which ships traversing the seas, and encountering all the violence of the elements, are exposed. Your committee must also remind your Honourable House, that by recent enactments the shipowner, in order to insure greater safety to persons and property, is now, to a very considerable extent, compelled to construct, equip, and navigate his ship in the manner directed by the Legislature, and that the Merchant Shipping Act contains 'no less than seventy-eight clauses inflicting penalties for omissions or commissions of acts affecting, or supposed to affect, the public interest.'

"The earnest representations made by shipowners, in the interval between 1846 and 1854, to the Board of Trade, of the unlimited liability to which they were exposed under Lord Campbell's Act, induced the Government to propose to Parliament the clauses of the Merchant Shipping Act of that year, which now form the statutory law upon that branch of the subject.

"By the 504th section of that act, the shipowner, in all cases where any loss of life or personal injury occurs without his actual fault or privity, is not answerable in damages to an extent beyond the value of the ship and freight, taking the value of the ship at not less than 15*l.* per ton.

"The procedure prescribed by the act to recover such damages is simple and summary; and by the 511th section, any person, who is dissatisfied with the amount of statutory damage, may bring an action on his own account, the amount of damages recoverable by him being, however, still limited to the value of the ship and freight.

"Your committee fully admit that this limitation of a previously unlimited liability was a great concession to the shipowner, and relieved him from a ruinous responsibility. Your committee recognise the wisdom of the principle which was sought to be enforced with so much care and consideration, viz. that to exempt shipowners from liability beyond the value of an inferior ship and freight would be an encouragement to unprincipled persons to employ worn-out and inadequately-manned vessels in the conveyance of passengers; and that, on the other hand, to subject shipowners to unlimited liability for such calamities might induce avarice of property and character to withdraw their fortunes from so great a hazard.

"Your committee, however, must treat the subject as it practically works, keeping in view the desirability of maintaining the law, so as to guard against the wilful negligence of the captain and crew of a ship, and to give the families of persons killed a legal remedy, but at the same time to shield the shipowner, if possible, from these ruinous consequences which no precaution or foresight on his part can at present avert.

"Much conflicting evidence has been given by various witnesses respecting the legality of insurances effected to cover the risks contemplated by the statute of 1854. It appears that at Hull, and at various other ports, 'protecting societies' are formed upon a principle of mutual insurance, in which vessels estimated of the real value of 2810*l.* are valued at 10,000*l.*, with a view to cover the risks in question. These contracts of insurance are, it is stated, of questionable legality, and the 'protecting societies' seem to be called into existence to guard, in an indirect manner, against any casualty involving loss of life, which, under the prevailing impression amongst shipowners concerning the law of insurance, is not a legally insurable risk.

"Your committee have not been furnished with any specific proofs that any claims for losses have been preferred against or made good by any of these societies.

"But whatever usage may prevail in any part of the United Kingdom in regard to the practice or legality of covering by insurance that particular risk incurred by loss of life in ships, through the neglect of the captain or crew, for which the owner is made liable to a limited extent by the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, your committee consider the subject to be involved in so much doubt that it ought to be settled by statutory enactment. Your committee therefore recommend that a clause be prepared by the Board of Trade, similar in principle to the 55th section of the Passenger Act of 1835, declaring, with reference to the liabilities recited in the 503rd and 504th sections of the Merchant Shipping Act, that no policy of insurance shall be deemed to be invalid by reason of the nature of this risk.

"Under the clear and unambiguous state of the law since 1854, now controlled by statutory authority, no personal liability accrues to a shipowner for loss of life or personal injury, beyond the value of the ship and freight, taken at a minimum of 15*l.* per registered ton; but a further provision was added, enabling the Board of Trade, where many lives were lost, to consolidate the actions, and recover for each life a sum not exceeding 30*l.* Any relative not content with this sum was enabled to bring his own action, subject to the prior claims of the Board of Trade, and to the limitation of the whole liability above mentioned. A further provision was inserted, enabling the Courts of Chancery, or other Courts exercising similar jurisdiction, to prevent multiplicity of proceeding, whether in respect of life or property, and to administer, in due course, the whole limited amount for which the shipowner might be liable.

"Your committee must point out, that as the 511th section, already referred to, leaves it open to any person dissatisfied with the amount of statutory damages to bring his action against the shipowner on his own account, the practical effect is, that when an accident occurs, innumerable actions at law are instituted against opulent companies or wealthy shipowners; and, under the threats and pressure of legal proceedings, the owners of the incriminated ship are, unless in cases where all the claims arise within one jurisdiction, glad to pay almost any amount of compensation money rather than bring the cause before the courts of law. Your committee readily admit that, in some cases mentioned, the preliminary decisions of the Board of Trade, as prescribed in the act, have been fully warranted by the circumstances; and that, in a public point of view, as regards the protection of life and property, the intervention of the Board has had a salutary effect, and has been sanctioned by public opinion. But, on the other hand, your committee cannot but express their opinion; that as the law has, by very exceptional legislation, armed the Board of Trade with power to institute inquiries into wrecks and casualties, upon the decision of which not only depends the question of culpability of the parties implicated, but practically also the liability of the shipowner, it becomes of the highest importance, for the due administration of justice to all parties, that these inquiries should be conducted with the strictest impartiality, and that the official weight and influence of a powerful public board should not be brought to bear unduly against any person implicated, and this especially should be avoided in cases where claimants have a deep interest in fixing criminality upon the commander of the vessel.

"Your committee having expressed an opinion that the insurance of life, as well by the shipowner as by any person having an insurable interest by law, should be declared legal by statute, it becomes necessary to consider whether the valuation of damages in the event of death, fixed by the statute at 30*l.*, and the vessel and freight at a minimum of 15*l.* per registered ton, limited only by the value of ship and freight, however great, cannot be modified so as to protect passengers, rich and poor, against the contingency of casualty whilst exposed to the perils of the sea and of navigation, and at the same time not discourage the reputable shipowners of the United Kingdom from pursuing the passenger trade. Capitalists connected with shipping are ready to incur such liabilities as prudence and foresight can guard against; but it is stated in evidence that many wealthy British shipowners refuse to take passengers on board their vessels mainly on account of the great, uncertain, if not practically unlimited, liability to which they would be exposed in the event of loss of life. But, on the other hand, there are certain facts proved to your committee which appear to be scarcely consistent with these assertions.

"In considering the question of the liability of shipowners in all its bearings, the additional liability to which the British shipowner is exposed by the operation of the municipal laws of foreign States, and of our own possessions abroad, cannot be shut out of consideration.

"It appears that the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, under processes of law in different places, were compelled to pay damages very far in excess of the value of the ship; and it is admitted, that in the present state of the law both in America and in England, though the liability of the shipowner is limited, he may be sued in both countries, and have to pay the whole claim twice over.

"This raises the question of the practicability and desirability of an international arrangement with maritime countries, so as to arrive at some uniform reciprocal principle.

"Some such agreement seems the more desirable, for, as the law stands at present, the liability of the foreign shipowner is not limited in our courts; and the liability of the English shipowner, by the same rule, if it were applied in the United States, would not be limited in their courts. Therefore, though the English law may have contemplated the limitation of the British shipowner's liability, any damage sustained by a collision on the high seas between a British ship and a foreign vessel would not fall within the statutory limit, and practically the liability of the British shipowner, in the event of loss of life, would be unlimited, or at least co-extensive with the loss, which a jury might assess according to the rank of life and injury sustained by the relatives or family of the deceased.

"This subject becomes further embarrassed in cases of collision, in which the guilty ship, or both ships, may perish, and be no longer in existence. A valuable cargo on board a worthless ship, or a worthless ship running down and destroying a valuable vessel, causes, in every variety of case, infinite uncertainty, where redress is sought under the act of Parliament. In cases in which the incriminated party has, in fact, lost his ship, he is still liable by the English law for its value, together with the freight, which aggravates the hardship to the shipowners.

"It is generally agreed that the valuation for loss of life, in the Merchant Shipping Act, at the minimum of 15*l.* per ton, was fixed with a view of preventing the employment of inferior ships, and it was considered that vessels of the value of 15*l.* per ton were sufficient to provide for the comfort and safety of passengers.

"Your committee agree in the opinion suggested, that instead of taking the actual value of the ship in every case as the limit, a certain sum per registered ton might be fixed, with a view to arrive at greater fairness between shipowner and shipowner.

"At present the law inflicts a heavier punishment upon the owner of the vessel best adapted to provide (from her superior construction) for the safety of passengers; and the responsibility of the owner actually increases with the increased means he employs to provide for the health, safety, and comfort of those who embark in his vessel. Your committee are, therefore, of opinion that an absolute sum of 15*l.* per ton gross register, whatever may be the actual value, should be established as the definite valuation of the ship, and that all consideration of freight should be excluded. If your Honourable House should adopt this recommendation, which, in the opinion of your committee, is based upon more intelligible principles than the existing law, and is necessary on the grounds of justice and policy, then the owner of the inferior ship, and the owner of the well-appointed ship, would be placed upon the same level of responsibility, and owners of valuable ships would not be at a disadvantage, as they now are, when a collision occurs with a badly-found vessel, belonging, perhaps, to an opulent owner."

The remaining four heads of the Report we give in extenso:—

8. Recent Legislation.

"Your committee will now proceed to advert to various points of more or less importance connected with recent legislative enactments. In doing so, your committee readily bear testimony to the efforts made of recent years by Parliament to simplify, improve, and consolidate the laws affecting merchant shipping. The legislation since 1835 has, in many respects, been judicious and beneficial, though in others it has been carried to excess.

"When so much has been achieved, errors and omissions have been, perhaps, unavoidable. It has been urged by various witnesses, that in some instances a zealous wish to accomplish very desirable improvements, and to protect the interests of the public, has led to the adoption of legislative regulations possibly of a too minute and restrictive character. Objections have also been made to some provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, and of the Passenger Act of 1855, as tending to hamper the energies of the shipowner and the genius of the shipbuilder, and that the law, by insisting upon certain express requirements and provisions, frequently dictates with unnecessary interference how a ship should be built, fitted, manned, and navigated. Your committee are of opinion that the scope of legislation, unless in exceptional cases, ought to extend no further than to secure solidity in the construction, and sufficiency in the equipments, of the ship, and that various minute regulations, now specially enforced by act of Parliament, should be watched by the Board of Trade, with a view to remove every reasonable objection of undue official interference with the liberty of action of the owners, and to make these regulations conform to the rapidly improving spirit which pervades every branch of scientific and maritime enterprise."

9. Merchant Shipping Act and Shipping Offices.

"The Merchant Shipping Act conferred a great boon on the shipping interest by collecting into one intelligible statute the obscure and scattered provisions of more than 1000 sections, beginning with the reign of Queen Elizabeth. The arrangement of this act in different parts according to different subject-matters, and the concise use of ordinary language in place of the usual phraseology adopted in acts of Parliament, were new features in parliamentary drawing, and of especial value in an act containing regulations for the guidance of seamen and others. In regard to this act there have been numerous alterations suggested by various witnesses. It is, however, impossible for your committee to enter upon these in detail without far exceeding the usual limits of a report. On the other hand, there are some suggestions which require a special though brief notice. For instance, the statements made by the chairman of the Mercantile Marine Association of Liverpool, and by the secretary to a similar association in London, with the remarks of the secretary to the Marine Department of the Board of Trade upon the former, embodied in the evidence, will no doubt receive from your Honourable House all the attention their importance deserves; and in any measure relating to the revision of this act which may be submitted to Parliament, your committee are of opinion that many of the suggestions may be advantageously adopted. These, however, would better be left with the officers of the Board of Trade, by whom any such measure will, as heretofore, be prepared.

"Respecting the admeasurement of ships, and the allowance to steam-vessels, your committee feel, that as the new law is based, as a whole, upon the most equitable principles, and that as it has answered exceedingly well in practice, they are of opinion that any alterations in detail which experience may have shown to be necessary cannot be dealt with by your committee, and should be left to the Executive.

"The system of registration was also remodelled by the Merchant Shipping Act, and your committee understand that it has worked with perfect success. The leading feature is, that it enables an owner to give an absolute title to an innocent purchaser, and at the same time, in case of fraud or breach of trust, it gives a remedy against the fraudulent person. That it has been successful in this—which, as was stated on the introduction of the act, is the desideratum of every system of registration, whether of ships, of land, or of other property—is shown by the fact, that Sir H. Cairns, in introducing his bill for the transfer of real estate, quoted it as the model. Your committee desire further to observe, that, under this system of registration, shipping property can be transferred and mortgaged with a facility and security of which no other species of property has the advantage. This transfer is effected by the Customs Establishment absolutely without expense of any kind to the shipowner; and further, not only is his conveyancing thus done for him, but transfers and mortgages of ships are entirely free from the stamp duties which attach to every other species of property."

UNCONDITIONAL ASSURANCE ON LIFE.

THE LIFE ASSOCIATION OF SCOTLAND has adopted a NEW SCHEME of "UNCONDITIONAL ASSURANCE," which entirely obviates the objections to the ordinary system of other offices.

OMISSION to pay a Premium by oversight does not affect the Assurance, and, after a time, payment may be intentionally postponed for a year.

The ASSURED is not subject to any restriction as to Occupation or Residence; and NO EXTRA PREMIUMS can ever be payable.

The ASSURANCE is virtually Non-forefeitable and Unquestionable.

The POLICY-HOLDER, on surrendering his Policy, can withdraw a fixed and unusually large proportion of his payments, or take a paid-up policy for double the amount; or he may withdraw the same sum as a Loan, and still continue the Policy.

So complete and satisfactory a system of Unconditional Assurance is not to be found in the arrangements of any other Assurance Office. Explanatory Pamphlets may be had on application.

ENTRANTS to the PROFIT CLASS on or before the 5th DECEMBER NEXT will secure ONE YEAR'S BONUS more than will be allocated to later entrants.

The LIFE ASSOCIATION OF SCOTLAND was founded in 1838, and has issued upwards of THIRTEEN THOUSAND POLICIES for Life Assurances, amounting to nearly SIX MILLIONS STERLING. The ANNUAL INCOME is upwards of 160,000L. The Policies under the original Scheme have also for many years been unusually free from restrictions and imperfections, and the Assured have received large benefits. The Prospectuses of this Scheme also may be had on application.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 13, 1860.

In a former number* we drew attention to a bill then pending in Parliament "to amend the procedure and powers of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes." On that occasion we considered the subject of collusion in proceedings before that tribunal, endeavouring to shew the magnitude of the evil, and the utter insufficiency of the guards set up against it by the Legislature. That bill has now passed into law, and is become the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, and we now propose to direct attention to its principal parts.

The 1st section enables the Judge Ordinary "alone to hear and determine all matters arising in the said court, and to exercise all powers and authority whatever which may now be heard and determined and exercised respectively by the full Court, or by three or more judges of the said Court, the Judge Ordinary being one." That section, however, contains a proviso, that if he shall deem it expedient, he may call in the assistance of one of the other judges; and the 2nd empowers him to direct any matter to be heard and determined by the full Court. This last-mentioned section, and the 3rd, give an appeal from his decision to the full Court, or to the House of Lords.

According to the side-note of sect. 5, "the Court may, where one party only appears, require counsel to be appointed to argue on the other side;" but, on referring to the section itself, we find nothing about only one party appearing, the words being, "In every case of a petition for a dissolution of marriage it shall be lawful for the Court, if it shall see fit, to direct all necessary papers in the matter to be sent to her Majesty's proctor, who shall, under the directions of the Attorney-General, instruct counsel to argue before the Court any question in relation to such matter, and which the Court may deem it necessary or expedient to have fully argued; and her Majesty's proctor shall be entitled to charge and be reimbursed the costs of such proceeding as part of the expense of his office."

But whatever the true construction of the 5th section in this respect, one of its objects seems to have been to provide a safeguard against collusion, respecting which, however, provisions still more explicit are to be found in sect. 7. That section may be looked on as divisible into two parts. The first enacts, that "every decree for a divorce shall in the first instance be a decree nisi, not to be made absolute till after the expiration of such time, not less than three months from the pronouncing thereof, as the Court shall by general or special order from time to time direct; and during that period any person shall be at liberty, in such manner as the Court shall, by general or special order in that behalf, from time to time direct, to shew cause why the said decree should not be made absolute by reason of the same having been obtained by collusion, or by reason of material facts not brought before the Court; and, on cause being so shewn, the Court shall deal with the case by making the decree absolute, or by reversing the decree nisi, or by requiring further inquiry, or otherwise as justice may require; and at any time during the progress of the cause, or before the decree is made absolute, any person may give information to her Majesty's proctor of any matter material to the due decision of the case, who may thereupon take such steps as the Attorney-General may deem necessary or expedient." This enactment is evidently based on a condemnation of the vicious principle involved in the former Divorce Acts, to which we alluded in our former article, namely, that a suit for divorce à vinculo matrimonii is entirely an affair between the contending parties themselves, so that neither third parties nor society have any interest in preventing such divorces being collusively or improperly obtained. For it will be observed that, according to this section, the right of interference to prevent collusion or mistake is not confined to the relatives of the parties, or to individuals legally interested in the result—it is given to “any person.” This is the principal security against collusion devised by this statute, and, so far as it goes, is a sound enactment. Another is afforded by the three months’ delay accorded by the first words of this section—a period which we cannot help thinking might with advantage have been made much longer, not only for the purpose expressed in the section, but by the interposition of delay to afford the parties time for consideration, which in many instances would lead to reconciliation. The latter part of the section enacts, “If, from any such information or otherwise, the said proctor shall suspect that any parties to the suit are or have been acting in collusion for the purpose of obtaining a divorce contrary to the justice of the case, he may, under the direction of the Attorney-General, and by leave of the Court, intervene in the suit, alleging such case of collusion, and retain counsel and subpoena witnesses to prove it; and it shall be lawful for the Court to order the costs of such counsel and witnesses, and otherwise, arising from such intervention, to be paid by the parties, or such of them as it shall see fit, including a wife if she have separate property; and in case the said proctor shall not thereby be fully satisfied his reasonable costs, he shall be entitled to charge and be reimbursed the difference as part of the expense of his office.” The object of this evidently is, not only to supply more effective means of carrying out the former part of the section, but to afford an additional check on collusion, by enabling the law officers of the Crown to interfere officially when it is suspected.

Collusion and connivance between the parties have ever been, and ever will be, the characteristic enemies of justice in all tribunals empowered to grant divorces à vinculo matrimonii. Whether, and to what extent, the securities devised by this statute will be efficient in repressing them, now remains to be seen; and we confess we look forward to the result with interest and anxiety.

REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS ON MERCHANT SHIPPING.

“The various minute regulations affecting discipline, offences, recoveries, and applications of fines and penalties, are so mixed up with other considerations in connexion with the criminal law of the country, and with its general fiscal policy, that your committee need only especially recommend their consideration to the legal adviser of the Board of Trade in preparing any future revision of the present law.

“The question of the ‘rule of the road,’ and of an international system of lights at sea, when vessels meet each other, deserves, however, particular attention. This section in the act, as it stands at present, is most unsatisfactory, however the decision of our Courts of Admiralty may have modified its dangerous tendency. The evidence given is conclusive that some change in the existing regulation is necessary; and your committee express a hope that the Board of Trade will take steps to move the Foreign Office to communicate with foreign powers, with a view to the adoption of some common system, founded upon general practice and professional experience; and that our law may be altered accordingly.

“The subject of volunteering into the navy has been much dwelt on. Very stringent orders have, your committee are informed, been issued by the Admiralty on this subject; and an improvement of the law was effected in 1853, by giving to the shipowner power to recover from the Admiralty any excess of wages he might have to pay to substitutes. Considering the small number of men who have actually volunteered into the navy, (215 in 1859), this power has been acted on to a considerable extent, 1180*l.* having been paid by the Admiralty in that year. But it has been represented to your committee that the great evil of the law arises not so much from the actual loss of the men, as from the power over the master which the liberty of breaking his agreement gives to a refractory seaman, and the insubordination which is the natural result. Your committee are aware that in cases of urgency the safety and efficiency of her Majesty’s ships must be the paramount consideration; but they believe that this object might be effected without so much injury to merchant ships if the power of volunteering were limited to times and places where there is actual war; and that even in this case the officers of her Majesty’s ships should be required to communicate with the master of the merchant ship with a view to see what arrangements can be made, so as least to distress the merchant ship, before communicating with any of the crew, or encouraging them to break their agreement by volunteering into her Majesty’s service.

“The superintendence established by the shipping offices, under the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, over the registry, engagement, and discharge of seamen, has not been sufficiently long in operation to enable your committee to pronounce a decisive opinion upon its advantages.

“There appears a diversity of opinion amongst shipowners respecting the general utility of these offices. Several shipowners, especially from Hull and Sunderland, express an unequivocal condemnation of them, viewing them as an unnecessary medium between the employer and the employed. Other witnesses regard them in a more favourable light; and the chairman of the Liverpool Shipowners Association expresses an opinion that these offices have been a great advantage.

“The Legislature, in establishing the shipping offices, had, doubtless, several objects in view—to secure a registry of the seamen available at all times in the United Kingdom; to afford facilities for engaging seamen for merchant vessels; to prevent crimping, together with other duties; and to provide means for securing the presence on board, at the proper times, of the men so engaged.

“The shipping offices are also an essential part of the machinery necessary for the establishment of the royal naval reserve; and if the plan of school ships for seamen, and for a voluntary merchant seamen’s fund, recommended by the commission, is adopted, the services of the shipping-masters will be essential to its success.

“The evidence, however, given before your committee does not establish the proof that these offices have greatly conduced to prevent desertion, or afford facilities for an accurate registry of the seamen available. The offence of desertion, after the seamen have signed articles, has been but little abated, except in Liverpool, where, in consequence of the appointment of a superintendent, armed with power to prosecute offenders, the desertions, which in 1854 were 1872, and in 1857, 1716, fell in 1858 to 492, and in 1859 to 517.

“A suggestion has therefore been offered, in which your committee concur, that it would be desirable to arm some officer at all the principal ports with power to prosecute offenders to conviction, with a view to abate the offence of desertion, and of not joining the ship, when ready to proceed to sea, after a contract had been signed by the seaman.

"Your committee also think that the relief given by British consuls to seamen in distress may be administered on a sounder principle than at present, and that in administering it a clear distinction ought to be drawn between men who have fallen into distress in foreign ports by their own misconduct in deserting, and those who have been shipwrecked, or reduced to distress without fault of their own.

"But if desertions at our home ports are not diminished, unless at ports where a strict control is exercised, desertions of British seamen abroad, and especially in our colonial ports, are still very numerous, and constitute a serious grievance and a pecuniary loss to the shipowner. Mr. Gilmour, of Glasgow, shews, by a paper prepared by him, that from the year 1851 to the 21st December last the total number of deserters from the ships belonging to his firm amounted to no less than 3003 men. Whilst deploring this state of things, in which British seamen under engagement transfer their services, and often their allegiance, to a foreign flag, no practical remedy has been suggested by any of the witnesses to prevent this and similar offences perpetrated out of the country.

"It would seem that the British seaman, exhibiting in every part of the world one of the characteristics by which he is distinguished, roams from one ship to another, not always tempted by an increase of wages, but often incited by a pure love of change. At Quebec, where the wages for the homeward voyage are greatly in excess of the wages outwards, desertion is carried on systematically, and a sailor having deserted from a ship belonging, for example, to Mr. Gilmour's firm, will often return home in another vessel belonging to the same owners.

"The whole question of desertion by British seamen abroad has been so frequently the subject of consideration, viewed especially as it bears incidentally upon manning the royal navy, as well as our merchant shipping, that your committee feel a hesitation in indicating a course of action which might inflict greater severity upon similar offences than now exists, as they fear that exceptional legislation directed against the British merchant seamen might further alienate their feelings of attachment to the service which it should be the object of the Legislature to encourage.

"To apply a summary punishment with a view to lessen or suppress special offences great circumspection would be necessary. In our own possessions abroad it is not always possible to put in motion any process of law against a seaman who deserts, and who designedly and deliberately violates his contract with the shipowner. In foreign countries the British consular authorities have still less power to enforce any adequate repressive punishment suitable to the various cases which arise. Even in our own ports it is often found inexpedient and troublesome to punish the sailor who, it is alleged, 'has signed for five ships within eight days, and received an allowance from them all.' Shipowners and captains of vessels invariably decline to have recourse to coercive measures to put the law in force against deserters. The shipping-master is not empowered by law to refuse to ship a man who he knows has engaged for another ship; and each party is content to forego proceedings, provided only he can secure the services of the man and get him on board. The impunity, therefore, with which desertion is now carried on necessarily encourages the practice; but the scrupulous regard with which the liberty of the subject is held by the Legislature precludes the idea of investing the shipping-master with a power of summary punishment; and the enforcement of any more stringent regulations than those which already exist must be deprecated, if such coercion should tend to place the shipping-master and the seaman in antagonism. It would be a matter of regret, and, indeed, would materially diminish the utility of the shipping offices, if the seaman should be deprived of that friendly help-in family or other affairs which he now seeks from the shipping-master in time of trouble.

"From the evidence adduced before your committee, it does not appear that the institution of shipping offices, as they are at present organised, provides the machinery requisite for bringing the sailor under cognisance of official authority, so as to render him subservient to State purposes whenever an exigency might arise.

"But all parties bear unequivocal testimony to the beneficial effects produced by the facilities afforded the sailor for depositing his money in safety at the shipping offices, and of remitting any portion of his pay, by means of a money order, to his relations or other parties at a distance.

"In proof of this it has been shewn to your committee that these shipping offices are made instrumental in effecting various collateral objects, which they cannot but regard as of great importance to seamen, to the shipping interest, and to the country. By this system a seaman, when paid his wages, can remit them without charge to his relations at any other port; and it is with great satisfaction that your committee have learnt that the system has been eagerly adopted by seamen. The number of money orders issued has increased year by year, and in 1859 no less than 160,000. was remitted in 25,000 separate orders, averaging between 6*l.* and 7*l.* each, all of which may be looked upon as saved for the seamen's families by this system.

"The sums paid in, and the balances deposited in the savings banks at the shipping offices, are not up to this time very large, but they are steadily increasing.

"The shipping offices also afford the means of recovering, giving a receipt for, and paying over to the relations the wages and effects of seamen who die on service. In 1859 no less than 29,500*l.* was thus received, of which 21,600*l.* was distributed in sums averaging about 10*l.* each to relations, and nearly 8000*l.* carried to the Exchequer as unclaimed.

"Whatever opinions may have been expressed adverse to the shipping offices, your committee cannot recommend their discontinuance; they are of opinion that in any plan which Parliament may hereafter adopt for the establishment of a seamen's fund, to which the seamen of both the royal and merchant navy would be contributory, the facilities afforded by the present shipping offices would greatly promote the success of such a measure; and your committee are of opinion that the efforts of Parliament should be directed to carry out some such measure, combined with the establishment of training ships, in the various outports of the kingdom.

"Your committee especially urge upon the consideration of your Honourable House whether some measure cannot be conceived and framed by the wisdom of Parliament, so as to bring the whole of the seamen and seafaring population of the United Kingdom under some general and comprehensive regulation, whereby a system of registry and limited service might be established.

"Your committee submit that the objects to be obtained by such a measure, which could only be carried successfully through Parliament by high administrative talent and the patriotic influence of men of all parties, would be to place the relations of the shipowners and the seamen in their employ upon a just and satisfactory footing—to establish a naval reserve upon broad, liberal, and national principles, so as to conduce to greater harmony between the merchant service and the royal navy, and thereby secure for the nation the ready and willing service of all her sons in time of war.

"Your committee desires to notice the efficient provisions which have been made by this act for the preservation of life and property endangered by casualty and shipwreck. Lifeboats and their crews are in most instances subsidised, and brought into a system of efficiency and order through the medium of the National Lifeboat and other similar institutions; the rocket and mortar apparatus placed along the coast in the hands of the coast-guard has been renewed and re-organised; medals and other rewards are largely given for services in saving life from shipwreck; a legal claim to salvage out of the proceeds of a wreck has been given to persons who save life, and this claim takes precedence of claims for salvage of property. Large powers and duties for protecting wrecked property have been committed to, and are efficiently exercised by, the officers of customs and coast-guard, who thus discharge upon the coast the duties of maritime police; and prosecutions are invariably instituted by the Board of Trade against persons who are detected in plundering wrecks. The details of the working of this part of the act are to be found in the Wreck Register, published annually by the Board of Trade; and your committee have satisfaction in expressing their opinion, that in this respect the Merchant Shipping Act has not only removed the abuses which existed under the former Wreck and Salvage Act, but has been of great service in the protection of property and in the saving of life.

"Your committee cannot conclude this part of their Report without bearing testimony in approbation of the system established in recent years for the examination of masters and mates of merchant ships; a marked improvement is undoubtedly observable in this class of officers, and nearly every witness has concurred in recognising the practical advantages of the system."

10. Passenger Act, and Chinese Passenger Act.

"The objections raised by many of the witnesses respecting the liabilities incurred under the Passenger Act of 1855 have been frequently so confused with complaints of various provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, that your committee, having stated their opinion respecting the owner's liability in cases of loss of life, need not recur to that point. Your committee must, however, remark, that the allegation, that the liabilities to which the British shipowner is subjected under the terms of the two before-mentioned acts have had the effect of throwing a large portion of the passenger trade into the hands of foreigners, is disproved by the evidence of the chairman of the Emigration Board, and of the assistant secretary of the Board of Trade, who demonstrate that since the first extensive Passenger Act, in 1852, the per centage of British ships conveying passengers to the United States, as well as the number of steerage passengers, have exhibited a marked increase, instead of a diminution, as alleged. An opinion founded upon the returns of one port alone, viz. Liverpool, has led to some misconception. The Americans at all times possessed a preponderating share of the passenger trade from Liverpool to the United States, but the share they acquired from its commencement has not increased. It is shewn further that the richer class of passengers, who formerly went in United States ships, now cross the Atlantic in British steamers; and, in fact, British capital and perseverance have acquired a predominance in that branch of the passenger trade which was formerly carried on by a very fine class of American sailing vessels, known familiarly as the "liners." In emigrant ships, which carry poor passengers to all parts, the relative tonnage has increased from 350,000 tons British against 470,000 tons foreign in 1853, to 280,000 tons British against 240,000 tons foreign in 1859, and the proportion of passengers carried in British ships has increased correspondingly.

"The returns put in by the Board of Trade dispel every notion that the passenger trade of the country is falling into the hands of foreigners; but, at the same time, your committee are sensible that it is of the greatest importance, that whilst every wise, humane, and proper provision should be enforced by law to secure the safety, health, and comfort of passengers conveyed in ships, vexatious regulations should be avoided, which tend to hamper unnecessarily the shipowner in the prosecution of his business. Any statutory regulation, applicable to British ships only, which, from the absence of effectual legislative control over foreign ships, places our shipowners at a disadvantage in the competition to which they are now subject, is especially to be avoided, and ought only to be adopted from overwhelming considerations of public policy, or with a view to the safety of life and property.

"Your committee have had many complaints laid before them of several of the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, in cases where that act becomes applicable to steam-ships carrying passengers. It appears that the Board of Trade does not interfere with cargo vessels; but if a vessel carries 'a passenger,' according to the interpretation clause of the act, the Board of Trade steps in, and exacts all the requirements specified by law. One of the witnesses, Mr. Laird, complained of the qualifications of the Government surveyors, as compared with those of many of the shipbuilders. Another witness made complaints of the 'spacing of the bulkheads,' as required by the act, having the effect of rendering the ship comparatively useless for the purposes of carrying cargo.

"Your committee are unable to make special recommendations upon these and many similar matters, and they must refer your Honourable House to the details as set forth in the evidence. The difficulty of legislating upon minute regulations, which seem to bear harshly upon individual cases, whilst in the main they effect the object in view, is so obvious, that, except in regard to iron vessels, which deserve greater attention from their comparative novelty, your committee are of opinion that only such changes should be effected as experience may prove desirable. With regard to iron vessels, and the general duties of the surveyors, your committee think the discretionary power of the Board of Trade, as limited by law, may be trusted in the framing of the requisite instructions to guide the officers under the control of that department; but your committee are of opinion that those instructions should be framed to meet the great improvements which are constantly taking place both as regards construction and equipment.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 20, 1860.

THE Trustees and Mortgagees Bill, introduced by Lord Cranworth to the House of Lords, where it was in its last stage deprived of those objectionable features which we had previously pointed out and commented upon in our articles in May and June last, was at a late period of a late session carried, with some further amendments, through the House of Commons. If we might hazard a conjecture, its passage through that assembly may have been somewhat facilitated by a desire that something having the semblance of a measure of law reform should be added to the Statute-book of the year 1860.

Whether the act will be effective, or a mere dead letter, like other enactments of a similar or analogous class, remains to be proved. In a liberal profession like that of the law no private interest on the part of practitioners is likely to induce them to throw any obstacles in the way of the working of the act, unless their duty towards their clients renders it proper that they should adopt such a course. The act, however, being now the law of the land, and as it will affect (except where its operation is excluded) a large number of conveyancing instruments, it may not be without use to examine its different provisions with some minuteness and particularity.

The object of the act is stated, though not with very great precision, in the preamble, to be the expediency "that certain powers and provisions which it is now usual to insert in settlements, mortgages, wills, and other instruments, should be made incident to the estates of the persons interested, so as to dispense with the necessity of inserting the same in terms in every such instrument." The act is divided into four parts. The first part has reference to powers of sale and exchange, and to the renewal of leases. The second part relates to the powers of mortgagees. The third part contains provisions as to the investment of trust funds, and the appointment and powers of trustees and executors. The fourth part contains certain general provisions.

With regard to the first part of the act, we may observe, that it does not, in accordance with the preamble of the act, make powers of sale and exchange incident to the estate of any person interested, but it gives powers of sale and exchange in pretty much the same terms as they are to be found in the precedent books, "in all cases where, by any will, deed, or other instrument of settlement, it is expressly declared that trustees or other persons therein named or indicated shall have a power of sale, either generally or in any particular event, over any hereditaments named or referred to in, or from time to time subject to, the uses or trusts of such will, deed, or other instrument."

The only object of this part of the act appears to be merely to shorten instruments, by importing from the act to instruments certain powers applicable to many, but not to all, cases where the instruments indicate that trustees or other parties are to have such powers. In many cases the ordinary forms will require alteration, so as to provide for the varying circumstances of the property dealt with, or of the family to whom it belongs; in these cases it will be proper to exclude the operation of the act. In other cases, where the ordinary forms require no alteration, the only question for practitioners will be, what saving will be effected by the omission of the ordinary powers of sale and exchange, and whether it will not be overbalanced by the inconvenience of the trustees, or other persons who are to exercise these powers, not having them in the instrument under which they act, and consequently being obliged to seek for them elsewhere.

We may here remark, that it appears to us, according to the proper construction to be put upon the 1st section, that the powers of exchange contained in the act can only be imported into an instrument, or acted upon, where there is a power of sale as well as of exchange; for in the 1st section, it will be observed, the power of exchange is only given "in case the power"—i. e. a power of sale, (a power of sale having only been previously mentioned)—"shall expressly authorise an exchange."

There is a new proviso inserted after the 4th section, which was very much needed, with regard to the investment of money arising from sales, or for equality of exchange, viz. "that no leasehold tenement shall be purchased under the powers hereinbefore contained which is held for a less period than sixty years."

Had this proviso not been inserted, freeholds might have been sold during the disability of a person entitled to the rents, and invested in leaseholds having only a term of a few years to run.

Another very necessary section (sect. 6) has been inserted while the act was passing through Parliament, according to which the proceeds of lands in England and Wales, coming under the operation of the power of sale and exchange, can only be invested in the purchase of lands in those countries; the same also is enacted with respect to the proceeds arising from land in Ireland, which can only be invested in lands in Ireland.

According to the bill as first introduced, trustees having a power of sale might, during the disability of the beneficial owner, have sold lands in the wealds of Kent, and purchased instead bogs in the wilds of Conemara.

In the 7th section of the act, the money to be received upon any sale, or for equality of exchange, is, until disposed of in the manner mentioned in the act, to be invested at interest. This section, however, does not say how, or refer to any other section of the act stating in what way, such investment is to be made, but we presume such money must be invested according to the provisions of the 25th section.

We intend shortly to make some remarks upon the remaining sections of the act.

REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS ON MERCHANT SHIPPING.

(Concluded from p. 378).

"As regards the 3rd section of the Passengers Act, by which a vessel carrying two passengers to every 100 tons is brought under its provisions, your committee, having heard the explanation given by the intelligent chairman of the Emigration Board of the reasons which prevailed with Parliament to alter the lower limit established previously to 1855, and his statement that if the limit of the old law was again made the rule, a large number of passengers would be carried without bringing the ships under the Passengers Act, are nevertheless of opinion that an extension might be made of the existing limit, so as to allow three passengers to every 100 tons register, so long as the number of passengers in any one ship did not exceed fifty; and your committee recommend an alteration in the present law accordingly. A corresponding relative increase might be made in the number of passengers allowed to be carried by steamers.

"The complaints made by many witnesses, of the hardship and excessive liabilities to which shipowners are exposed by the statutory obligations in the present Passengers Act, in the event of a ship being disabled in a foreign port, to send on the passengers, through the intervention of the consular authorities, from the place where the passengers are detained, to the port of destination, seem in a great measure to rest upon an imperfect knowledge of the actual state of the law. Several witnesses, largely engaged in the passenger trade, are under the impression that an unlimited liability is incurred, and that, 'at any cost whatever,' the passengers must be sent on at the expense of the shipowner. It has been stated, in every variety of form, that this obligation deters respectable parties from embarking in the passenger trade, and that enormous sums have been drawn upon the Treasury, to be reimbursed by the shipowner in fulfilment of his engagement with the passenger. It is further urged, that foreign vessels, especially Americans, are exempt from this liability, the owners or agents of these vessels being only required to give a bond for 2000*l.*, the enforcement of which, in the event of disaster, is practically impossible.

"Your committee cannot recommend any change in the provisions of the Passengers Act in this respect, except, if practicable, to bring the foreign ship under precisely the same obligations as the English ship. Your committee are of opinion that the common law of England, enforced by the statutory provisions of the Passengers Act, requires the shipowner to fulfil his contract of affreightment, and to deliver his passengers at the port of destination stipulated in the agreement between the parties. There is no valid reason to believe that any foreign law differs from our own in this respect, though other nations may not be so largely engaged in the passenger trade, and therefore such liability would not so frequently arise.

"But the Passengers Act of 1855 expressly limits the liability of the shipowner to double the amount of the passage money paid. From any such additional risk the shipowner can protect himself by insurance; and from all liability of any excess above that amount, incurred and drawn for by the consul abroad on the Treasury, the shipowner is now relieved by law. The expense actually paid by Government since 1849, not including The John and Lucy and some others, has been 16,650*l.*; whilst the amount recovered from shipowners has been only 5260*l.* There is 20,000*l.* still in dispute, a large portion of which will, no doubt, fall upon the Treasury. As regards the apparently exorbitant outlay which is reported in the cases of The John and Lucy and The Accrington, your committee urge that measures should be taken to audit and control the accounts and charges made by the consul in similar cases, with a view to prevent the necessity of more stringent regulations being adopted by the Government in the supervision of passenger vessels prior to their departure, which otherwise might be insisted upon by Parliament. The present law having been framed, pursuant to the recommendation of a committee of the House of Commons which sat in 1851, with a view to overcome the difficulties which previously existed in cases where a ship was wrecked upon a foreign and inhospitable coast, and the Government having, in the first instance, assumed the expense of supporting and sending on the passengers, your committee could not propose to alter a law which had its origin in a desire to save human life. It having been given in evidence that the liability to the amount of passage money received, as fixed by the act of 1852, was found inadequate to meet the expenses incurred, and as, in the instances already referred to, very large sums will be paid by the Government in excess of the amounts recoverable from the owners under the present law, your committee cannot recommend any alteration, especially as the additional risk incurred is made legally insurable under the 55th section of the Passengers Act.

"The complaints made in respect of the exemptions from the provisions of the Passengers Act, secured by law to vessels carrying a mail, deserve attention. Your committee are of opinion, that now that a large number of passengers are conveyed in foreign vessels carrying her Majesty's mails, which are accordingly exempted, under the Passengers Act, from the supervision of the emigration officers at the outports, it is desirable that such exemptions should be jealously watched; and care should be taken, in making future contracts, that foreigners should not thereby acquire any undue advantage over British shipowners in the passenger or carrying trades.

"As regards the limitation of the number of the crew in vessels brought under the supervision of the Emigration Board, your committee, considering that the law has wisely left the shipowner liberty of action to man his ships with a greater or less number of seamen, at his discretion, are of opinion that express legislation upon this point is inexpedient. But as it is given in evidence that the Emigration Commissioners were willing to reduce the crews of vessels taken up by the board, if the Admiralty sanctioned such a proceeding, and as the Admiralty did not think it expedient to take the responsibility of authorising such relaxation in the vessels under their control, your committee, though they see no reason to alter the terms of the existing regulation, which requires the vessel to be manned with an efficient crew for her intended voyage, are of opinion that a discretionary power may safely be left, without reference to the Admiralty, in the hands of the Emigration Commissioners, with a power of appeal against their decision.

"The minor alterations proposed in the provisions of the Passengers Act in respect of carrying dogs, horses, cattle, of the position of the water-closets, of ventilation, brokers' tickets, computation of the length of a voyage for a passenger ship, and other matters, will be found in the evidence, and, though of considerable importance, they do not require special notice, as the amendment of these and similar regulations, many of which require alteration, may be safely left to the discretion and judgment of the officers of the Board of Trade, and the Emigration Commissioners, whose special studies and experience qualify them for dealing with such details.

"In respect of the Chinese Passenger Act, 1855, the only witness examined upon the subject, an experienced shipbroker, states that there is nothing objectionable in its provisions, and that no alteration in the act is required; but he admits that he has little or no knowledge of the trade. Very few British ships, it appears, are engaged carrying coolies from China to the West Indies, and it is currently reported that the regulations of the act are so stringent that British vessels are prevented from entering that trade. It seems that the coolie trade is principally carried on by American ships, and it is stated that the conduct of the masters and crews of these vessels is notoriously so bad that the attention of the United States Legislature has been directed to the subject, not with a view to regulate the trade, but to abrogate it altogether, as regards United States vessels. It is right to add that cases have been brought before the local Marine Board of London which required that the conduct of masters and officers of British ships engaged in the trade should be investigated; but, your committee rejoice to state, without implicating them in any of the atrocities which have taken place.

"Your committee, bearing in mind the mortality reported in 1857 in certain vessels which carried coolies from China to the Havana, and reviewing the very proper and humane object which the Chinese Passenger Act had in view, are not disposed to recommend any material relaxations of the salutary provisions of that act; and they submit that the suggestions for prohibiting British vessels from carrying Chinese passengers, familiarly known as coolies, to slaveholding states in America, or to any country where slavery is tolerated, is well worthy of the favourable consideration of your Honourable House."

11. Stamp Duties.

"Your committee are of opinion, considering the reduction which in many cases has been made in the stamp duties, that the existing impressed stamp of 5s. on charterparties might with propriety be reduced. The ordinary mode of transacting the business of charterparties occasions, as will be seen by reference to the evidence, very great inconvenience, and leads to considerable evasion of stamp duties, especially in the coasting trade. The reduction to 1s. by an adhesive stamp would doubtless yield as large, if not a larger, revenue than is derived from that source at present, while it would be a relief to shipowners, and afford greatly increased facilities for the transaction of business.

"The remission of the stamp duties on marine insurance, which are almost exclusively levied on English, and not on foreign, policies of insurance, would be a great boon to the shipping interest. If the state of the public revenue should not admit of a total abolition, your committee earnestly recommend a revision of the present scale of stamp duties on marine insurance, with a view of effecting a large reduction of the present rates. Whenever similar reductions have been carried out the revenue has almost invariably increased, and your committee cannot doubt that a similar result would follow if the experiment made in 1844 were repeated. The shipowner claims relief from this special burthen to aid him in competing successfully with the foreigner, who in some maritime states is altogether exempted from the tax; while in the United States of America the charge is only 'one dollar, or a dollar and a quarter, on each policy, whatever the amount may be.'

"In conclusion, your committee, though they have not felt it necessary to offer an opinion upon matters purely of detail, have, they trust, in an impartial spirit, given to all the important questions referred to them their most attentive consideration; and, in closing their Report, they desire to express an earnest hope that your Honourable House will support the views of your committee, so that their recommendations may receive, at the earliest period, that attention from her Majesty's Government which their importance demands."

ORDER IN COUNCIL UNDER THE FOREIGN JURISDICTION ACT.

THE GAZETTE of the 9th October, 1860, contains an important Order in Council for carrying into effect the provisions of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 94, in the dominions of the Ottoman Porte. Of this we propose to give the most remarkable parts.

"At the Court at Balmoral, the 27th August, 1860, present, the Queen's most excellent Majesty in Council.

"Whereas, by the act of the session of Parliament of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 94, intituled 'An Act to remove Doubts as to the Exercise of Power and Jurisdiction by her Majesty within divers Countries and Places out of her Majesty's Dominions, and to render the same more effectual,' hereinafter called 'the Foreign Jurisdiction Act,' it was enacted, amongst other things, that it was and should be lawful for her Majesty to hold, exercise, and enjoy any power or jurisdiction which her Majesty then had, or might at any time thereafter have, within any country or place out of her Majesty's dominions, in the same and as ample a manner as if her Majesty had acquired such power or jurisdiction by the cession or conquest of territory:

"And whereas her Majesty has had, and now has, power and jurisdiction in the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, &c.

* * * * *

"II.—GENERAL PROVISIONS AS TO HER MAJESTY'S JURISDICTION IN THE DOMINIONS OF THE SUBLIME OTTOMAN PORTE.

"4. All her Majesty's jurisdiction exercisable in the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte for the judicial hearing and determination of suits or matters in difference between British subjects, or between British subjects and subjects of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, or between British subjects and subjects or citizens of any other State, or for the administration or control of the property or persons of British subjects, or for the repression or punishment of crimes or offences committed by British subjects, or for the maintenance of order among British subjects, or for any purpose connected therewith respectively, shall be exercised under and according to the provisions of the present Order, and not otherwise.

"5. Subject to the other provisions of the present Order, the civil and criminal jurisdiction aforesaid may and shall, as far as circumstances will admit, be exercised upon the principles of and in conformity with the common law, the rules of equity, the statute law, and other law for the time being in force in and for England, and with all the powers vested in and pursuant to the course of procedure and practice observed by and before courts of justice and justices of the peace in England, according to their respective jurisdictions and authorities.

"6. Except as to offences against the capitulations, articles of peace, and treaties between her Majesty and the Sublime Ottoman Porte, or against any rules and regulations for the observance thereof, or the maintenance of order among British subjects in the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, made by or under the authority of her Majesty, or against any of the provisions of the present Order, or any rule made under it, and except as to offences expressly made such by the present Order, or any other Order for the time being in force, no act done by a British subject in the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, or on board a British vessel within the same dominions, which would not, by a court of justice having criminal jurisdiction in England, be deemed to be a crime or offence rendering the person doing the act amenable to punishment in England, shall, in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction under the present Order, be deemed to be a crime or offence rendering the person doing the act amenable to punishment.

"III.—CONSTITUTION OF HER MAJESTY'S CONSULAR COURTS.

"(1). *The Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople.

"7. There shall be a court styled 'Her Britannic Majesty's Supreme Consular Court for the Dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte.'

"8. The Supreme Consular Court shall hold its ordinary sittings at Constantinople, but may, in case of emergency, sit at any other place within the district of the consulate-general of Constantinople, and may at any time hold its ordinary sittings at any such place within the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte as one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State may approve.

"9. There shall be one judge of the court. He shall be appointed by her Majesty by warrant under her royal sign-manual.

* * * * *

"10. There shall be attached to the court—

"(1). One legal vice-consul cancellier;

"(2). One law secretary:

"(3). So many officers and clerks as one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State may from time to time think fit.

"11. The legal vice-consul cancellier and the law secretary shall be appointed by her Majesty.

"They shall respectively hold, by special commission from her Majesty, the appointment of vice-consul; but the legal vice-consul cancellier shall always have rank and precedence above the law secretary.

"The legal vice-consul cancellier shall act as registrar of the court.

"The law secretary shall discharge such duties in connexion with the conduct of criminal prosecutions as the judge may from time to time direct.

"The legal vice-consul cancellier shall hear and determine in a summary way such criminal charges as may under the present Order be properly so heard and determined, and as may be specially referred to him by the judge.

"The law secretary shall hear and determine in a summary way such criminal charges as may under the present Order be properly so heard and determined, and as the judge may from time to time think necessary, for the dispatch of urgent business, to refer specially to him.

"Where a suit or proceeding of a civil nature, originally instituted in the Supreme Consular Court, relates to money, goods, or other property, or any civil right or other matter at issue, of a less amount or value than 100*l.* sterling, or is instituted for the recovery of damages of a less amount than 100*l.* sterling, it shall be lawful for the judge to refer such suit or proceeding specially to the legal vice-consul cancellier to be heard and determined by him; or, if it shall appear to the judge necessary for the dispatch of urgent business so to do, to refer any such suit or proceeding specially to the law secretary to be heard and determined by him; and the legal vice-consul cancellier or law secretary (as the case may be) shall hear and determine the same accordingly; but in all such cases an appeal shall lie as of course to the judge.

"(2). *The Consular Courts in the Provinces.

"12. Each of her Majesty's consuls-general, consuls, and vice-consuls resident in the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, (with the exception of her Majesty's consul-general at Constantinople, and with such other exceptions as one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State may at any time think fit to make), for and in his own consular district, shall hold and form a court styled 'Her Britannic Majesty's Consular Court at [Smyrna, or as the case may be].'

"Provided always, that no vice-consul shall be competent to hold a consular court unless he holds a commission as vice-consul from her Majesty; but any person acting temporarily, with the approval of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, as consul-general, consul, or vice-consul, shall be competent to hold a consular court.

"IV.—JURISDICTION AND POWERS OF THE CONSULAR COURTS.

"(1). *In General.

"13. All her Majesty's jurisdiction, civil and criminal, exercisable in the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, shall, for and within the district of the consulate-general of Constantinople, be vested exclusively in the Supreme Consular Court, as its ordinary original jurisdiction.

"14. All her Majesty's jurisdiction, civil and criminal, nal, exercisable in the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte beyond the district of the consulate-general of Constantinople, and not under the present Order vested exclusively in the Supreme Consular Court, shall, to the extent and in the manner provided by the present Order, be vested in the several provincial consular courts, each for and within its own district.

"15. Where a suit or proceeding of a civil nature, instituted in a provincial consular court, does not relate to money, goods, or other property of the amount or value of 300*l.* sterling or upwards, or does not relate to or involve, directly or indirectly, a question respecting any civil right or other matter at issue of the amount or value of 300*l.* sterling or upwards, or is not brought for the recovery of damages of the amount of 300*l.* sterling or upwards, the Court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the case without assessors.

"In all cases other than those hereinbefore described the Court shall hear and determine the case with assessors.

"16. The Supreme Consular Court shall have, in all matters civil and criminal, a concurrent jurisdiction with the several provincial consular courts, such jurisdiction to be exercised subject and according to the other provisions of the present Order.

"17. The judge of the Supreme Consular Court may, as and when he thinks fit, visit, or appoint the legal vice-consul cancellier or the law secretary of the Supreme Consular Court to visit, in a judicial or magisterial capacity, any provincial consular court, and there inquire of, hear, and determine any case, civil or criminal, pending in that court, or arising within its jurisdiction.

"18. A provincial consular court may of its own motion, or on the application of any person concerned, report to the Supreme Consular Court the pendency of any case, civil or criminal, which appears to the provincial consular court fit to be heard and determined by the Supreme Consular Court. The Supreme Consular Court shall thereupon direct in what mode and where the case shall be heard and determined, and the same may and shall be so heard and determined accordingly.

"19. The supreme and every other consular court shall, in the exercise of every part of its respective jurisdiction, be a court of record.

"20. Each provincial consular court may and shall execute any writ or order issuing from the Supreme Consular Court, and take security from any person named in any writ or order for his appearance personally or by attorney; and may, in default of such security being given, or when specially ordered by the Supreme Consular Court so to do, send the person named to Constantinople on board one of her Majesty's vessels of war, or, if there shall be no such vessel available for the purpose, then on board any British or other fit vessel.

"The order of the Supreme Consular Court shall be sufficient authority to the commander or master of any such vessel of war or other vessel to receive and detain such person, and carry him to and deliver him up at Constantinople, in obedience to and in pursuance of such order.

"21. The supreme and every other consular court shall be auxiliary to one another in all particulars relative to the administration of justice, civil or criminal.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, OCTOBER 27, 1860.

THE case of Swinfen v. Lord Chelmsford (reported in our present number) involves questions of immense importance affecting the relation between counsel and their clients. There an action was brought against Lord Chelmsford, on the ground that while Sir Frederick Thesiger he had been retained by the plaintiff, Mrs. Patience Swinfen, to act as her counsel on an issue directed by the Court of Chancery, and had, without her authority, and contrary to her instructions, entered into a compromise with the opposite side for putting an end to the dispute between the parties. The jury having found a verdict for the defendant, a rule was obtained for a new trial, and the case was very ably argued in Michaelmas and Hilary Terms, when a variety of authorities, both from our own law and those of other countries, were referred to, although it was admitted on all hands that no decision in point could be found. The Court took time to consider, and near the end of Trinity Term an elaborate judgment was given by the Lord Chief Baron in the name of the Court, discharging the rule. In the course of that judgment the following principles were laid down.

The whole Court, consisting of Pollock, C. B., Bramwell and Channell, BB., and the late Mr. Baron Watson, held—first, that an advocate who accepts a brief in the usual way does not enter into any contract or promise, express or implied, but takes upon himself an office or duty, in the proper discharge of which not merely the client, but the court in which the duty is to be performed, and the public at large, have an interest; and, secondly, that counsel has complete authority over the suit, the mode of conducting it, and all that is incident to it, but not over matters that are collateral to it.

Pollock, C. B., and the late Mr. Baron Watson, went farther, holding, that if a barrister acts with perfect good faith, and with a single view to the interests of his client, he is not responsible for any mistake or indiscretion or error of judgment of any sort; and if he imagines he has authority to make a compromise when he really has not, this is a mistake either in law or fact; or if, in spite of instructions to the contrary, he enters into a compromise—believing that it is the best course to take, and that the interests of his client require it—this is but an indiscretion, or an error in judgment if done honestly; and that for neither the one nor the other can any action be maintained against him.

Two other points worthy of attention were decided in Swinfen v. Lord Chelmsford.

First, that although, where counsel is retained in the usual manner, the law is as above stated, yet he may be liable to his client on an express agreement, or if he acts towards him with fraud, malice, or treachery.

Secondly, that where a declaration discloses a state of facts upon which an action may be maintained, although there be neither malice nor fraud, the plaintiff is not bound to prove either, though both be alleged, and may recover upon the liability which the facts disclose, though fraud and malice be disproved.

In the argument of Swinfen v. Lord Chelmsford much reliance was placed by the plaintiff's counsel on the civil law on this subject, in which, as they contended, counsel is looked on in the light of a mandatory—i. e. a person who undertakes to do something for another without reward; in which case it is a well-settled rule, both of the civil law and the common law, that although the mandatory is unpaid, he is nevertheless liable for gross negligence. A gentleman of some standing and practice at the bar suggests to us a view of the matter which shews that this analogy might mislead. He suggests that the pleader in the civil law stands on a different footing from the same person in the common law. The former is said to be the "advocate" of the party, while the latter is said to be his "counsel," or, as it was formerly expressed, "of counsel with him." The first of these expressions seems to indicate a person employed to uphold some particular view dictated to him by the client, while the latter implies that the pleader is entrusted, not only to speak for his client, but also to think for his interests; in short, that in the common law there is a solidarity between the pleader and client which did not exist in the civil law, and consequently that the former has rights in the way of compromising the suit much more extensive than the latter.

The case of Swinfen v. Lord Chelmsford will, we believe, be brought before a higher tribunal, where it is to be hoped some decision will be come to that will settle for the future the vexed questions involved in it.

UNCONDITIONAL ASSURANCE ON LIFE.

THE LIFE ASSOCIATION OF SCOTLAND has adopted a NEW SCHEME of "UNCONDITIONAL ASSURANCE," which entirely obviates the objections to the ordinary system of other offices.

OMISSION to pay a Premium by oversight does not affect the Assurance, and, after a time, payment may be intentionally postponed for a year.

The ASSURED is not subject to any restriction as to Occupation or Residence; and no EXTRA PREMIUMS can ever be payable.

The ASSURANCE is virtually Non-forefeitable and Unquestionable.

The POLICY-HOLDER, on surrendering his Policy, can withdraw a fixed and unusually large proportion of his payments, or take a paid-up policy for double the amount; or he may withdraw the same sum as a Loan, and still continue the Policy.

So complete and satisfactory a system of Unconditional Assurance is not to be found in the arrangements of any other Assurance Office. Explanatory Pamphlets may be had on application.

ENTRANTS to the PROFIT CLASS on or before the 5TH DECEMBER NEXT will secure ONE YEAR'S BONUS more than will be allocated to later entrants.

The LIFE ASSOCIATION OF SCOTLAND was founded in 1838, and has issued upwards of THIRTEEN THOUSAND POLICIES for Life Assurance, amounting to nearly SIX MILLIONS STERLING. The ANNUAL INCOME is upwards of 160,000L. The Policies under the original Scheme have also for many years been unusually free from restrictions and imperfections, and the Assured have received large benefits. The Prospectus of this Scheme also may be had on application.

A MEDICAL OFFICER in attendance daily at half-past twelve o'clock.

THOS. FRASER, Res. Sec.

ALBERT AND MEDICAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

HEAD OFFICE—7, WATERLOO-PLACE, PALL-MALL, LONDON, S.W.
CITY BRANCH—63, MOORGATE-STREET, E.C.

(Established 1838).

The Business of the Medical Invalid and General Life Assurance Society having been amalgamated with the Albert Life Assurance Company, the united Businesses will henceforth be carried on under the above title.

DIRECTORS.

WILLIAM BRATTIE, Esq., M.D.
Capt. the Hon. S. T. CARMICHAEL, R.N., C.B.
Lieutenant-Colonel J. CROUDACE.
SWYNNEN JERVIS, Esq.
WILLIAM KING, Esq.
G. GOLDSMITH KIRBY, Esq.
JAMES NICHOLS, Esq.
Rear-Adm. the Right Hon. Lord GEORGE PAULET, C.B.
GEORGE RAYMOND, Esq.
THOS. STEVENSON, Esq., F.S.A.
ROBERT WHITWORTH, Esq.

DEPARTMENT OF MEDICAL STATISTICS.

WILLIAM FARR, Esq., M.D., F.R.S., D.C.L., General Register Office.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.

Assurances, Annuities, and Endowments granted, and every Provision for Families arranged. Premiums on the half-credit system. Extension of limits for voyaging and residence at ordinary rates. Naval and Military Lives, not in active service, assured at ordinary rates.

INVALID LIVES

Assured on scientifically constructed Tables, at premiums equivalent to the risk.

GUARANTEE DEPARTMENT.

In this Department the Company guarantees the fidelity of persons filling, or about to fill, situations of trust; and when a Life Assurance is combined with such Guarantee, a considerable reduction is made in the Premium for the latter.

Accumulated Fund exceeds	£500,000
Subscribed Capital	447,130
Paid-up Capital	137,000
Annual Income from Life Premiums, upwards of	220,000

The new Business is now progressing at the rate of more than 25,000L. per annum. From Professor De Morgan's Report upon the last valuation of Liabilities, (end of 1859), and the Statements of Accounts, it appeared at that time that the Surplus in favour of the Albert Business alone, after providing for every Liability, was 192,925L. 2s. 11d.

HENRY WILLIAM SMITH, Actuary.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 3, 1860.

IN a recent article we commenced making some observations upon the provisions contained in the Trustees and Mortgagees Act, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145. We propose now to continue the examination of the remaining clauses of the act (commencing with the 8th) seriatim.

Sect. 8 applies to the renewal of leases by trustees of leaseholds; but whatever may have been the intention of the noble lord who brought in the bill, it appears to us that the amendment which this section received by a superadded proviso (shortly to be noticed) has limited its operation so as to render it almost, if not quite, nugatory. The whole of the 8th section, as it originally stood in the bill, was as follows:—"It shall be lawful for any trustees of any leaseholds for lives or years, which are renewable from time to time, either under any covenant or contract, or by custom or usual practice, if they shall in their discretion think fit, and it shall be the duty of such trustees, if thereunto required by any person having any beneficial interest, present or future or contingent, in such leaseholds, to use their best endeavours to obtain from time to time a renewed lease of the same hereditaments, on the accustomed and reasonable terms, and for that purpose it shall be lawful for such trustees from time to time to make, or concur in making, such surrender of the lease for the time being subsisting, and to do all such other acts as shall be requisite in that behalf." Now, had not these provisions been limited and controlled by a very important amendment, it would have introduced a considerable alteration in the law upon this subject; for it seems to be clearly settled by the authorities, that where renewable leaseholds are put into settlement, trustees are not, in the absence of any direction, either express or implied, in the instrument of settlement authorising it, bound to effect a renewal of the lease.

Lord Cranworth, therefore, proposed to alter the law giving the trustees of renewable leaseholds in all cases a discretionary power of renewal, and rendering a renewal obligatory upon them on the application of a person having any beneficial interest; and by the 9th section the trustees are enabled, in such cases, to raise money for the purpose of renewal. A proviso, however, added to the 8th section, by way of amendment, seems to deprive it of all effect, and to leave the law much in the same state as it was in before; it is as follows:—"But this section is not to apply to any case where, by the terms of the settlement or will, the person in possession for his life, or other limited interest, is entitled to enjoy the same without any obligation to renew the lease, or to contribute to the expense of renewing the same."

The 10th section of the act renders the consent of the persons in receipt of the rents and profits of hereditaments sold or exchanged by trustees under the act necessary in certain cases, if such persons be not under disability.

We now come to the second part of the act, making certain powers incident to mortgages or charges made to secure money advanced or to be advanced by way of loan, or to secure an existing or future debt*; and before examining these powers, we must remember that they will all be, as it were, considered as incorporated in the instrument creating the mortgage or charge, unless it is declared that they shall not take effect†.

Now, let us see what these powers are, and when they may be exercised.

A person having a mortgage or charge is to have—first, a power of sale; secondly, a power to insure from fire the mortgaged property, whether affixed to the freehold or not; and, thirdly, a power to appoint, or obtain the appointment, of a receiver. These powers may be exercised at any time after the expiration of one year from the time when the principal money shall have become payable, or after any interest on such principal money shall have been in arrear six months, or after any omission to pay any premium on any insurance which, by the terms of the deed, ought to be paid by the person entitled to the property subject to the charge.

In the case of a sale, however, it is not to be made until after six months' notice in writing given to the person, or one of the persons, entitled to the property subject to the charge, or affixed on some convenient part of the property. There are also some not unusual provisions—as to receipts for the purchase money, that purchasers are not bound to see to its application, (sect. 12), nor bound to inquire as to whether the sale was justifiable, (sect. 13); as to the application of the purchase money, (sect. 14); as to the conveyance to the purchaser of the interest of the person executing the charge, (sect. 15); and power is given to the owner of the charge to call for the title deeds, and a conveyance of any outstanding legal estate, such as the person creating the charge could have called for, (sect. 16).

LIFE DEPARTMENT.

Assurances, Annuities, and Endowments granted, and every provision for Families arranged. Premiums on the half-credit system. Extension of limits for voyaging and residence at ordinary rates. Naval and Military Lives, not in active service, assured at ordinary rates.

INVALID LIVES

Assured on scientifically constructed Tables, at premiums equivalent to the risk.

GUARANTEE DEPARTMENT.

In this Department the Company guarantees the fidelity of persons filling, or about to fill, situations of trust; and when a Life Assurance is combined with such Guarantee, a considerable reduction is made in the Premium for the latter.

Accumulated Fund exceeds	£300,000
Subscribed Capital	447,180
Paid-up Capital	137,800
Annual Income from Life Premiums, upwards of	220,000

The new Business is now progressing at the rate of more than 25,000l. per annum. From Professor De Morgan's Report upon the last valuation of Liabilities, (end of 1858), and the Statements of Accounts, it appeared at that time that the Surplus in favour of the Albert Business alone, after providing for every Liability, was 192,925l. 2s. 11d.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 10, 1860.

HAVING noticed, in an article in our last number, in what cases and in what manner a mortgagee may, under the provisions of stat. 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, sell the mortgaged hereditaments, we now proceed to notice in what manner a receiver may be appointed under the same act.

The person who is entitled to appoint, or obtain such appointment, may either appoint a person named for that purpose in the deed of charge, or, if no such person is named, may, by writing delivered to the person, or any one of the persons, entitled to the property subject to the charge, or affixed on some conspicuous part of the property, require such last-mentioned person or persons to appoint a fit and proper person as receiver; and if no such appointment be made within ten days after such requisition, then may, in writing, appoint any person he may think fit, (sect. 17). Then follow certain provisions, according to which the receiver is to be deemed the agent of the mortgagor, (sect. 18); is to have certain powers, (sect. 19); to be removeable in certain cases, (sect. 20); is to have a commission, not exceeding 5*l.* per cent., on the gross amount of all money received by him, (sect. 21); and may insure, if so directed by the person entitled to the charge, the property included in it, (sect. 22); and then provision is made, in the usual way, for the application of monies received by such receiver, (sect. 23).

The first question which will arise for the consideration of practitioners is this—whether these provisions in the act conferring certain powers upon mortgagees will render their old forms useless, or whether they ought to insert a declaration, in instruments creating a charge, excluding the operation of the act, either entirely or to some extent.

In all large transactions we cannot but think any possible saving, by the omission of a few forms, will be so trifling, in comparison with the interests involved, that the usual forms ought in all cases to be adhered to, and the operation of the act entirely excluded.

In smaller transactions some persons may be content with the provisions of the act; but we question whether the use of concise forms would not, in the great majority even of such cases, be preferable if the interests of all parties are duly considered.

In the first place, it must be borne in mind that these statutory powers are only conferred by the act when the subject-matter mortgaged “consists of any hereditaments of any tenure, or any interest therein.” Where any property, therefore, is mortgaged not coming within that description, the usual powers must, if it is intended that they should be exercised, be given by deed.

Moreover, without subjecting the language of this part of the act to that minute criticism to which it is fairly and in many places open, we must observe that we consider the powers granted to the mortgagee (in all cases where the operation of the act is not excluded) to be such as might in many cases be exercised with great oppression and injustice.

The powers of the mortgagee, it will be observed, arise in three events—first, on the non-payment of the principal at a particular time; secondly, on the non-payment of the interest at a particular time; and, thirdly, on the omission to pay a premium of insurance according to contract. These powers are, to sell, to insure, and to appoint a receiver. Thus, if a mortgagor by accident omitted to keep up the insurance upon some insignificant tenement, the mortgagee might sell the whole property, whatever might be its extent or value, and, until the sale, might insure, and saddle the mortgagor with the expense of a receiver.

In cases where practitioners think it advisable to use their own forms in conferring powers on mortgagees, we think that the operation of the act should be altogether excluded by declaration, inasmuch as by the 32nd section of the act, where there is no such declaration, "if any variations or limitations of any of the powers or incidents, conferred or annexed, are contained in such deed, &c., such powers or incidents shall be exercisable or take effect only subject to such variations or limitations." The inconvenience of determining, from two conflicting instruments, what powers can be exercised, is so obvious as not to require further comment.

Assuming, however, that the principle upon which the act is professed to be founded is unobjectionable—namely, that certain powers may fairly be made incident to certain estates; as, for instance, to that of mortgagees—we think that, as an experiment in the application of the principle, it would have been well to have confined the operation of the act to granting such powers only as are usually by contract granted to the mortgagee. If, for instance, the power of sale only had been made incident in all cases, except where the parties agreed it should not exist, to the estate of the mortgagee, the act would have been, as to this part of it, less open to objection. But the powers to insure property from damage by fire, and to appoint a receiver, are by no means commonly given to mortgagees in ordinary mortgage deeds; to import them, therefore, in all cases, in the absence of contract, into such deeds, will, we believe, take many mortgagors by surprise, and will invest mortgagees with powers which, had mortgagors been consulted, they would never have granted. It is true that, by a legislative fiction, all persons are presumed to know the law, and therefore the contents and effect of the act we are now commenting on; but, in reality, many persons will find that a contract has been made for them by the act of Parliament which they never themselves intended to make. If this be the effect of the act, as we believe it is, at any rate as to the second part, we think that it rather exceeds than falls within the just province of legislation.

Rebuts.

Precedents of Pleading in Actions in the Superior Courts of Common Law, with Notes. By EDWARD BULLEN, Esq., of the Middle Temple, and STEPHEN MARTIN LEAKE, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barristers-at-Law. [Stevens & Norton, 1860.]

THE Common-law Procedure Acts have materially altered the formal parts of pleadings, stripping them of useless verbiage, and subjecting them to the ordinary rules of English composition. The precedents given in the schedule to the act of 1852 are models of conciseness; every superfluous word, every antiquated fiction, has been swept away; no more does the "abeque hoc" delight the classic ear of pleader, or the giving of colour exercise his subtle genius; the indignant replication, "de injuriâ sua abeque tali causâ," often recoiling upon him who used it, by reason of its superfluous distinctions, is no longer heard: no more does the defendant vi et armis commit alia enormia contra pacem, nor does he throw himself upon his country, nor is he prepared to verify that which he has been bold enough to allege. The plaintiff does not now "casually lose," nor does the defendant find and convert, twenty bedsteads, twenty beds, and a like quantity of other household furniture: the terrible special demurrer does not disturb the pleader's slumber, or defeat the unhappy suitor. Formerly the parties were desirous of fighting their battle upon paper before the final contest; the declaration was filled with circumstances of most serious aggravation, while the defendant reduced the injury to the smallest possible limits—answering to the crescendo and diminuendo of a more harmonious science. Thus, had the defendant and his dog simply walked across our field, our pleader would have informed him, that with force and arms, and with a large dog, he had broken and entered divers, to wit, three of our closes, and then forced and broken open, broken to pieces, damaged, and spoiled, divers, to wit, three of our gates, of great value, to wit, of the value of 50*l.*, and the locks, staples, and hinges, likewise of great value, and with his feet in walking, and with the feet of his said dog, had trod down, trampled, consumed, prostrated, crushed, damaged, and spoiled our grass, also of great value, and other wrongs to us did, against the peace of our lady the Queen, &c. The defendant would probably in the course of his pleas have answered, that true it was that he did unavoidably, with a little dog, a little trample upon &c. a little of the grass, &c. But all imaginary flights are now restrained, and the barest and shortest statement, provided it be clear and sufficiently comprehensive to include the substantive facts, is the best. While, however, the forms of pleading have been thus curtailed and improved, its principles are unimpaired, and it is still necessary to study it as a science, and to be acquainted with its terms of art and well-approved precedents. It is a great mistake to suppose that any statement of facts, however loose or vague, is sufficient under cover of the Common-law Procedure Acts, and their promises of amendment; much care and consideration are still required in the preparation of pleadings, and for a long time the want has been felt of a book of precedents adapted to the provisions of the Common-law Procedure Acts, and providing for cases arising under other modern statutes and numerous modern decisions. The want is now fully supplied by the book before us, which is a most valuable contribution to this branch of legal science, and will save the practitioner a considerable amount of time and labour. The precedents are not only clear, condensed, and sensible, but they are safe, and may be followed with confidence. The name of Mr. Bullen is of itself a sufficient guarantee for their soundness, and he appears to have been most ably assisted by Mr. Leake.

A valuable part of the book consists of the dissertations, in the shape of notes, upon the law of each subject of the precedents, which bring up the authorities to the latest date, and in the most convenient form for reference. Great industry, as well as judgment and discrimination, has been bestowed upon the whole of the work, which will be found of daily use, not merely in the pleader's chambers, but also as a court and circuit companion.

The Lord Chief Justice of England has appointed Mr. James Hemp, deputy clerk of assize on the Oxford Circuit, and one of the clerks of arraigns at the Central Criminal Court, to the clerkship of the Court for the Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved, vacant by the death of the late Robert Marshall Straight, Esq.

ORDER IN COUNCIL UNDER THE FOREIGN JURISDICTION ACT.

(Concluded from p. 387).

IV.—JURISDICTION AND POWERS OF THE CONSULAR COURTS.

"(2). In Civil Matters.

"22. The Supreme Consular Court and its several officers, and every other consular court, shall, as far as there may be proper opportunity, promote reconciliation, and encourage and facilitate the settlement in an amicable way, and without recourse being had to litigation, of matters in difference between persons over whom the Court has jurisdiction.

"23. The supreme and every other consular court may promote reconciliation, and encourage and facilitate the settlement in an amicable way of any suit or proceeding pending before it.

"24. The supreme or other consular court may, with the consent of the parties, refer to arbitration the final determination of any suit or proceeding pending before it, or of all matters in difference between the parties to the suit or proceeding, on such terms, and with such directions as to appointment of an arbitrator and other things, as may seem fit; and may, if it thinks fit, take from the parties, or any of them, security to abide by the result of the reference.

"In any such case the award shall be final and conclusive.

"26. The supreme and every other consular court shall be a court of law and of equity; and (subject to the other provisions of the present Order) shall have and may exercise all jurisdiction, power, and authority, legal, equitable, or other, which any consul of her Majesty by custom has or may exercise in the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte.

"27. The supreme and every other consular court shall be a court of bankruptcy and insolvency, and as such shall, as far as circumstances will admit, have, each for and within its own district, with respect to British subjects and to their debtors and creditors, being British subjects, or being subjects of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, or subjects or citizens of any other State, and submitting to the jurisdiction of the Court, all such jurisdiction as for the time being belongs to the Court of Bankruptcy, the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, and the County Courts respectively in England, or to such other judicial authority or authorities as for the time being has or have jurisdiction in England in matters of bankruptcy, insolvency, or protection.

"28. The Supreme Consular Court shall, as far as circumstances will admit, have in itself exclusively, for and within the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, with respect to British subjects, all such jurisdiction relative to the custody and management of the persons and estates of idiots, lunatics, and persons of unsound mind, as for the time being belongs to the Lord Chancellor or other person or persons in England intrusted by virtue of her Majesty's sign-manual with the care and commitment of the custody of the persons and estates of persons found by inquisition, in England, idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind.

"29. The Supreme Consular Court shall be a Court for Matrimonial Causes, and as such shall, as far as circumstances will admit, have in itself exclusively, for and within the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, with respect to British subjects, all such jurisdiction, except the jurisdiction relative to dissolution or nullity or jactitation of marriage, as for the time being belongs to the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England.

"30. The Supreme Consular Court shall be a Court of Probate, and as such shall, as far as circumstances will admit, have, for and within the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, with respect to the property of British subjects having at the time of death a fixed place of abode within such dominions, all such jurisdiction as for the time being belongs to her Majesty's Court of Probate in England.

"Provided always, that a provincial consular court shall have power to grant probate or administration where there is no contention as to the right to the grant, and it is proved on oath that the deceased had at the time of his death a fixed place of abode within the jurisdiction of the particular court.

"Every probate or administration granted by a provincial consular court shall have effect over all the property of the deceased within the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, and shall under all circumstances effectually discharge all persons paying to or dealing with an executor or administrator thereunder, notwithstanding that any defect may afterwards appear in the grant; and no such grant shall be impeached by reason only that the deceased had not at the time of his death a fixed place of abode within the particular jurisdiction.

"(3). In Criminal Matters.

"33. The supreme and every other consular court shall have power and authority to cause to be apprehended, and brought before it, any British subject being within the district of the Court, and charged with having committed any crime or offence within the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte, or on board any British vessel being within the same dominions, and to deal with the accused according to the jurisdiction of the Court, and in conformity with the provisions of the present Order; or, where the crime or offence is triable, and is to be tried, in England, to take the preliminary examination, and to commit the accused for trial, and cause or allow him to be taken to England.

"34. The supreme and every other consular court may promote reconciliation, and encourage and facilitate the settlement, in an amicable way, of proceedings for assault, or any other offence of a private or personal character, on terms of payment of compensation, or other terms that may seem reasonable or expedient, and may thereupon order the proceedings to be stayed.

"35. The Supreme Consular Court shall have power to impose the punishment of imprisonment for any term not exceeding twenty years, with or without hard labour, and with or without a fine not exceeding 500*l.* sterling, or the punishment of a fine alone not exceeding 500*l.* sterling.

"36. All crimes which in England are capital shall be tried by the judge of the Supreme Consular Court, with a jury.

"Other crimes and offences, above the degree of misdemeanour, tried before the judge or any officer of the Supreme Consular Court, and not heard and determined in a summary way, shall be tried by a jury.

"Any crime or offence tried before the judge or any officer of the Supreme Consular Court may be tried by a jury, where the judge or other officer so directs.

"Subject to the foregoing provisions, such classes of cases within the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Consular Court as the judge, having regard to the law and practice existing in England, may from time to time direct, shall be heard and determined in a summary way.

"40. If any British subject shall be guilty of publicly deriding, mocking, or insulting any religion established or observed within the dominions of the Sublime Ottoman Porte—or of publicly offering any insult to any religious service, feast, or ceremony established or kept in any part of such dominions, or to any place of worship, tomb, or sanctuary belonging to any such religion, or to the ministers or professors thereof—or shall wilfully commit any act tending to bring any such religion, or its ceremonies, mode of worship, or observances, into ridicule or contempt, and thereby to provoke a breach of the public peace—every such British subject shall, on conviction thereof, be liable to punishment (in the discretion of the Court) by imprisonment for not more than two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without a fine of not more than 100*l.* sterling, or a fine of not more than 100*l.* sterling alone.

"V.—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

"51. Where a consular court proceeds to hear and determine any case, civil or criminal, with assessors, the Court shall nominate and summon as assessors not less than two and not more than four indifferent British subjects of good repute resident in the district of the Court.

"Where, nevertheless, by reason of local circumstances, the Court is able to obtain the presence of one fit person only as assessor, the Court may sit with him alone as assessor; and where, for like reasons, it is not able to obtain the presence of any fit person as assessor, it may sit without an assessor; but in every such case the Court shall record in the minutes of proceedings its reasons for sitting with one assessor only, or without an assessor.

"An assessor shall not have a voice or vote in the decision of the Court in any case, civil or criminal, but an assessor dissenting in a civil case from any decision of the Court, or in a criminal case from any decision of the Court, or the conviction or the amount of punishment awarded, may record in the minutes of proceedings his dissent, and the grounds thereof, and an assessor dissenting shall be entitled to receive gratis a certified copy of the minutes."

UNCONDITIONAL ASSURANCE ON LIFE.
THE LIFE ASSOCIATION OF SCOTLAND has adopted a NEW SCHEME of "UNCONDITIONAL AS-SURANCE," which entirely obviates the objections to the ordinary system of other offices.
Omission to pay a Premium by oversight does not affect the Assurance, and, after a time, payment may be intentionally postponed for a year.
The Assured is not subject to any restriction as to Occupation or Residence; and no EXTRA PREMIUMS can ever be payable.
The ASSURANCE is virtually Non-forefeitable and Unquestionable.
The POLICY-HOLDER, on surrendering his Policy, can withdraw a fixed and unusually large proportion of his payments, or take up the policy for double the amount; or he may withdraw the same sum as a Loan, and still continue the Policy.
So complete and satisfactory a system of Unconditional Assurance is not to be found in the arrangements of any other Assurance Office. Explanatory Pamphlets may be had on application.
ENTRANTS to the PROFIT CLASS on or before the 5th DECEMBER NEXT will secure ONE YEAR'S BONUS more than will be allocated to later entrants.

The LIFE ASSOCIATION OF SCOTLAND was founded in 1833, and has issued upwards of THIRTEEN THOUSAND POLICIES for Life Assurance, amounting to nearly SIX MILLIONS STERLING. The ANNUAL INCOME is upwards of 160,000L. The Policies under the original Scheme have also for many years been unusually free from restrictions and imperfec-tions, and the Assured have received large benefits. The Prospectus of this Scheme also may be had on application.
A MEDICAL OFFICER in attendance daily at half-past twelve o'clock.
THOS. FRASER, Esq. Sec.
London, 29, King William-street, City, E.C.

ALBERT AND MEDICAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.
HEAD OFFICE—7, WATERLOO-PLACE, PALL-MALL, LONDON, S.W.
CITY BRANCH—63, MOORGATE-STREET, E.C.
(Established 1838).
The Business of the Medical Invalid and General Life Assurance Society having been amalgamated with the Albert Life Assurance Company, the united Businesses will henceforth be carried on under the above title.

DIRECTORS.
WILLIAM BRATTLE, Esq., M.D. JAMES NICHOLS, Esq.
Capt. the Hon. S. T. CARRISLE, Rear-Adm. the Right Hon. Lord
R.N., C.B. GEORGE PAULET, C.B.
Lieutenant-Colonel J. CHODDACH. GEORGE RAYMOND, Esq.
SWYFEN JERVIS, Esq. THOS. STEVENSON, Esq., F.S.A.
WILLIAM KING, Esq. ROBERT WHITWORTH, Esq.
G. GOLDSMITH KIRBY, Esq.

DEPARTMENT OF MEDICAL STATISTICS.
WILLIAM FARR, Esq., M.D., F.R.S., D.C.L., General Register Office.
LIFE DEPARTMENT.
Assurances, Annuities, and Endowments granted, and every Provision for Families arranged. Premiums on the half-Credit system.
Extension of limits for voyaging and residence at ordinary rates. Naval and Military Lives, not in active service, assured at ordinary rates.

INVALID LIVES.
Assured on scientifically constructed Tables, at premiums equivalent to the risk.

GUARANTEE DEPARTMENT.
In this Department the Company guarantees the fidelity of persons sailing, or about to fill, situations of trust; and when a Life Assurance is combined with such Guarantee, a considerable reduction is made in the Premium for the latter.
Accumulated Fund exceeds ..... £500,000
Subscribed Capital ..... 417,100
Paid-up Capital ..... 157,000
Annual Income from Life Premiums, upwards of ..... 250,000
The new Business is now progressing at the rate of more than 25,000L. per annum. From Professor De Morgan's Report upon the valuation of Liabilities, (end of 1858), and the Statements of Accounts, it appeared at that time that the Surplus in favour of the Albert Business alone, after providing for every Liability, was 192,925L. 2s. 11d.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 17, 1860.

THE case of Reg. v. Davidson, decided at the Central Criminal Court during the October Session, merits attention. The defendant, who was indicted for an indecent assault, pleaded that he had formerly, before another tribunal, been put on his trial for the same offence, on which occasion the jury were improperly, and without sufficient grounds under the circumstances for that course, discharged by the presiding judge from giving a verdict. To this plea there was a replication, that on that occasion there was no likelihood of the jury agreeing upon a verdict; that they had been locked up for several hours; and that the judge felt it necessary in his discretion to discharge them. To this replication the defendant demurred; and his counsel contended that the plea was good, as the defendant had once been in jeopardy for the offence with which he was charged; that the discharge of the jury, without the consent of the accused, and without sufficient grounds to warrant such a course, was tantamount to an acquittal. The Court, however; consisting of Pollock, C. B., Martin, B., and Hill, J.; held the plea bad; that the propriety of discharging a jury from giving a verdict was entirely a question for the discretion of the presiding judge; and although possibly an indiscreet exercise of it might form ground for an impeachment, it was none for a writ of error, nor for a plea of autrefois acquit to a future indictment for the same offence. Martin, B., and Hill, J., however, intimated that the power of the judge at a trial to discharge a jury ought not to be exercised except upon some overwhelming necessity, especially when objected to. The defendant was tried accordingly.

In the actual state of the law and practice, this case is worthy of notice, not as introducing any new principle, but as illustrating the existing practice, and pointing attention to a growing evil in it. Whether the law is right in exacting unanimity in the verdicts of juries has been much mooted of late years, and in the session of Parliament of 1849 a bill for its partial abolition was brought into the House of Lords by Lord Campbell, which was rejected by a large majority—most rightly, as we believe. It is not our intention to discuss the general question on the present occasion, and merely desire to advert to one of the arguments commonly used against the existing state of things. It is said that the rule requiring unanimity has given birth to the practice of locking up juries, and withholding from them refreshment and fire during their deliberations—a practice which has frequently been denounced as absurd and barbarous, and made the subject of much ridicule and satire. To this it is replied, that whatever might have been urged against it as worked in former times, its evils have been removed in modern ones, for it is now settled law that the presiding judge may discharge a jury where there is no likelihood of their agreeing to a verdict. (See Arch. Crim. Prac. 148, 149, 12th ed.) The decision in Reg. v. Davidson confirms this, and is one in the correctness of which, we apprehend, every lawyer will agree. But this is a power which ought to be exercised with the greatest possible discretion; and in that case Martin, B., and Hill, J., intimate as much. We wish we could say that this principle has always been adhered to; on the contrary, a practice has grown up of discharging juries after a comparatively short deliberation, on little or no inquiry, and sometimes on their mere statement that they are not likely to agree—a practice which defeats one of the first objects of the law in requiring an unanimous verdict—namely, the securing the fullest discussion by the jurors of the questions submitted to their consideration.

Our readers are aware that in these days the trial by jury in criminal cases has been introduced into the laws of many countries on the continent of Europe. In all of them, however, with we believe only one exception, the verdict is given by majority. That exception is to be found in the German State of Brunswick, in which the verdict must be unanimous, as among us; but it is provided that the jury are to be discharged if they cannot agree on a verdict after twenty-four hours' deliberation—a period which we presume to have been adopted as being the length of one natural day; and, according to the authority of Professor Mittemaier, the system has been found to work well. (See a paper presented by him to the French Academy in 1854, intitled "Memoire sur les Progrès de la Législation Allemande en Matière de Procédure Criminelle, et sur les Expériences faites dans les Années 1848-1853"). The Common-law Commissioners of 1853 also recommend, that if at the end of twelve hours' deliberation the jury do not agree, they should be discharged, unless they unanimously desire further time. (See their Second Report, p. 8). But there is this objection to defining any time by law—that a corrupt or obstinate jurymen could always defeat justice by carrying on a factious and harassing disputation with his fellows until the allotted time had expired. Our system, we make no doubt, is the true one, but it requires to be worked judiciously in the spirit of the law—the judge should keep the jury in deliberation for a very long time, he should use all legitimate means to secure an unanimous verdict, and should never discharge a jury from giving one until it is obvious to all common understanding that the doing so is matter of necessity, and that any further attempt to obtain it would be alike useless, unjust, and dangerous.

Before dismissing the subject we must advert to an improvement which has taken place in modern times. The rule of law is imperative, that, except in case of illness, the jury are to have neither food nor fire during their deliberation. The policy of the latter part of this rule seems questionable; but the former appears to have been established by our ancestors, with the double object of impressing on the jury that they are met for business of the most important kind, which should be dispatched with energy and single-mindedness, and that the jury-box is not the place for the display of subtlety, captiousness, or overbearing conduct; and also to prevent intemperance in eating or drinking—the sure forerunner of erroneous and scandalous decision. Still there can be little doubt that in ancient times, and occasionally in modern too, the practice was driven to extremity; so much so, that the Common-law Commissioners of 1853 (Second Report, ubi sup.) recommended its abolition. This proposition was not adopted by the Legislature; but in several recent cases the jury have been allowed to take refreshment when the trial is drawing to a close, during the trial—a judicious practice, which, if more frequently resorted to, would probably secure all the advantages contemplated by our ancestors when they established the rule prohibiting refreshment to the jury during deliberation, without the corresponding inconveniences which have occasionally led to absurdity, and exposed the system to obloquy and ridicule.

REGULA GENERALIS.

ORDER OF COURT—August 23, 1860.

THE Right Hon. JOHN LORD CAMPBELL, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by and with the advice and assistance of the Right Hon. Sir JOHN ROMILLY, Master of the Rolls, the Right Hon. the Lord Justice Sir JAMES LEWIS KNIGHT BRUCE, the Right Hon. the Lord Justice Sir GEORGE JAMES TURNER, the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir RICHARD TORIN KINDERSLEY, the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir JOHN STUART, and the Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir WILLIAM PAGE WOOD, doth hereby, in pursuance of an act passed in the 15 & 16 Vict., intitled "An Act to abolish the Office of Master in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery, and to make Provision for the more speedy and efficient Despatch of Business in the said Court," and in pursuance and execution of all powers enabling him in that behalf, order and direct as follows:—

1. Richard Richards, Esq., William Henry Tinney, Esq., and Joseph Humphry, Esq., the three remaining Masters in Ordinary of the said court, shall be, and they are hereby, released from their duties as such Masters as aforesaid, as from the 23rd August instant.
2. The matters of the suitors of the High Court of Chancery, and all causes, matters, and things which stand referred to any of the Masters in Ordinary of the said court, under any order made by the Lord Chancellor or the Lords Justices of Appeal for the time being, shall be referred to the Master of the Rolls, and shall be proceeded with and prosecuted before him.
3. All other causes, matters, and things now depending before the said Masters shall be proceeded with and prosecuted before the respective judges of the said court by whom, or by whose predecessors respectively, the orders referring such causes, matters, and things to the said Masters were respectively made.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 24, 1866.

HAVING in some former articles noticed the first and second parts of the Trustees and Mortgagees Act, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, we now proceed to review the two last parts of that act, beginning with the 25th section. We must, however, premise, that trustees or executors, bound to invest money at interest, when no security had been pointed out to them by the instrument under which they acted, could not formerly, with absolute safety, invest trust funds except in the 3l. per Cents. The object of the 25th section is to extend their powers of investment beyond such narrow limits. It is as follows:—"Trustees having trust money in their hands, which it is their duty to invest at interest, shall be at liberty, at their discretion, to invest the same in any of the parliamentary stocks or public funds, or in government securities, and such trustees shall also be at liberty, at their discretion, to call in any trust funds invested in any other securities than as aforesaid, and to invest the same on any such securities as aforesaid, and also from time to time, at their discretion, to vary any such investments as aforesaid for others of the same nature: provided always, that no such original investment as aforesaid, (except in the 3l. per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities), and no such change of investment as aforesaid, shall be made where there is a person under no disability entitled in possession to receive the income of the trust fund for his life, or for a term of years determinable with his life, or for any greater estate, without the consent in writing of such person."

Now, we have the same complaint to make against this section which we have made against many other parts of the act, viz. that it interferes arbitrarily, perhaps, however unintentionally, with what may have been the intention of the author of the trust. It may be wise to expand the narrow rule laid down by the Court of Chancery for the investments of trustees, where no direction has been given to them in what mode their investments are to be made; but we think that the Legislature has gone too far in giving powers to trustees which, perhaps, it was never contemplated by the settlor that they should possess. In other words, we think that the powers of investment given to trustees by the 25th section ought to have been expressly confined to cases where there are no directions for investment in the instrument creating the trust. Suppose, for instance, a very cautious, or, if you like, a speculative testator, (for we have good authority for saying that testators have a right to be speculative, and even eccentric), making a will, directed the trustees to invest the trust funds, we may suppose, in the case of a very cautious man, in the 3l. per Cents., or good real security; if a speculative man, in the bonds or other securities of some bran new republic in another hemisphere. Now, according to the 25th section, trustees, unless the operation of this act is expressly excluded, (see sect. 32), may neglect to invest monies at interest in the mode pointed out by the instrument creating the trust, and may thereby materially affect the interests of persons entitled to the trust funds, or the income thereof, in succession. It may be said that the proviso to the section entirely cures the evil we have pointed out, by requiring the consent of certain persons to investments to be made by trustees; but that is not so. In the first place, its operation is confined to cases where "there is a person under no disability entitled in possession to receive the income of the trust fund for his life, or for a term of years determinable with his life, or for any greater estate," leaving unprovided for cases where a person may be entitled to the income of the trust funds for the life of another, for joint lives, or for a term of years, or for other periods which it would be tedious to enumerate. And, moreover, where the person entitled to the income is under disability, there is no check whatever upon the trustees.

We must here call attention to further legislation during last session upon the same subject, and we cannot but observe that it is much to be regretted that it was not dealt with in one act only. By the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 10, power is given to the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, with the advice and assistance of certain other judges, "to make such General Orders from time to time, as to the investment of cash under the control of the Court, either in the 3l. per Cent. Consolidated, or Reduced, or New Bank Annuities, or in such other stocks, funds, or securities, as he or they shall with such advice or assistance see fit;" and it shall be also lawful for them "to make such orders as he or they shall deem proper for the conversion of any 3l. per Cent. Bank Annuities now standing, or which may hereafter stand, in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, in trust in any cause or matter, into any such other stocks, funds, or securities upon which, by any such General Order as aforesaid, cash under the control of the Court may be invested; all orders for such conversion of Bank Annuities in other funds or securities to be made upon petition, to be presented by any of the parties interested, in a summary way, and such parties shall be served with notice thereof as the Court shall direct." By the 11th section of the same act it is enacted, "when any such General Order as aforesaid shall have been made, it shall be lawful for trustees, executors, or administrators, having power to invest their trust funds upon government securities, or upon parliamentary stocks, funds, or securities, or any of them, to invest such trust funds, or any part thereof, in any of the stocks, funds, or securities in or upon which, by such General Order, cash under the control of the Court may from time to time be invested."

We must also call attention to a clause in a former act, (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 32), which we think gives sufficient powers of investment to trustees; but it is not free from those errors which we have pointed out in Lord Cranworth's Act. It is as follows:—"When a trustee, executor, or administrator shall not, by some instruments creating his trust, be expressly forbidden to invest any trust fund on real securities in any part of the United Kingdom, or on the stock of the Bank of England or Ireland, or East India stock, it shall be lawful for such trustee, executor, or administrator to invest such trust fund on such securities or stock; and he shall not be liable on that account as for a breach of trust, provided that such investment shall in other respects be reasonable and proper."

With regard to the powers of maintenance, (sect. 27), and powers of appointing new trustees, (sect. 28), conferred by the act, they may sometimes be useful in cases where the usual clauses have been accidentally omitted in ill-drawn instruments; but we do not think that any practitioner would act wisely in omitting these powers (adapting them, of course, in each case, to the particular exigencies and circumstances of his clients) from any will or settlement in which they have usually been inserted, and thus rely only upon the general provisions of the act.

The power to trustees of giving receipts, by the 29th section, and which was partially provided for by the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 23, appears in itself to be the least objectionable part of the act, for it must strike every one as a most unnatural state of the law that persons to whom money is payable upon any trust should not have ample power of giving receipts for such money. It must, however, be observed that there is another receipt clause in the same act; so that we have three receipt clauses—two in this act, and one in Lord St. Leonards'—having a similar object in view. This, however, is what will ever occur when an act is not carefully prepared, either with reference to what is contained within itself, or in the acts of preceding sessions.

The next section, (sect. 30), enabling executors to pay debts, upon such evidence as they may think sufficient, to accept compositions, to allow time for payment of debts, to enter into compromises, compound, and submit matters to arbitration, will be useful where a conveyancer may have omitted to insert a more perfect form.

With regard to the general provisions contained in part 4 of the act, it will be observed, that by the 34th section "the provisions contained in this act shall, except as hereinbefore provided, extend only to persons entitled or acting under a deed, will, codicil, or other instrument executed after the passing of this act, or under a will or codicil confirmed or revived by a codicil executed after that date." With reference to this section, we have to remark, that the words "except as hereinafter provided" appear to be surplusage, inasmuch as in no former part of the act does it appear that it is to have a retrospective operation.

The most important section, however, in this part of the act, is the 32nd, which enacts, that "none of the powers or incidents hereby conferred, or annexed to particular offices, estates, or circumstances, shall take effect, or be exercisable, if it be declared in the deed, will, or other instrument creating such offices, estates, or circumstances, that they shall not take effect." A declaration to this effect will, we believe, be a very useful, if not a usual, one in all future instruments; for one of the consequences of its omission is, as detailed in the concluding part of the 32nd section, as follows:—"Where there is no such declaration, then, if any variations or limitations of any of the powers or incidents hereby conferred or annexed are contained in such deed, will, or other instrument, such powers or incidents shall be exercisable or shall take effect only subject to such variations or limitations."

Finally, we cannot but observe, whatever may be the merits of the principle upon which the act is proposed to be drawn, it is much to be regretted that, affecting, as it may do, so many transactions, greater thought, care, and accuracy have not been expended in its preparation for the too-ready acceptance of the Legislature.

If it is advisable to alter the law in any respect, surely it is worth while to effect the alteration in such a way that it may be called, not in the parliamentary, but in the real, sense of the word, an amendment.

If our mode of conveyancing is to be improved, cannot some man of real learning and eminence, such as the late Mr. Brodie, be found, who would produce us a system such as practitioners might safely, and therefore willingly, adopt, and of which the Legislature might not, on giving it their imprimatur, be in after years heartily ashamed?

ON SIR W. P. WOOD'S PARTIAL DISSENT FROM THE REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS

APPOINTED TO INQUIRE INTO THE EXPEDIENCY OF BRINGING THE COURTS TOGETHER INTO ONE PLACE OR NEIGHBOURHOOD, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES. (6 JUNE, N. S., PART 2, PP. 290 ET SEQ., 345).

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—I think that the public will have much cause to regret if the dissent of Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., from that part of the Report of the commissioners approving of the application of the Funds B., D., and E. to the purchasing of land, and building of new courts of law and equity, is to stand in the way of so great a desideratum. The public could scarcely have expected that learned, luminous, and liberal-minded judge to have taken so narrow and technical a view of the subject as from Appendix A. he seems to have done. His opinion manifestly is—and it pervades his entire reasoning—that complete justice with respect to the dealing with Fund B. (1,291,629*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.* stock) could only be effected by dividing it amongst all the suitors of the court or their representatives from the year 1768 down to the present time, from the investment of whose cash this fund has accumulated; but that as this “is a right not capable of being enforced by any remedy,” therefore it should only be applied for the benefit of the present and future suitors of the Court of Chancery, and this rather by reducing the fees on Chancery proceedings than on building new Chancery courts and offices, but on no account upon building courts of common law, or other courts not being courts of equity.

Now, this is what I have taken the liberty of calling a narrow and technical view of the subject; and I think that, even on Sir W. P. Wood's own reasoning, his opinion is either too narrow or too liberal. It is clear, throughout Appendix A., that his proposed application of the fund is governed by the doctrine of cy-près, and that, as perfect justice cannot be done by handing over the fund to the suitors or their representatives, whom a priori he considered entitled to it, the nearest approach to that equity should be sought in its administration; and he would therefore, by means of this fund, reduce fees on Chancery proceedings, or extinguish them altogether. Now, for a moment, let us consider this as a charitable foundation, although without one word of dedication by the supposed parties contributing. The first thing to be considered is the intention of the founders.

Now, suppose that at a period when Consols were 75*l.*, the parties to two Chancery suits—suit A. and suit B.—had each to pay in 10,000*l.*, and the parties to suit A. agreed to ask the Court to invest, but the parties to suit B., thinking that Consols would go lower, agreed that it was not to be invested. Suppose, then, a conversation like the following between the parties to suits A. and B.:—

A.—Why don't you invest? Consols are so low they are sure to rise. Besides, in the meantime no income is derived from your 10,000*l.*

B.—We think that Consols will go much lower, and we prefer being sure of the sum of 10,000*l.* when we take it out; besides, if Consols go much lower, we can then ask to have it invested. But, further, in all probability the Court will mero motu invest it, and then we shall be entitled to all the increase as arising from a dealing with our monies without our permission.

A.—You are quite mistaken there; upon no principle can you be entitled to more than your pound of flesh. If the Court invests your 10,000*l.*, it does so at its own risk, and not at yours; and the State being bound to repay you your 10,000*l.*, it can do what it pleases with the profits, if any; and we understand that there is a grand project in hand to the effect, that when such profits amount to a sufficient sum, all fees on Chancery proceedings are to be abolished, so that we shall derive just as much benefit from your excessive prudence as you can.

B.—The profits must either be ours, or the absolute property of the State; if ours, it ought to be paid to us; but if not, we protest against you or your class of speculators deriving any benefit from it—it should be applied for the benefit of us, and the other suitors who leave their money in court as cash; but we would rather see it flung into the sea, or applied in the reduction of common-law fees, than in reducing your fees.

What becomes now of the doctrine of cy-près? And why is a distinction to be drawn between suitors at common law and suitors in equity, but not to be drawn between two classes of suitors in equity positively antagonistic in their feelings? I submit that Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., to be consistent, must make this distinction.

But the real question is this, has one penny of this accumulated fund been made at the expense of the suitor? The negative of this would appear to be too clear to require argument; yet Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., assumes the affirmative. The suitors, from whose money this fund has arisen, declined to run the chances of the rise or fall of Consols, and said, “We must have the exact sum we pay in.” The Court replies, “You shall, and nothing more.” What concern is it to those suitors, that the State, not the Court, taking upon itself the chance of the rise or fall of Consols, and consulting public policy, which forbids the locking up of such enormous sums of money, authorises the Court of Chancery to invest these monies? The suitor gets no less than his own; why should he get more? Is he to be in as good a position as regards profits as the suitor who asks that the money may be invested; and in a better position than he, by reason of having a right to be paid the exact sum paid in? Who would ask for investment under such circumstances? This brings me to the only really debatable ground upon which it can be contended that the suitors have any the remotest interest in the profits derived from the use of their money; and that is upon the ordinary right of a cestui que trust against his trustee to the profits made of his money. I shall not attempt to discuss the question, which is fully observed upon in the Report, whether the Court of Chancery stands in that relation of trustee to its suitors paying in money; for the purpose of my argument, I will assume that it is a trustee, but I must also be allowed to assume that the State is surety for that trustee. Suppose, then, that A. says to B., “Here is a box with 10,000 sovereigns in it; I wish you to keep these 10,000 sovereigns under lock and key for me until I want them, but you are not to invest them.” B. would probably say, “Keep them yourself—they might be stolen.” But suppose that he took them, and invested them in Consols, declaring the trust for A., and years afterwards, when Consols were 10*l.* per cent. lower than when B. bought them, A. demanded his 10,000 sovereigns and the whole of the intermediate dividends. The Court would hesitate long before it decreed payment of both. But there are two distinctions between this case and the case of the Court being trustee. First, the Court cannot refuse to receive the money paid in in its ordinary course of business. Secondly, B., in the case put, made A.'s money profitable, and the rule of equity, that a trustee cannot derive a profit from his trust, would apply, so that there would be no one entitled to the profit if A. was not. Now, in the case of investment by the Court under the authority of the State, the Court, or its officer the Accountant-General, who, ex hypothesi, is the trustee, does not make this profit for itself or himself, but it is made for the benefit of the State, which guarantees that every cash depositor (not asking for it to be invested) shall receive the exact sum deposited.

Two questions may be asked to test the accuracy of the above conclusion—First, how do you shew that the State gives that guarantee? Secondly, how does it follow that the State is entitled to the profit?

First, in 1725, when the four Masters in Chancery became defaulters to the extent of upwards of 100,000*l.* of the suitors' money, the Masters being at that time the custodians for the suitors, Parliament recognised the State's liability to make good that amount, and raised that sum; a fortiori, the State is liable to make good all losses to the suitors' money incurred by reason of the Court's investments under the express authority of Parliament. Indeed, Sir W. P. Wood admits the first proposition; for, in speaking of the Masters in Chancery, and their default, he says—"The State was bound to remedy the wrong done to the suitors in Chancery by the officers of a public tribunal."

Secondly, how does it follow that the State is entitled to the profit? To simplify the answer to this question, let me suppose that two suitors, A. and B., bring into court two sums of 10,000*l.* each, neither of them asking for it to be invested. Both sums are invested by the Court under the standing authority of Parliament. When A. asks for his 10,000*l.* to be paid out, Consols are 10*l.* per cent. below the price they were at when the investment was made. The State is bound to make good the loss. When B. comes for his 10,000*l.* to be paid out, Consols are 10*l.* per cent. higher than when the investment was made, and there is a profit of 1000*l.* Two parties alone can be entitled to this, B. or the State. On what ground can B. be entitled to it? He would not risk the investment; he wished it to be locked up in the Bank of England, where it would not be profitable to him, though it would to the proprietors of Bank Stock. The State says to the Lord Chancellor—"Place this 10,000*l.* in a safer place than even the Bank of England; let it be invested in Consols; we guarantee the sum of 10,000*l.* to the suitor; let any loss that may arise be made good out of profits of other like investments; but if those are not sufficient, we guarantee the deficiency." Can it be for one instant contended that, although, ex concessio, the State was liable to make good the loss on A.'s 10,000*l.*, it was not entitled to the profit on B.'s 10,000*l.*? Would Parliament ever have passed such a one-sided act if such is the necessary result? Can it make any difference to this reasoning, that practically the State never has had as yet to apply any funds to make up losses on unfortunate investments other than the profits on fortunate investments? A state of circumstances may easily be imagined when even this large accumulated fund might fall far short of being sufficient to make up the deterioration in value of the stock invested on the authority of Parliament, in which event Parliament would be bound to make good such deficiency. I think that no one can deny, that if the accumulated fund (Fund B.) were, by the authority of Parliament, exhausted for any purpose—even, as I presume Sir W. P. Wood would advise, in forming a fund to meet all the requirements for which fees on Chancery proceedings are enforced, and thereby abolishing all such fees—still would the State be bound to make good all losses from investments under its authority. Then who was the party, and the only party, originally interested in the Fund B.? The answer is, John Bull, and John Bull alone; and if he consent to the building of these proposed courts of law and equity, it will be an act of magnanimity to which no suitor of the Court of Chancery individually, nor suitors in the aggregate, has or can have the remotest ground for objecting.

The normal state of Fund B. was really and practically nothing but a primary guarantee fund for the Court of Chancery to recoup out of it any losses arising upon investments made, as above stated, upon the authority of Parliament, and to avoid the necessity of from time to time calling upon Parliament to make good that loss. That normal state has been affected by Parliament on some occasions, (mentioned in paragraphs 47, 48, 49, and 51 of the Report), authorising the application of part of the capital of Fund B. in building Chancery offices, and of part of the profits in payment of certain fixed salaries and pensions to officers of the Court of Chancery. The present position of it is, and has been since the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, that the income arising from Fund B., which in 1852 amounted to 1,291,629*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.* stock, is charged with certain annual payments, and the surplus income is paid over to Fund C., "the Suitors' Fee Fund Account." To the extent of this surplus it may be admitted that Fund C. has an interest in the preservation of Fund B.; but it is to be remembered that Parliament has done nothing to absolve Fund B. from its primary and original liability to make good the losses of investments made by the authority of Parliament, and that, in fact, should Parliament agree to give to Fund C. the guarantee proposed in the Report, it will put Fund C. in a more solvent position than it at present stands; for it is to be borne in mind that a fall in Consols, like that experienced in the last European war, might soon sweep away Fund B., which has since 1852 ceased to increase.

Sir W. P. Wood says, that if the State applied Fund B. to any purposes other than "purposes connected with the Court of Chancery usually paid for by fees," the State would be making a profit "at the suitor's expense, without a corresponding benefit to him." But he has not attempted to shew that one penny of that fund has ever been made "at the expense of the suitor;" and, for the reasons hereinbefore urged, I submit it to be clearly impossible to maintain that proposition; and that neither the past, present, nor future suitors of the Court of Chancery, who, in their embodiment, are made a bête noir upon this occasion, have any the most remote right or title, in justice or equity, to Fund B., or any part of it.

Your obedient servant,

TENISON EDWARDS.

UNCONDITIONAL ASSURANCE ON LIFE.

THE LIFE ASSOCIATION OF SCOTLAND has adopted a NEW SCHEME of "UNCONDITIONAL ASSURANCE," which entirely obviates the objections to the ordinary system of other offices.

OMISSION to pay a Premium by oversight does not affect the Assurance, and, after a time, payment may be intentionally postponed for a year.

The ASSURED is not subject to any restriction as to Occupation or Residence; and NO EXTRA PREMIUMS can ever be payable.

The ASSURANCE is virtually Non-forefeitable and Unquestionable.

The POLICY-HOLDER, on surrendering his Policy, can withdraw a fixed and unusually large proportion of his payments, or take a paid-up policy for double the amount; or he may withdraw the same sum as a Loan, and still continue the Policy.

So complete and satisfactory a system of Unconditional Assurance is not to be found in the arrangements of any other Assurance Office. Explanatory Pamphlets may be had on application.

ENTRANTS to the PROFIT CLASS on or before the 5TH DECEMBER NEXT will secure ONE YEAR'S BONUS more than will be allocated to later entrants.

The LIFE ASSOCIATION OF SCOTLAND was founded in 1856, and has issued upwards of THIRTEEN THOUSAND POLICIES for Life Assurance, amounting to nearly SIX MILLIONS STERLING. The ANNUAL INCOME is upwards of 160,000L. The Policies under the original Scheme have also for many years been unusually free from restrictions and imperfections, and the Assured have received large benefits. The Prospectuses of this Scheme also may be had on application.

A MEDICAL OFFICER in attendance daily at half-past twelve o'clock.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, DECEMBER 1, 1860.

THE session of Parliament of the present year, however much it may have disappointed the expectations of many, has nevertheless been productive of several measures for the amendment of the law. Among other things it will be remarkable for having passed the third Common-law Procedure Act, the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126, forming an important sequel to the two former acts with the same title of 1852 and 1854—namely, the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, and the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125. We propose to direct attention to the provisions of this statute, with the view of shewing the changes it has effected in our law and procedure.

The act is intitled "An Act for the further Amendment of the Process, Practice, and Mode of Pleading in, and enlarging the Jurisdiction of, the Superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster;" and this order is followed in the preamble, which recites, "that it is desirable further to improve the process, practice, and mode of pleading in, and in some respects to enlarge the jurisdiction of, the superior courts of common law." In the body of the statute, however, a different order is adopted. The statute is divided by the Legislature into these four general heads:—1. "Relief against Forfeiture," comprising the first three sections. 2. "Appeal," sects. 4-11. 3. "Interpleader Proceedings," sects. 12-18. 4. "Procedure and Practice," sects. 19-46 and last. But the logical order is indifferently preserved; for it will be found that under the head "Procedure and Practice," the jurisdiction is enlarged in several respects; and some of the provisions at the end are applicable to the statute generally, and are not confined merely to the head under which they are found.

Under these circumstances we shall consider the provisions of the statute in their natural order—i. e.

1. Provisions extending the Jurisdiction of the Courts.
2. Provisions relating to Process.
3. Provisions relating to Pleading.
4. Provisions relating to Practice.
5. General Provisions.

1. Extension of Jurisdiction.

The earlier sections of this act take another step towards the fusion of law and equity, which has been so much agitated of late. By sect. 1, "in the case of any ejectment for a forfeiture brought for non-payment of rent, the court or a judge shall have power, upon rule or summons, to give relief in a summary manner, but subject to appeal as hereinafter mentioned, up to and within the like time after execution executed, and subject to the same terms and conditions in all respects, as to payment of rent, costs, and otherwise, as in the Court of Chancery; and if the lessee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall upon such proceeding be relieved, he and they shall hold the demised lands according to the lease thereof made, without any new lease." And by sect. 2 a similar power is given in the case of any ejectment for a forfeiture for breach of a covenant or condition to insure against loss or damage by fire, in all cases in which such relief may now be obtained in the Court of Chancery under the provisions of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 86, intituled: "An Act to further amend the Law of Property, and to relieve Trustees," and upon such terms as would be imposed in such court. The next section enacts, that "where such relief shall be granted, the court or a judge shall direct a minute thereof to be made by indorsement on the lease or otherwise."

The statute then deals with the subject of appeal. From an order, upon application for relief, made by a judge, it gives an appeal to the Court, (sect. 4); from an order made by the Court, an appeal to a Court of error, (sects. 5 and 6). Notice of appeal must be given, (sect. 7); and likewise bail, otherwise the appeal will not be a stay of execution, (sect. 8). Provision is then made for the form of appeal, (sect. 9); and the Court of appeal is empowered either to give judgment or remit the proceedings to the Court below, (sect. 10); and may award costs and restitution, (sect. 11).

THE ROAD MURDER—REG. v. THE CORONER OF WILTS.

SEVERAL, we regret to say ineffectual, steps have been taken to discover the author of the mysterious murder at Road, in Wiltshire, since we directed the attention of our readers to the subject in a former number. (See ante, p. 352). We then stated that the Government had appointed a local solicitor, Mr. Slack, to make further investigation, who accordingly went to the house of Mr. Kent, the father of the murdered child, and examined the inmates; the consequence of which was, that (we believe, with the advice of the Attorney-General) the nursery-maid was a second time brought before the magistrates. After several days' hearing, during which Mr. T. W. Saunders, of the Western Circuit, (who, for a reason that will presently appear, must be distinguished from Mr. T. B. Saunders), appeared in support of the charge, and Mr. Ribton, of the Home Circuit, for the accused, the magistrates dismissed this charge also. Under these circumstances, Mr. T. B. Saunders, of the Chancery Bar, who is also a magistrate for the county of Wilts, held for several days a public investigation into the matter—an investigation which it is difficult to characterise, there being no charge or accusation before him, the proceeding being unsanctioned by his brother magistrates, and being marked by an utter and apparently intentional disregard of the rules of evidence. The extraction of an enormous mass of village gossip, contradiction, and absurdity was the natural result. But one piece of information of some importance appears to have been elicited, namely, the discovery by the police, very soon after the murder, of a bloody garment in the house of Mr. Kent, in a place where it had evidently been secreted. In the meantime it began to dawn on the minds of the authorities that the great cause of the defeat which justice has hitherto experienced in this matter was, in all probability, to be found in the mode in which the coroner's inquisition was taken in the first instance. The Government adopted this view, and on Saturday last the Attorney-General moved the Court of Queen's Bench for a rule to quash the inquisition, and direct, not another inquest super visum corporis, but a special inquiry by way of melius inquirendum. This application was founded on two grounds—first, that the coroner had misdirected the jury at the inquest, and had in some other respects conducted it in an unusual and improper manner; secondly, that the inquisition was void as being drawn up on paper instead of parchment. The Court refused to grant a rule absolute in the first instance, considering it right that the coroner should have an opportunity of answering the imputations thrown out against him. They, however, granted a rule to shew cause; and we shall abstain from comment until the coroner has been heard.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—In your remarks upon that penny wise and pound foolish bit of legislation, the Trustees and Mortgagees Act of last session, the maintenance clause is not so thoroughly condemned as it ought to be. The clause is so fraught with doubts and difficulties, that its exclusion from all wills and settlements should be most carefully insured.

The act (sect. 26, not sect. 27) provides, that in all cases where any property is held by trustees in trust for an infant, either absolutely, or contingently on his attaining the age of twenty-one years, or on the occurrence of any event previously to his attaining that age, the trustees may apply the income for his maintenance or education; and they are required to accumulate the residue of such income, and the resulting income, by investing them in "proper securities" for the benefit of the person who shall ultimately become entitled to the property from which such accumulation shall have arisen.

The first question is, whether an executor is a trustee within the meaning of the act. If property—say a sum of stock—be bequeathed to an infant, without the intervention of a trustee, contingently on his attaining twenty-one, can the executor safely apply the income? The Courts will probably hold him to be a trustee; but I apprehend no counsel will advise him to act on his own responsibility before the question is judicially determined. It is unnecessary to notice that the Court does not order maintenance in such a case without the consent of the other parties interested; and it will be recollected that the professed object of the act is merely to supply powers usually given; and such a power is not usually given to an executor in that character.

The provision is confined to infants absolutely entitled, and infants becoming entitled on attaining twenty-one, or some other event happening previously to twenty-one. Therefore, when property is held in trust for an infant on his attaining a more advanced age, or on the happening of some event which may not happen before he attains twenty-one, no maintenance is given. But if it is to be presumed that a testator intends to provide maintenance where the contingency is attaining twenty-one, why not where it is attaining twenty-four or twenty-five?

The expressions "all cases" and "any property" are most comprehensive, the former including the case of an infant entitled to the income only, the latter real as well as personal estate. And the "person who shall ultimately become entitled to the property" means, it is apprehended, the person who shall ultimately become entitled to the corpus—"property" being used here in the same sense as at the commencement. The provisions usually inserted in wills and settlements, to some extent, vary according to the particular circumstances of each case; but they agree in converting, in some way or other, the surplus income into corpus, and give to the tenant for life, where there is one, a life interest. The same thing, it is presumed, was intended to be accomplished here, by declaring that the accumulation of income shall be held in trust for the person who shall ultimately become entitled to the property. What is the result?

If real property be held in trust for an infant in fee, will the surplus income, on his death under twenty-one, belong to the heir or administrator? "Ultimately entitled" points to some time subsequent to the cesser of the accumulation. The infant himself does not answer the description, for he is presently entitled; and if "property" means corpus, the administrator is not entitled at all. "Ultimately entitled" applies most properly to the heir, but the heir certainly was not intended.

Again: if real or personal property be settled in trust for an infant for life, and after his death for his children or some other persons absolutely, I presume the children or other persons will take the surplus immediately, or as soon as their share can be ascertained, and the tenant for life will take nothing. But if real estate be settled in trust for an infant for life, with remainder to his sons successively in tail, will the surplus belong to the first son at his birth, and whether he attains twenty-one or not, or to the person who becomes entitled to the fee-simple, either as ultimate remainderman or reversioner, or under a disentailing assurance?

And wherever, on the infant attaining twenty-one, the person ultimately entitled is not ascertained, what is to be done with the future income of the surplus? Take the following case:—

Property is held in trust for an infant for life, and at his death for such of his children as shall be then living. The tenant for life will not be entitled to the future income of the accumulated surplus, because he is not the person ultimately entitled to the property, and the children who may become entitled cannot be ascertained till his death. Is the Thellusson Act partially repealed? If not, at the end of twenty-one years from the settlor's death, it will step in and admit the settlor's real or personal representatives, to make confusion worse confounded.

Lastly, what is meant by "proper securities"—those mentioned in the 25th section? Are real securities excluded, such securities being admissible under the powers usually inserted?

S. S. W.

Lincoln's-inn, Nov. 27.

WALTER COULSON, Esq.—We have to record the death of this gentleman, for several years past the parliamentary counsel to the Home Office. He was called to the Bar in Michaelmas Term, 1823, where he attained considerable eminence as a conveyancer. The deceased was a Queen's Counsel and a Bencher of Gray's Inn.

EXAMINATIONS AT THE INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY.

MICHAELMAS TERM, 1860.

At the examination of candidates for admission on the roll of attorneys and solicitors of the Superior Courts, the Examiners recommended the following gentlemen, under the age of twenty-six, as being entitled to honorary distinction:—

Frederick James Hawkins, aged twenty-five, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Forshaw & Goodman, of Liverpool; Richard Finch, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. John Mayhew, of Wigan, and Messrs. Sharpe, Jackson, & Parker, of London; Arthur Jackson, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. Edward Jackson, of London and Wisbeach; Frederic William Tomkinson, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Mr. Richard Heaton, of Burslem.

The Council of the Incorporated Law Society have accordingly awarded the following prizes of books:—

To Mr. Hawkins, the prize of the Honourable Society of Clifford's-inn; to Mr. Finch, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society; to Mr. Jackson, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society; and to Mr. Tomkinson, one of the prizes of the Incorporated Law Society.

The Examiners have also certified that the following candidates, whose names are placed in alphabetical order, passed examinations which entitle them to commendation:—

Thomas Mathias Baker, aged twenty-one, who served his clerkship to Mr. John Baker, of Great Yarmouth, and Mr. Charles Francis Fisher, of Ventnor, Isle of Wight; William Charles Dalrymple, aged twenty-five, who served his clerkship to Mr. Charles Frederick Robinson, of London; Joseph Augustus Hellard, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Hellard, of Portsmouth, and Messrs. Williamson, Hill, & Co., of London; Gabriel Lindo, aged twenty-two, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Cooper & Hodgson, of London, and Mr. Nathaniel Lindo, of London; William Rogers, aged twenty-three, who served his clerkship to Mr. James Johnston, of London; and Henry Steedman, aged twenty-three, who served his clerkship to Mr. Lindsey Wm. Winterbotham, of Stroud, and Messrs. Lewis, Wood, & Street, of London.

The Council have accordingly awarded them certificates of merit.

The Examiners have further announced to the following candidates that their answers to the questions at the examination were highly satisfactory, and would have entitled them to prizes or certificates of merit if they had been under the age of twenty-six:—

Basil Field, B.A., aged twenty-six, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Field & Roscoe, of London; Richard Wm. Davis Clarence Halse, aged thirty-two, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Head & Venn, of Exeter; Robert Hart, aged twenty-six, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Chilton & Burton, of London; Edward Fleetwood Kempson, aged twenty-six, who served his clerkship to Mr. Wm. Blackman Young, of Hastings, Messrs. Sharpe, Field, & Jackson, of London, and Messrs. Lawrance, Plews, & Boyer, of London; Dalton Thomas Miller, aged thirty, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Chilton & Burton, of London; James Stockton, aged thirty-three, who served his clerkship to Mr. William Munton, of Banbury; William Wigglesworth, aged thirty-one, who served his clerkship to Messrs. Bagshaw & Son, of Manchester.

The number of candidates examined in this term was 146; of these 130 were passed, and 16 postponed.

By Order of the Council,

ROBERT MAUGHAM, Secretary.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, DECEMBER 8, 1860.

WE proceed with our analysis of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1860, (23 & 24 Vict. c. 126), commenced last week.

Continuing the first head of the subject, "Extension of Jurisdiction," we come to "Interpleader proceedings," and here the jurisdiction is very greatly extended. First, by sect. 12, where an action has been commenced in respect of a common-law claim for the recovery of money or goods, or where goods or chattels have been taken, or are intended to be taken, in execution under process, and the defendant in such action, or the sheriff or other officer, has applied for relief under the provisions of the Interpleader Act, 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 58,

"it shall be lawful for the court or a judge to whom such application is made to exercise all the powers and authorities given to them by this act and the hereinbefore-mentioned act, though the titles of the claimants to the money, goods, or chattels in question, or to the proceeds or value thereof, have not a common origin, but are adverse to and independent of one another." And by sect. 13, "when goods or chattels have been seized in execution by a sheriff or other officer under process of the above-mentioned Courts, and some third person claims to be entitled, under a bill of sale or otherwise, to such goods or chattels, by way of security for a debt, the court or a judge may order a sale of the whole or part thereof, upon such terms, as to payment of the whole or part of the secured debt, or otherwise, as they or he shall think fit, and may direct the application of the proceeds of such sale in such manner and upon such terms as to such court or judge may seem just." And the discretion of the court or judge is still further extended by the next section, (sect. 14), which enacts, "Upon the hearing of any rule or order calling upon persons to appear and state the nature and particulars of their claims, it shall be lawful for the court or judge, wherever, from the smallness of the amount in dispute or of the value of the goods seized, it shall appear to them or him desirable and right so to do, at the request of either party, to dispose of the merits of the respective claims of such parties, and to determine the same in a summary manner, upon such terms as they or he shall think fit to impose, and to make such other rules and orders therein as to costs and all other matters as may be just." By sects. 16 and 17, where, in interpleader proceedings, the question is one of law, and the facts are not in dispute, the judge shall be at liberty, at his discretion, to decide the question without directing an action or issue, and, if he shall think it desirable, to order that a special case be stated for the opinion of the Court. The 17th section directs that "the judgment in any such action or issue as may be directed by the court or judge in any interpleader proceedings, and the decision of the court or judge in a summary manner, shall be final and conclusive against the parties, and all persons claiming by, from, or under them." And by sect. 18, "all rules, orders, matters, and decisions to be made and done in interpleader proceedings under this act (excepting only any affidavits) may, together with the declaration in the cause, if any, be entered of record, with a note in the margin expressing the true date of such entry, to the end that the same may be evidence in future times, if required, and to secure and enforce the payment of costs directed by such rule or order; and every such rule or order so entered shall have the force and effect of a judgment in the superior courts of common law."

The process of foreign attachment, borrowed from the Lord Mayor's Court, and introduced into the general law by the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, has received several amendments by the present statute. Thus the judge may, in his discretion, refuse to interfere where, from the smallness of the amount to be recovered, or of the debt sought to be attached, or otherwise, the remedy sought would be worthless or vexatious. (Sect. 28). Whenever it is suggested by the garnishee that the debt sought to be attached belongs to some third person who has a lien or charge upon it, the judge may order that person to appear and state the nature and particulars of his claim; and "after hearing the allegations" (it is to be observed that the Legislature has not added the words "and the evidence" or "proofs," or any language to that effect) "of that person, and of any other person whom the judge may call before him, or in case that third person shall not appear, the judge may order execution to levy the amount due from the garnishee, or the judgment creditor to proceed against the garnishee, and may bar the claim of such third person, or make such other order as he shall think fit, upon such terms, in all cases, with respect to the lien or charge, if any, of such third person, and to costs, as he shall think just and reasonable." (Sects. 29, 30, and 31).

The only other instances of extension of jurisdiction in this statute are to be found in the 22nd and 36th sections. By the former of these the provisions of the County Court Amendment Act, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, ss. 63-68, relative to replevin, are extended to all cases of replevin, as well as to the cases of replevin of goods distrained for rent or damage feasant; and by the latter, the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, sect. 88, is repealed, and the superior courts or any judge thereof may, upon summary application, by rule or order, exercise such and the like jurisdiction as may be exercised by the Court of Chancery under the Merchant Shipping Act, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, pt. 9. This is another step in the direction of the fusion of law and equity.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—In your article of the 24th ult. on the Trustees and Mortgagees Act you made one or two criticisms which appear to me to be at least of doubtful justice.

Although I concur in many of your remarks, and also think the principle of the act a bad one, and certain, even though embodied in statutes as carefully drawn as that under consideration, to have very mischievous consequences, yet it seems to me that some of the faults discovered in this act do not really exist.

First, you suppose the case of a speculative testator directing his trustees to invest "in the bonds or other securities of some bran new republic in another hemisphere;" and you say, that, "according to the 25th section, trustees, unless the operation of this act is expressly excluded, (see sect. 32), may neglect to invest monies at interest in the mode pointed out by the instrument creating the trust, and may thereby materially affect the interest of persons entitled to the trust funds, or the income thereof, in succession." Now, is this proposition so certain? The section does not appear to me to justify the trustees in neglecting such a direction as you suggest. If it is only a power, they will, it is true, also have power, under sect. 25, to invest in the securities there mentioned, as before the act passed they would have had power to invest also in Consols. If, however, the direction is really imperative, the trustees will not, I submit, be absolved from its obligation by the act. Even the 25th section, read by itself, does not appear to mean more than this:—It says that "trustees having trust money in their hands, which it is their duty to invest at interest, shall be at liberty" to invest in the manner there pointed out. The plain sense of such an enactment must surely be, that in the absence, not in contravention, of directions by the creator of the trust, the trustees shall have the power thereby conferred. If, however, it can be doubted whether this is the meaning of the section by itself, the 32nd section appears to make that meaning plain. Would not such a direction be a variation or limitation of a power or incident conferred or annexed by the act?

Secondly, the words in the 34th section, "except as hereinbefore otherwise provided," (not "hereinafter provided," as by a typographical error they are cited in the article), are not surplusage, as I think you will see on referring to the latter part of the 22nd section, where powers are given to trustees "appointed by the Court of Chancery, either before or after the passing of this act." The exception appears to be needed on account of this passage, if not for any other purpose.

Thirdly, a very important question is raised by such remarks as those made in your article with reference to several of the provisions of this act, and of which that respecting sect. 30 may be taken as an instance. This, you observe, "will be useful when a conveyancer may have omitted to insert a more perfect form."

Now, what is the duty of conveyancers with reference to such enactments as those of this act? Few more difficult problems, perhaps, can be given to a man of business than to do his duty under the conditions imposed on him by such changes of the law; for it will undoubtedly require much consideration to determine, in particular cases, whether the provisions of this act may be relied on in substitution for those which it has been the practice to insert in deeds and wills. To rely on the act is, moreover, to incur great responsibility.

But does this justify a practitioner in summarily declining to make use of the statutory provisions? Must not he find out how far the act will apply to the cases which come before him, and so far use it? Is he not otherwise availing himself improperly of his power as a lawyer to deprive the makers of deeds and wills of the benefits conferred on them by the Legislature? And is he not setting himself up impertinently to obstruct, for his private ease, or in deference to his own opinion or caprice, the course of the law? Further: will the Taxing Masters allow the costs of clauses, the necessity for which is dispensed with by act of Parliament, merely because the attorney or his counsel has not satisfied himself that it is not needed? On the other hand, can the Taxing Masters undertake, or can they be permitted to undertake, any such office as that of determining what a deed should or should not contain?

I do not venture to do more than suggest these questions; but I think that they cannot be answered in such a manner as to justify a refusal to rely on the provisions of the act merely because there can be inserted in a draft "a more perfect form."

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

J. S. V.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—With reference to your comments on the Trustees and Mortgagees Act, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, it may be of use to you readers to point out that you are in error in saying, at p. 424, that no part of the act is retrospective. The 27th section provides that trustees appointed by the Court of Chancery, either before or after the passing of the act, shall have the same powers, &c. as if appointed by the original will or settlement. It is to this provision that the exception in the 34th section refers.

Permit me to add, that in my humble judgment there is much to be said in answer to your other observations on the act, though I will not ask for space to carry on a discussion which would not be very profitable, on points which after all are (as one of our equity judges is reported to have said on hearing that a judgment of his had been reversed by the Lord Chancellor) "only a difference of opinion between two gentlemen." The one point that I have mentioned is of a different kind, as I think you will admit it to be free from doubt, now that your attention is called to it.

M. I. B.

[With regard to the Trustees and Mortgagees Act, we fully agree with our learned correspondent, "M. I. B.," that it is in many places expressed in such ambiguous terms that its construction may well create a difference of opinion "between two gentlemen."

We feel indebted to him for pointing out the construction which he conceives ought to be placed upon the exception contained in the 34th section. It affords a striking illustration of the loose manner in which the act is drawn, inasmuch as the words "(except as hereinbefore provided)," if they mean anything—if they are not to be considered as mere surplusage—embrace all, if any, of the previous sections of the act; for they all, by implication, if not in express terms, apply to persons becoming trustees and mortgagees before as well as after the passing of the act.—Ed.]

THE JURIDICAL SOCIETY.—A meeting of this society was held on Monday, at its rooms, No. 4, St. Martin's-place, Trafalgar-square, Mr. W. M. Best in the chair; when Mr. Francis Morgan Nichols read a paper "On the rules which ought to govern the admission of extrinsic evidence in the interpretation of wills."

THE JURIST.

LONDON, DECEMBER 15, 1860.

As a general rule, independent of legislative enactments, the personal estate of a deceased person was the primary fund for the payment of the mortgage debts which he had himself contracted, or, if contracted by others, which he had subsequently adopted; and his heir-at-law or devisee were entitled to demand that the estate which they took in such characters should be exonerated out of the general personal estate of the deceased, unless, in the case of a devisee, the testator, either by express words or manifest intent, had exempted the personal estate from its primary liability.

Where, however, the mortgage debt was not the personal debt of the devisor or intestate, but of some previous owner of the estate, and the devisor or intestate had done no act by which he had adopted the mortgage debt as his own, the mortgaged estate was in all cases the primary fund for its payment, and the heir or devisee took the estate cum onere, and the mortgagee only could have resorted to the personal estate as an auxiliary and collateral fund for payment.

Much litigation arose in determining, in the absence of express intention on the part of testators, what should sufficiently manifest this intent to exempt the personal estate from its primary liability to satisfy the testator's own or adopted mortgage debt. There was, however, a considerable leaning in favour of the heir or devisee, not only in the formation of the rule, but in the construction put upon it; for instance, a devise, "subject to" a mortgage, was not considered to be sufficient to shew the testator's intention to exonerate the personal estate.

Whatever may be the opinion with regard to the policy of these rules, so favourable to those becoming entitled to real estate, it must be confessed that they often operated with great harshness towards widows or younger children who became possessed of the personalty, or a share of it.

This injustice at length induced the Legislature to interfere; and by the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, (commonly called Mr. Locke King's Act), it is enacted, "that when any person shall, after the 31st December, 1854, die seized of or entitled to any estate or interest in any land or other hereditaments which shall, at the time of his death, be charged with the payment of any sum or sums of money by way of mortgage, and such person shall not, by his will, deed, or other document, have signified any contrary or other intention, the heir or devisee to whom such land or hereditaments shall descend or be devised shall not be entitled to have the mortgage debt discharged or satisfied out of the personal estate, or any other real estate of such person, but the land or hereditaments so charged shall, as between the different persons claiming through or under the deceased person, be primarily liable to the payment of all mortgage debts with which the same shall be charged, every part thereof, according to its value, bearing a proportionate part of the mortgage debts charged on the whole thereof."

As might have been expected, the question naturally arises, in the application of the new rule, as to the primary liability of mortgaged land to bear its own burthen, laid down by the act, what will be considered as a sufficient signification, on the part of testators, of "any contrary or other intention?" Upon this there has been already, and doubtless there will be on future occasions, a conflict of judicial opinion.

In the recent case of Woolstencroft v. Woolstencroft (6 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 866) the testator, by his will, dated the 27th June, 1855, directed as follows:—"All my debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, shall be paid by my executors out of my estate." The testator then gave all his personal estate, except leaseholds, to his wife absolutely. He then devised real estate, which was subject to a mortgage debt, to trustees, in trust for his wife for life, and after her death for her children; and he appointed the trustees and his wife executors and executrix. Sir J. Stuart, V. C., held that the mortgage debt was primarily payable out of the personal estate. His Honor thought that if, as in the case under consideration, a testator clearly directed that his executors should pay all his debts, he surely signified an intention that the devisee of the mortgaged estate was not to pay the mortgage debt; that it might be objected to this view, that there was no express mention of the mortgage debt; but the testator expressly directed that all his debts should be paid by his executors, thus manifesting that he intended they should be paid in a course of administration different from that pointed out by the act.

Soon after the decision of Sir J. Stuart, V. C., in Woolstencroft v. Woolstencroft, another case upon the construction of Mr. Locke King's Act (Pembroke v. Friend, 1 Johns. & H. 132) was decided by Sir W. P. Wood, V. C. In the latter case there was a direction in a will, that "all just debts be paid as soon as may be," followed by a devise in fee of a freehold house, which was subject to an equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds, with a memorandum; and his Honor held that the testator had not shewn such an expression of contrary intention as to bring the case within the saving clause of the statute. His Honor observed that the testator did not say that the debts were to be paid out of his personal estate, or by his executors. Had he used the words "by my executors," there would have been something on which to build the conclusion that he meant to express an intention that the general statutory rule should not apply.

The case of Woolstencroft v. Woolstencroft having lately come before the Lord Chancellor on appeal, (6 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1170), his Lordship reversed the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, being of opinion that the testator had not sufficiently signified, under stat. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, any contrary or other intention that the devisee should not be entitled to have the mortgage debt discharged out of his personal estate. "The mortgaged land," said his Lordship, "being now made primarily liable, a liberty was still given to the testator to make an exception to the new rule, and still to throw the charge upon his personal estate. But this was to be done by his clearly signifying this intention. In my opinion he can only signify this intention by express words, or by the language employed clearly indicating that he meant the devisee or heir to take the land free of this charge, and to throw the charge upon his personal estate. . . My real opinion is, that in this case the testator had not in his mind the charge upon the mortgaged land, as to whether it should be paid by the devisee or out of the personal estate, when he directed that all his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, should be paid by his executors out of his estate. He piously wished, for the good of his soul, that all his debts should be duly paid. His executors were to take charge of his worldly affairs when he was gone, and he desires his executors to pay all his debts." With regard to the dictum of Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., in Pembroke v. Friend, which at first sight seems to be in favour of the decision of Sir J. Stuart, V. C., his Lordship said, "that Woolstencroft v. Woolstencroft being cited as an authority, Sir W. P. Wood, V. C., seemed to him merely to have sought to distinguish the case from Pembroke v. Friend, without intimating any approbation of the decision of Sir J. Stuart, V. C." Be that as it may, we think, upon the whole, that the rule for construing the act laid down by the Lord Chancellor is a sound one; and moreover, although the question is one of some nicety, that the rule in the case before his Lordship was rightly applied by him. With regard to the little flourish about the testator's pious wish, for the good of his soul, that all his debts should be duly paid, we think that it might as well have been omitted, inasmuch as Sir J. Romilly's Act, by making real estate assets for payment of simple contract debts, no longer leaves it either to accident or choice that a man's soul should be burthened with the sin of his dying at once wealthy and insolvent.

These decisions shew how necessary it is that practitioners, when preparing wills, should in the first place carefully inquire whether land to be devised is subject to any incumbrances, and also whether it is the intention of the testator to devise the land cum onere, or to exonerate it from its primary liability to mortgage debts under the statute; and then, in drawing wills, to express the meaning of the testator in such clear and unmistakeable terms as will render it unnecessary that the learned judges of the Court of Chancery should exert their ingenuity in the attempt, not invariably successful, of ascertaining what was the meaning of the testator upon the subject, or whether he meant anything at all.

PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF STUDENTS.

HILARY TERM, 1881.

THE Council of Legal Education have approved of the following rules for the public examination of the students.

The attention of the students is requested to the following rules of the Inns of Court:—

“As an inducement to students to propose themselves for examination, studentships shall be founded of fifty guineas per annum each, to continue for a period of three years, and one such studentship shall be conferred on the most distinguished student at each public examination; and further, the examiners shall select and certify the names of three other students who shall have passed the next best examinations, and the Inns of Court to which such students belong may, if desired, dispense with any terms, not exceeding two, that may remain to be kept by such students previously to their being called to the Bar. Provided that the examiners shall not be obliged to confer or grant any studentship or certificate unless they shall be of opinion that the examination of the students they select has been such as entitles them thereto.”

“At every call to the Bar those students who have passed a public examination, and either obtained a studentship or a certificate of honour, shall take rank in seniority over all other students who shall be called on the same day.”

RULES FOR THE PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF CANDIDATES FOR HONOURS, OR CERTIFICATES ENTITLING STUDENTS TO BE CALLED TO THE BAR.

An examination will be held in next Hilary Term, to which a student of any of the Inns of Court, who is desirous of becoming a candidate for a studentship or honours, or of obtaining a certificate of fitness for being called to the Bar, will be admissible.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination will be required to enter his name at the treasurer's office of the Inn of Court to which he belongs on or before Tuesday, the 1st day of January next; and he will further be required to state in writing whether his object in offering himself for examination is to compete for a studentship or other honourable distinction, or whether he is merely desirous of obtaining a certificate preliminary to a call to the Bar.

The examination will commence on Tuesday, the 8th day of January next, and will be continued on the Wednesday and Thursday following.

It will take place in the Benchers' Reading-room of Lincoln's-inn; and the doors will be closed ten minutes after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination.

The examination by printed questions will be conducted in the following order:—

Tuesday morning, the 8th January, at half-past nine, on Constitutional Law and Legal History; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on Equity.

Wednesday morning, the 9th January, at half-past nine, on Common Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on the Law of Real Property, &c.

Thursday morning, the 10th January, at half-past nine, on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, a paper will be given to the students including questions bearing upon all the foregoing subjects of examination.

The oral examination will be conducted in the same order, during the same hours, and on the same subjects as those already marked out for the examination by printed questions, except that on Thursday afternoon there will be no oral examination.

The oral examination of each student will be conducted apart from the other students; and the character of that examination will vary, according as the student is a candidate for honours or a studentship, or desires simply to obtain a certificate.

The oral examination and printed questions will be founded on the books below mentioned, regard being had, however, to the particular object with a view to which the student presents himself for examination.

In determining the question, whether a student has passed the examination in such a manner as to entitle him to be called to the Bar, the examiners will principally have regard to the general knowledge of law and jurisprudence which he has displayed.

A student may present himself at any number of examinations, until he shall have obtained a certificate.

Any student who shall obtain a certificate may present himself a second time for examination as a candidate for the studentship, but only at one of the three examinations immediately succeeding that at which he shall have obtained such certificate; provided, that if any student so presenting himself shall not succeed in obtaining the studentship, his name shall not appear in the list.

Students who have kept more than eleven terms shall not be admitted to an examination for the studentship.

THE READER ON CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND LEGAL HISTORY will expect the candidates for honours to be well acquainted with the origin and progress of our Laws and Constitution, as explained in chap. 8, part 3, of Hallam's History of the Middle Ages.

He will expect them to be well acquainted with the most important provisions of the Great Charter, (on which they will find an excellent commentary in Sullivan's Lectures, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, pp. 343 to 381); with the chapters in Hallam's Constitutional History which contain an account of the Reigns of Henry VIII, Elizabeth, the Stuarts, William III, and Anne; with the State Trials of persons eminent in our history, or which are remarkable for any other reason, from the time of Mary to the Accession of Anne; with the History of the Law of Treason, Libel, and of the Tenure of Land.

He refers those candidates especially to the 26th, 27th, 28th, and 29th chapters in the third volume of Lord Brougham's Political Philosophy; to the close of the 23rd chapter of Hume's History, vol. 3, p. 298, 8vo. ed., the passage beginning, “Thus have we pursued the History of England,” &c.; to the third volume of Millar's History; to the Preface to Gilbert on Uses, by Lord St. Leonards; the Preface to the State Trials; the 5th chapter of the second volume of Blackstone's Commentaries, (edition in which the text is preserved); and chapters 1, 2, and 3 of Mr. Justice Foster's work on the Crown Law.

All candidates will be expected to know the principal events in English History from the Conquest to the Accession of George III; to have an accurate knowledge of the Reigns of the Stuart Kings, of Magna Charta, the Petition of Right, the Bill of Rights, the Law of Treason, and the Act of Settlement.

THE READER ON EQUITY proposes to examine in the following books:—

1. Haynes's Outlines of Equity; Smith's Manual of Equity Jurisprudence; Hunter's Elementary View of the Proceedings in a Suit in Equity, part 1.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, DECEMBER 22, 1860.

WE proceed to conclude our analysis of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1860, (23 & 24 Vict. c. 126).

In two former numbers (Nos. 308 and 309) we finished the first head of our subject—"The Extension of Jurisdiction." There still remain the heads—"2. Process;" "3. Pleading;" "4. Procedure;" and "5. General Provisions."

2. Process.

First, it is to be observed that the statute puts a final end to real and mixed actions. By the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 36, all real and mixed actions, and plaints in the nature of such, were abolished, except the writ of right of dower, writ of dower unde nihil habet, quare impedit, and ejectment, and plaints for freebench or dower. By the Common-law Procedure Act, 1862, (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), ss. 168 et seq., the action of ejectment has been remodelled, and freed from the fictions by which it was encumbered. By the 26th section of the present act "no writ of right of dower, or writ of dower unde nihil habet, and no plaint for freebench or dower in the nature of any such writ, and no quare impedit, shall be brought after the commencement of this act in any court whatsoever; but where any such writ, action, or plaint would now lie, either in a superior or in any other court, an action may be commenced by writ of summons issuing out of the Court of Common Pleas in the same manner and form as the writ of summons in an ordinary action; and upon such writ shall be indorsed a notice that the plaintiff intends to declare in dower, or for freebench, or in quare impedit, as the case may be." And by sect. 27, "the service of the writ, appearance of the defendant, proceedings in default of appearance, pleadings, judgment, execution, and all other proceedings and costs upon such writ, shall be subject to the same rules and practice, as nearly as may be, as the proceedings in an ordinary action commenced by writ of summons; and the provisions of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1862, and of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, shall apply to the writ and pleadings, and proceedings thereupon." So that all actions now commence by a writ of summons—the valuable writ substituted by the Uniformity of Process Act, 2 Will. 4, c. 39—instead of the numerous and complicated modes of commencing actions which before that period disgraced our procedure. The idea of that writ seems to have been taken from the old subpoenas in Chancery and the Equity Exchequer, and it has placed our procedure on the natural and rational footing, that the first step towards enforcing the law against any person is by citing him to appear, and hear and answer what is alleged against him.

There are two other alterations of the form of process by this statute—one of which is, that the costs of writs of mandamus and injunction under the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, may be included in such writs, and payments enforced in the same manner as costs payable under a rule of court, (sect. 32); and the other, that “writs of injunction against a corporation may be enforced either by attachment against the directors or other officers thereof, as in the case of a mandamus, or by writ of sequestration against their property and effects, to be issued in such form, and tested and returnable in like manner, as writs of execution, and to be proceeded upon and executed in like manner as writs of sequestration issuing out of the Court of Chancery.” (Sect. 33).

3. Pleading.

The first section on this subject which attracts attention is the 19th, which enacts, that “the joinder of too many plaintiffs shall not be fatal, but every action may be brought in the name of all the persons in whom the legal right may be supposed to exist; and judgment may be given in favour of the plaintiffs by whom the action is brought, or of one or more of them, or, in case of any question of misjoinder being raised, then in favour of such one or more of them as shall be adjudged by the Court to be entitled to recover: provided always, that the defendant, though unsuccessful, shall be entitled to his costs occasioned by joining any person or persons in whose favour judgment is not given, unless otherwise ordered by the court or a judge.” And the next enacts, that on the trial of such a cause, a defendant, who has pleaded a set-off, may obtain the benefit of it by “proving either that all the parties named as plaintiffs are indebted to him, notwithstanding that one or more of such plaintiffs was or were improperly joined, or on proving that the plaintiff or plaintiffs who establish their right to maintain the cause is or are indebted to him.” The 21st section provides, that “no other action shall be brought against the defendant by any person so joined as plaintiff in respect of the same cause of action.” The enactments in these three sections, which have the effect of bringing the system of the superior courts into accordance with that of the county courts, (see Pollock and Nichol’s County Court Practice, 107), seem improvements on the whole; but great care must be taken in practice for the future to remove from the record at the proper time the name of any plaintiff which has been improperly inserted; otherwise a judgment obtained by the defendant will be not only evidence against, but conclusive on a person who really had nothing to do with the suit, and whose name was inserted in it either from carelessness or the desire to injure him.

Under this statute a plaintiff in replevin may, in answer to an avowry, pay money into court in the same way as defendants in other actions, without working a forfeiture of the replevin bond, (sects. 23 and 24); and the defendant in an action on a bond, with a condition or defeasance, &c., with a penalty; and the defendant in an action for detaining the goods of the plaintiff, may, by leave of the court or a judge, pay money into court, (sect. 25).

4. Procedure.

Numerous acts of Parliament have been passed from time to time for restraining frivolous actions, or bringing in a superior court actions which ought to have been brought before an inferior tribunal. To these an important addition has been made by the 34th section of the present statute, which enacts—“When the plaintiff, in any action for an alleged wrong, in any of the superior courts, recovers by the verdict of a jury less than 5%, he shall not be entitled to recover or obtain from the defendant any costs whatever in respect of such verdict, whether given upon any issue or issues tried, or judgment passed by default, in case the judge or presiding officer before whom such verdict is obtained shall immediately afterwards certify on the back of the record, or on the writ of trial or writ of inquiry, that the action was not really brought to try a right besides the mere right to recover damages, and that the trespass or grievance in respect of which the action was brought was not wilful and malicious, and that the action was not fit to be brought.” The Court of Exchequer has held, in a case of Wright v. Hale*, reported in a recent number of THE JURIST, that this section has a retrospective operation.

The statute contains a clause (sect. 36); expressed in the same language as the corresponding clauses in the former Common-law Procedure Acts, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 222, and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 96; empowering the superior Courts, and every judge thereof, and any judge sitting at Nisi Prius, at all times to amend all defects and errors in any proceedings under the provisions of the act.

5. General Provisions.

In its general provisions this statute follows the example of the former Common-law Procedure Acts. It contains an interpretation clause, (sect. 39); a clause empowering the judges to make general rules for carrying the statute into execution, (sect. 37); a clause authorising new forms of writs and other proceedings, (sect. 38); provisions relating to the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, and the Court of Pleas at Durham, (sects. 40, 41, 42); and a clause empowering the Crown to direct that all or any part of the act be extended to any court of record, (sect. 44). Finally, the statute came into operation on the 10th October, 1860, (sect. 43), and does not extend to Ireland or Scotland, (sect. 46).

Having given this analysis of the third Common-law Procedure Act, we proceed to make a few remarks on its general character and spirit.

First, it is to be observed, that one of the distinguishing features of the other Common-law Procedure Acts is very visible in this also—large discretionary powers vested in the courts and judges. While the discretio judicis is, to a certain extent, indispensable in every system of judicature, it has ever been looked on as a dangerous engine, easily perverted to the purposes of mischief and oppression, and consequently to be narrowly watched, and exercised with the greatest caution. “Optima est lex quæ minimum relinquit arbitrio judicis; optimus judex qui minimum sibi.” (Bacon, de Aug. Scient., lib. 8, c. 3, tit. 1, “Aphorism,” 46). The infallibility and impeccability of judicial tribunals is, and ever must be, an Utopian dream. Judges are like other men, and as such perform their functions not only better for the interests of the community, but with greater advantage and ease to themselves, when they are invested with no more power than is absolutely indispensable for the due discharge of those functions, and exercise them under the feeling of responsibility. The powers conferred on courts and judges by the former Common-law Procedure Acts, as well as those conferred by the present act, (see, in particular, the 13th, 28th, 29th, and 30th sections), are very extensive, and will require the soundest discretion in their exercise. And whatever may be urged in favour of vesting such powers in a Court, which consists of several members, and discharges its duties under the eye of the public, it is difficult to see what can be said in favour of vesting them in a single judge sitting at chambers, where the two principal checks on judicial misconduct and carelessness—the presence of a jury and the publicity of the proceedings—are removed; while even the check of appeal to the Court is in some cases taken away altogether, and in all (as is well known to every practitioner) is a right exercised at great disadvantage. The truth is, that the framers of the Common-law Procedure Acts, perceiving that under the old law sufficient discretionary powers were not vested in our courts and judges, have, perhaps not unnaturally, run into the opposite extreme, and invested them with too large discretionary powers, to the great risk of the interests of justice.

Secondly, this statute, as already remarked, has taken some further steps towards a fusion of law and equity. We have no desire to discuss that broad question on the present occasion; but it is admitted on all hands that there are cases, and some of those in the present statute seem among them, in which Courts of common law ought to be enabled to give complete equitable redress to their suitors, without driving them to the trouble and expense of filing a bill in equity.

With these observations we will now take our leave of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1860.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF “THE JURIST.”

SIR,—Lord Bacon was of opinion that Courts of equity should have the power “as well of relieving against the rigour of the law as of supplying the defect of the law*.” Subsequent Chancellors, however, and in particular Lord Nottingham, defined the province of equity to be that of simply supplying the defect of the law. It seemed, indeed, rather difficult to maintain that Courts of equity could relieve against the rigour of the decisions of the Courts of common law, without at the same time rendering the former to some extent Courts of appeal from the latter. But although Lord Bacon’s opinion is open to this objection, which has frequently been made against it, there is, after all, some degree of reason in it, which may possibly be derived from the observation of his master mind, by making allowance for the very primitive state of equitable jurisdiction in this country in his times, and perhaps also for the defective and obscure expression of the observation itself. In the first place, Lord Bacon’s observation was directed to criminal as well as civil matters, and he had not in contemplation exclusively the equitable relief afforded by the Court of Chancery or the Court of Exchequer. If his observation was found not to be applicable to them, so as practically to give them the power of relieving against the decisions in civil or criminal matters of the Courts of common law, it by no means follows from this that a portion of it is surplusage. It has frequently occurred to me, as a matter worthy of consideration, what did Lord Bacon really mean? Is there any portion of the administration of justice in this country to which his observation is applicable? Is the jurisdiction now exercised by the Home Secretary in reviewing convictions in grave criminal cases an equitable jurisdiction such as that suggested by Lord Bacon? I am of opinion that it is. The prerogative of mercy, in spite of some obsolete old statutes, remains one of the brightest jewels in the Crown of England. By a fiction of law, it is supposed, when a criminal offence has been committed, that the Crown is the injured party; it is therefore, says Blackstone, only “reasonable that he who is injured should have the power of forgiving.” However quaint this little piece of sophistry may appear, there can be little doubt that it is settled law that the Crown has an indisputable right of reviewing convictions in criminal cases. The only question, therefore, which remains is, whether this prerogative should continue to be exercised, as it now is, through the jurisdiction and at the instigation of the Home Secretary, or whether there should be established a court of criminal appeal.

Now, the arguments usually adduced by those who object to the present system are, that the jurisdiction of the Home Secretary is of a private character; that he has no power to administer oaths; that he has to deal with a question which does not require in particular the ingenuity of a trained mind, and which, after all, must be tried by common sense. Then it is said he is influenced by the Press; that the moment a notorious criminal is convicted a vast number of persons write letters to the newspapers; and that the whole of a criminal trial is systematically re-opened, with this grave objection, viz. that the persons who write to the newspapers, and for the newspapers, are under no obligation, as regular witnesses, to confine themselves to the exact truth, but that their testimony is usually, as in Dr. Smethurst’s case, taken into consideration by the Home Secretary. They say that the tone of the Press is an uncertain criterion, and therefore a dangerous one; that in trials of a political character the Press may be biased, and take a one-sided view of the trial; and, still further, that the Home Secretary may himself be influenced by party motives. They urge that a tribunal of lawyers is the most approved means of trying a case a second time, and they ask, “Why should not we have a court of criminal appeal?”

From these arguments I dissent, not alone on account of their fallacious and unsatisfactory nature, but also for other and important motives. It is quite clear, that inasmuch as the Home Secretary’s jurisdiction is based upon the conscience of the Crown, it must be secret. By no known means of transmutation can the mind of the Sovereign be turned into a public tribunal. But reserving to the Crown its prerogative of mercy, what position can be assumed by a criminal court of appeal? Why, that of a tribunal instituted for trying a man twice for the same offence, contrary to the maxim of common law, from whose decision an ultimate appeal would lie. Now, nothing can be more calculated to bring discredit on the administration of justice in general than courts of appeal. What must a suitor think of the settled principles of law whose suit is successful before a Vice-Chancellor, whose decision is reversed, in a court not a hundred feet from his, a month or two afterwards, by the new decision of the Lord Chancellor or Lords Justices, whose decisions, in their turn, may be reversed by the House of Lords? In fact, it must be acknowledged that a criminal court of appeal would be open to all the defects of courts of appeal in general; it would add to the law's expense and delay, without affording any certain or satisfactory result in return. Then, with regard to the Press, it usually abstains from expressing its opinions, in the course of a criminal trial, until a verdict has been pronounced. If we had a criminal court of appeal, the Press would doubtlessly preserve the same delicate silence until after a final verdict had been pronounced. So that, so far as regards the fourth estate, a criminal court of appeal would leave the agitation made through it wholly unprovided for. If the trial happened to be a political one, the evil would not only be left unremedied, but would sometimes be aggravated by a double conviction, and the action of the equitable jurisdiction now exercised by the Home Secretary would not be so freely exercised as it is at present. As to his being influenced by party motives, I should regret to see that day come when a minister of the Crown, acting in a judicial capacity, should even be suspected of wanting that honour and integrity which has characterised the judicial bench of England for the last two centuries.

I have the honour, Sir, to be, your obedient servant,
M. R. B.

FREE ADMISSION TO COURTS OF JUSTICE —THE CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

We take the following from The Times of Monday, the 10th instant:—

"The Court of Common Council, at their last meeting, on the recommendation of the Officers and Clerks Committee, to whom the matter was referred for investigation, passed an unanimous resolution abolishing the practice, long so hateful to the public, of receiving fees for admission to the galleries of the Central Criminal Court. The report of the committee disclosed some curious facts in connexion with the subject. They say the records of the corporation in the custody of the town clerk afford no information as to the origin of the practice. The object, they understand, was to prevent the admission of improper characters to the galleries, and thereby secure due order in the courts. The charge for admission was fixed by the gallery keepers, who are appointed by the sheriffs, and varied in amount according to circumstances. The gross receipts in 1853-4 were 125*l.* 2*s.* 0*d.*, the expenses 39*l.* 6*s.*, balance 86*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*; in 1854-5, 121*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.*, expenses 38*l.* 16*s.* 3*d.*, surplus 82*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.*; in 1855-6, 174*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, expenses 53*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.*, balance 120*l.* 14*s.* 5*d.*; in 1856-7, 172*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.*, expenses 49*l.* 14*s.* 9*d.*, leaving 122*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.*; 1857-8, 137*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.*, expenses 42*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.*, surplus 94*l.* 7*s.* 3*d.*; and in 1858-9, 181*l.* 1*s.* 7*d.*, expenses 46*l.* 7*s.* 1*d.*, balance 134*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.*. The yearly average in those six years was—gross receipts 151*l.* 19*s.* 3*d.*, expenses 44*l.* 18*s.* 7*d.*, leaving 107*l.* 0*s.* 8*d.*. The committee proceed to say that it was the custom to divide the balance into three equal parts, which were appropriated to the Lord Mayor for the time being, the sheriffs, and the sword-bearer. The committee unanimously passed a resolution, 'That courts of justice, under proper regulations, should be open to the public; that the practice of receiving fees for the admission of persons to the galleries of the Central Criminal Court is highly objectionable, and ought at once to be abolished; and that the regulations for the free admission of the public thereto should be under the control of the sheriffs.' They added, that on acquainting the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs with the opinions they had formed, they expressed themselves heartily willing to acquiesce in any arrangement for the abolition of the fees, provided that satisfactory regulations could be made for admission to the galleries, and the due preservation of order in the court, and that the expenses now paid by the sheriffs be defrayed by the corporation. Those expenses the committee recommend to be so borne, and they suggest that the sheriffs be empowered to issue tickets of admission to the galleries, leaving it to the discrimination of the officers in charge as to the entry of other persons when the galleries are not entirely occupied; but that under no circumstances should admission be obtained by a money payment. Deputy Fry, the chairman of the committee, in bringing up the report to the Common Council, expressed his surprise that a practice so wholly objectionable had been allowed to last so long. He went on the great principle that courts of justice should be open to the public; and if there was one more than another of our many English privileges which it was our pride to boast of and our duty to maintain, it was the having our judicial tribunals open to the community, and a free press to report their proceedings. Alderman Rose, in seconding the adoption of the report, adverted to the annoyance the practice of taking fees gave him when he served the office of sheriff, and to his unavailing efforts to put an end to it. The most objectionable feature in the practice was, that a sliding scale of fees obtained, and that in proportion to the interest of the trial which happened to be pending, so the prices went up or down. He believed great sums of money had been extracted from the public in that way from time to time, to the great scandal, as he thought, of the corporation of London. The Lord Mayor also expressed the gratification it afforded him to assist, at the commencement of his year of office, in putting an end to a custom so objectionable on every ground. Mr. Charles Young contended that there would be no security that the practice would not still obtain of taking money at the door. Dr. Abraham said if the admission was to be by ticket, it would not be an open court, and that the court could only be open by admitting all persons to the extent of the available space. The remainder of the discussion, in which Mr. R. N. Philipps, Dr. Ross, Mr. Connell, Deputy Lott, and Mr. Rowe took part, turned upon the most desirable mode of admitting the public in future, and eventually the report was in substance unanimously adopted."

It certainly is matter of surprise that the abominable and un-English practice of exacting money for admission to a court of justice should so long have prevailed in one of the most important of our criminal tribunals; and only wish we could add, that free ingress to that tribunal of all the public, who conduct themselves with decorum, is to be unrestricted for the future. It seems, however, that although money payment is abolished, a condition precedent to admission, in the shape of a ticket from the sheriffs, is still to be required—thus supplying those functionaries with unlimited means of packing the court, should they be so minded. Still, the course taken in this matter by the Common Council, and the present Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, is very much to their credit, and we may venture to hope that in time this new restriction will follow the fate of its predecessor.

MEETING OF PARLIAMENT.

THE following proclamation appears in The Gazette of Tuesday last:—

"Whereas our Parliament stands prorogued to Thursday, the 3rd day of January next; we, with the advice of our Privy Council, do hereby publish and declare that the said Parliament shall be further prorogued, on the said 3rd day of January next, to Tuesday, the 5th day of February next; and we have given order to our Chancellor of that part of our United Kingdom called Great Britain to prepare a commission for proroguing the same accordingly. And we do hereby further, with the advice aforesaid, declare our royal will and pleasure, that the said Parliament shall, on the said Tuesday, the 5th day of February next, assemble and be holden for the dispatch of divers urgent and important affairs; and the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the knights, citizens, and burgesses, and the commissioners for shires and burghs of the House of Commons, are hereby required and commanded to give their attendance accordingly, at Westminster, on the said Tuesday, the 5th day of February next.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 13, St. James's-square, London.

ESTABLISHED 1824.

EMPOWERED BY SPECIAL ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

REPORT PRESENTED AT THE ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING, HELD NOVEMBER 30, 1860.

The Directors have much satisfaction in presenting a favourable Report of the progress of the Society during the year ending the 30th June, 1860.

This year has been distinguished by the fact, that a larger amount of New Assurances has been effected than in any corresponding period.

During the twelve months 572 Policies were issued, for an aggregate sum of 324,575*l.*, and yielding 10,179*l.* in New Annual Premiums.

The Gross Income has increased in the same time from 179,119*l.* to 185,928*l.*, and the Assurance Fund from 1,255,531*l.* to 1,330,821*l.* Thus, after the payment of all claims and expenses, the Accumulated Fund has received an augmentation of 75,090*l.*, a sum exceeding by 10,300*l.* the surplus of the previous year.

By the lamented death of the late Duke of Richmond the office of President of the Society, which his Grace had filled during a period of twenty-four years, became vacant. Whilst greatly regretting the severance of a connexion of such long standing, the Directors have the gratification of announcing that his Grace the Archbishop of York, previously a Vice-President, and who has been closely connected with the Society for a period of thirty-five years, has honoured the Society by accepting the office of President. The Directors have also the pleasure to state that the Duke of Marlborough has allowed his name to be added to the list of Vice-Presidents of the Institution.

The Directors desire, in conclusion, to observe, that all persons who shall have completed Policies on the Participating Scale before the 30th June, 1861, will share in the BONUS to be declared in January, 1862. This early participation in the Profits offers such advantages to new Assurers, that the Directors are unwilling to close their Report without inviting attention to the announcement.

The following are some of the distinctive features of the Society:—One-half of the Annual Premiums on Policies for the whole Life may for the first five years remain on credit, and may either continue as a debt on the Policy, or be paid off at any time.

Policies for TERMS OF YEARS may be effected at rates peculiarly favourable to Assurers.

INVALID LIVES may be Assured at Premiums proportioned to the increased risk.

THE ACCOUNTS and BALANCE SHEETS are at all times open to the inspection of the Assured, or of Persons proposing to assure.

SERVICE IN ANY VOLUNTEER CORPS allowed without the United Kingdom without the payment of any extra Premium.

Forms of Proposal and further information can be obtained of
GEORGE CUTCLIFFE, Actuary and Secretary,
13, St. James's-square, London, S.W.

COMMISSION.—10*l.* per Cent. on the First Premium, and 5*l.* per Cent. on Renewals, will be allowed to Solicitors. The Commission will be CONTINUED to the Person introducing the Assurance, without reference to the channel through which the Premiums may be paid.

This day is published, in royal 8vo., price 1*l.* 5*s.* cloth,
THE LAW OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR. To which is subjoined a Table of the Courts in England and Wales for the Recovery of Debts. By CHARLES FRANCIS TROWER, Esq., M.A., of the Inner Temple, Barrister at Law, late Fellow of Exeter College, and Vinerian Scholar, Oxford.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY. 13, St. James's-square, London.

ESTABLISHED 1824.

EMPOWERED BY SPECIAL ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

REPORT PRESENTED AT THE ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING, HELD NOVEMBER 30, 1860.

The Directors have much satisfaction in presenting a favourable Report of the progress of the Society during the year ending the 30th June 1860.

This year has been distinguished by the fact, that a larger amount of New Assurances has been effected than in any corresponding period. During the twelve months 572 Policies were issued, for an aggregate sum of 324,575l., and yielding 10,179l. in New Annual Premiums.

The Gross Income has increased in the same time from 179,119l. to 185,928l., and the Assurance Fund from 1,255,531l. to 1,330,621l. Thus, after the payment of all claims and expenses, the Accumulated Fund has received an augmentation of 75,090l., a sum exceeding by 10,300l. the surplus of the previous year.

By the lamented death of the late Duke of Richmond the office of President of the Society, which his Grace had filled during a period of twenty-four years, became vacant. Whilst greatly regretting the severance of a connexion of such long standing, the Directors have the gratification of announcing that his Grace the Archbishop of York, previously a Vice-President, and who has been closely connected with the Society for a period of thirty-five years, has honoured the Society by accepting the office of President. The Directors have also the pleasure to state that the Duke of Marlborough has allowed his name to be added to the list of Vice-Presidents of the Institution.

The Directors desire, in conclusion, to observe, that all persons who shall have completed Policies on the Participating Scale before the 30th June, 1861, will share in the Bonus to be declared in January, 1862. This early participation in the Profits offers such advantages to new Assurers, that the Directors are unwilling to close their Report without inviting attention to the announcement.

The following are some of the distinctive features of the Society:—One-half of the Annual Premiums on Policies for the whole Life may for the first five years remain on credit, and may either continue as a debt on the Policy, or be paid off at any time.

Policies for TERMS OF YEARS may be effected at rates peculiarly favourable to Assurers.

INVALID LIVES may be Assured at Premiums proportioned to the increased risk.

THE ACCOUNTS and BALANCE SHEETS are at all times open to the inspection of the Assured, or of Persons proposing to assure.

SERVICE IN ANY VOLUNTEER CORPS allowed within the United Kingdom without the payment of any extra Premium.

Forms of Proposal and further information can be obtained of
GEORGE CUTCLIFFE, Actuary and Secretary,
13, St. James's-square, London, S.W.

COMMISSION.—10l. per Cent. on the First Premium, and 5l. per Cent. on Renewals, will be allowed to Solicitors. The Commission will be CONTINUED to the Person introducing the Assurance, without reference to the channel through which the Premiums may be paid.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, DECEMBER 29, 1860.

PARLIAMENT has been summoned to meet for the despatch of business on the 5th February next, when there is every reason to expect that, as usual, the session will commence with ample promises of law reform, and that countless projects directed to that end, with every degree of merit and demerit, will be presented to the Legislature. Judging by what has been witnessed in previous sessions, it would be difficult to predict how far those promises will be redeemed, and which of those projects will stand even a reasonable chance of passing into law before the close of the session. We, at least, are not going to offer any prophecies or conjectures upon the matter, and will content ourselves with merely expressing the hope that sound and valuable measures of law reform will be introduced and carried, and that all pseudo ones will meet their deserved rejection, and be consigned to oblivion, except so far as their fate may serve as a warning to all who may be disposed to intrude similar projects for the future.

Among the many subjects to which the attention of the Legislature will probably be directed is that of the law and practice relative to the qualification, mode of summoning, and payment of persons who serve on juries—matters well worthy the attention of the Legislature, and on which reform seems much required.

The expression by which our common-law mode of trial is usually denoted, "trial by jury," is unquestionably a misnomer, and has given rise to many misconceptions. It is a trial by "judge and jury," and we venture to say, that with all its faults, real or imaginary, it is immeasurably superior to any other mode of trial hitherto devised in any country, and fully deserves the esteem and affection in which it has in every age been held by Englishmen in general. True it is that its utility has been questioned of late, and that it has been dispensed with by statute in certain cases to which it is unsuited, as well as in some others where, in our humble judgment, it ought not to have been interfered with. But the system, however good in principle, is not, as worked in practice, without its faults, which have produced their natural fruits in creating a prejudice against it in the minds of many, and have often induced persons summoned to serve on juries to evade that duty if possible. Others, indeed, try to escape from it on the ground that it is a waste of their time; but such persons are unfit for a land of freedom, and it is only to be regretted that their lot has been cast in one. At all events, "lex non favet delictorum votis," and the unconstitutional and selfish inclinations of such persons ought never to be adopted as a basis of legislation. And as, according to the true old maxim, "confirmat usum qui tollit abusum," that legislator is the best friend of our jury system who relieves it from the evils that have crept into it, either from unsound laws, or the injudicious administration of wise ones.

Previous to the existing Jury Act, 6 Geo. 4, c. 50, great abuses prevailed in the mode of striking juries, and the system of "packing" seems to have been carried to an enormous extent, with little or no check upon it. In one case, where counsel complained of a jury on the ground that they had been packed, it was answered by the Bench—"If by packing a jury you mean selecting a jury, the officer had a right to do so." This, of course, could not be borne, and the statute in question was passed to remedy that evil, together with some others. The 1st section enacts—"Every man, except as hereinafter excepted, between the ages of twenty-one years and sixty years, residing in any county in England, who shall have, in his own name, or in trust for him, within the same county, 10*l.* by the year above reprises in lands or tenements, of freehold, copyhold, or customary tenure; . . . or who shall have within the same county 20*l.* by the year above reprises in lands or tenements held by lease or leases for the absolute term of twenty-one years, or some longer term; . . . or who, being a householder, shall be rated or assessed to the poor rate, or to the inhabited house duty, in the county of Middlesex, on a value of not less than 30*l.*, or in any other county on a value of not less than 20*l.*; or who shall occupy a house containing not less than fifteen windows, shall be qualified and shall be liable to serve on juries for the trial of all issues joined in any of the King's courts of record at Westminster, and in the superior courts, both civil and criminal, of the three counties palatine, and in all courts of assize, nisi prius, oyer and terminer, and gaol delivery, such issues being respectively triable in the county in which every man so qualified respectively shall reside; and shall also be qualified and liable to serve on grand juries in courts of sessions of the peace, and on petty juries for the trial of all issues joined in such courts of sessions of the peace, and triable in the county, riding, or division in which every man so qualified respectively shall reside." In Wales the qualification is one-third lower, but in every other respect the liability is the same. Sect. 30 provides that the Courts may order special juries to be struck. Sect. 31 provides, "that every man who shall be described in the jurors' book for any county in England, Wales, or for the county of the city of London, as an esquire or person of higher degree, or as a banker or merchant, shall be qualified and liable to serve on special juries in every such county in England and Wales and in London respectively, and the sheriff of every county in England and Wales, or his undersheriff, and the sheriffs of London, or their secondary, shall, within ten days after the delivery of the jurors' book for the current year to either of them, take from such book the names of all men who shall be described therein as esquires or persons of higher degree, or as bankers or merchants, and shall respectively cause the names of all such men to be fairly and truly copied out in alphabetical order, together with their respective places of abode and additions, in a separate list to be subjoined to the jurors' books, which list shall be called 'the Special Jurors' List.'" Sect. 35 provides, "that no juror who shall serve upon any special jury shall be allowed to take, for serving on any such jury, more than such sum of money as the judge who tries the issue shall think just and reasonable, and which shall not exceed the sum of 1*l.* 1*s.*, except in cases wherein a view is directed."

In reference to this statute, the Common-law Commissioners, in their Second Report, observe—"While we are prepared to maintain trial by jury in all cases where facts of a more complicated nature are to be dealt with, we are not blind to the fact that in many instances juries are not so constituted as to insure such an average amount of intelligence as might be desired. A jury of London or Liverpool merchants may be, as we believe them to be, an excellent tribunal to try a commercial cause; or a jury of country gentlemen to try a question relating to a watercourse, or the boundaries of an estate; but it must be admitted that in the agricultural districts the common juries are sometimes composed of a class of persons whose intelligence by no means qualifies them for the due discharge of judicial functions. Such persons are unaccustomed to severe intellectual exercises, or to protracted thought, and, used to an active out-door life and employment, when shut up for hours in a jury-box, bewildered by law terms, by conflicting evidence, and the disputations of contending advocates, who appeal to their prejudices, sometimes pronounce verdicts which bring the institution of juries into disrepute. We are of opinion that the standard of qualification of jurymen in the country, which is at present as low as a rating on a value of 20*l.*, should be raised; and further, that on every trial there should be an admixture of jurymen of the class from which the special juries are now taken. This is, indeed, now the law, though, in practice, the names of persons qualified to be special jurors are not placed on the common jury panel. There is every reason why jurors of the higher class should assist in the administration of justice to the same extent as those who constitute the common juries. We think the higher class of jurors should bring the assistance of their more cultivated minds and superior intelligence to the decision of cases which, though they may not admit of the general expense attendant under the present system on having a special jury, may not be the less important to the parties whose interests are involved. At the same time, it should be understood that we do not propose to abolish the right which now exists of having a special jury as at present appointed. What we recommend is, that the general jury panel should be made up indiscriminately from all persons qualified to serve on either jury." And in their Third Report—"We think it right to avail ourselves of this opportunity to invite renewed attention to our former observations respecting the constitution of juries. More especially we would urge the consideration of that part of our recommendations which relates to securing the attendance on common juries of the class of persons who now serve exclusively on special juries, with a view to the improvement of the former by the admixture of persons of higher education and intelligence. We are strongly persuaded that a very great improvement would by this means be effected in the constitution of juries; and as we do not propose to do away with the right of parties to resort to a special jury, or to deprive special jurors, when serving as such, of the additional remuneration which they are in the habit of receiving, we can see no ground why the liability of such persons to serve on common juries, which already exists in law, though it is not so required in practice, should not be enforced." And in a recent case before the Court of Common Pleas, the Lord Chief Justice, in answer to a special jurymen, who complained of being kept waiting, is reported to have said—"I may tell you, sir, that the distinction between common and special jurors will shortly be done away with, and, instead of being summoned for certain cases, you will have to attend from the beginning of the sittings to the end."

The question raised by the Common-law Commissioners—whether the existing course of taking common jurors from the general jury list, minus the names of those liable to serve on special juries, is or is not imposed by law, or is a mere practice introduced by the undersheriffs, in disregard or in ignorance of it—could easily be put right by a few words in a declaratory statute. But their suggestion, to raise the qualification of jurors in general, is a more important matter, and involves many grave considerations. As regards criminal trials, we certainly should protest against it, as a departure from the well-known principle of our Constitution, that every man ought to be tried by his peers. If a man's guilt is so recondite that it cannot be made manifest to twelve humble individuals, who are usually of a class in society not much above that of the accused, his conviction is unsafe and unconstitutional. It would, indeed, be strange if the juries summoned in times past were sufficient both to satisfy the above great principle and to do justice in those times, while at the present day, when the general standards of intelligence and education are so much higher, the qualification of jurors were raised on the ground of incapacity on the part of the same class of society to understand judicial proceedings. These observations apply also to civil cases, though in an inferior degree.

But grievous complaints of another kind have been brought against the officers charged with the jury lists—that through corruption or partiality they refrain from summoning favoured individuals, and summon with undue frequency others who are disfavoured. This complaint has been frequently made, sometimes with reason, sometimes without. As a recent instance, and a fair illustration, we subjoin the following letter very recently addressed to one of the daily papers, with the paper's comment upon it* :—

"City, Dec. 20.

"Sir,—I am one of those unfortunates who are continually being summoned on special juries, and, considering the large number of jurors in the city of London, I think that some unfair means must be resorted to, either in the drawing of the names or by bribery. At any rate it is not just that a man should be taken out of his business too frequently for such a purpose. At the last sittings at Guildhall I was summoned on three or four different cases.

"I would suggest, as a remedy, that if you are summoned more than once in twelve months, you may claim exemption if you think proper, as there are a great many 'guinea pigs' that in all probability would not claim exemption.

"As a few lines in your journal may cause some reform, I shall feel obliged if you will give this a corner in The Times.

"I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,

"A SPECIAL."

On this the conductor of the paper, to whom the writer is apparently known, says, "A Special' may, with more probability, attribute the fact of his being frequently summoned to his peculiarly accurate knowledge of the mercantile usages of the city of London, and the known impartiality of his decisions in the jury-box, than the favouritism and bribery suggested by him."

If the Legislature take in hand the subject of juries, we hope that they will not overlook the constitution of the metropolitan grand juries. Some of the arguments used by those who have recently endeavoured, we rejoice to say unsuccessfully, to abolish the grand jury in the metropolis, with, there is every reason to believe, the ultimate object of finally sweeping away altogether this ancient and valuable institution, could be effectually silenced by a judicious reform in the constitution of those juries.

The subject of the payment of jurors is likewise well deserving attention, but we have already exceeded our limits.

Review.

A Treatise on the Principles of Pleading in Civil Actions; comprising a Summary Account of the whole Proceedings in a Suit at Law: being the Sixth Edition of Mr. Serjeant Stephen's Work under that Title, with Alterations adapting it to the present System. By JAMES STEPHEN and FRANCIS F. PINDER, Barristers-at-Law.

[London: V. & R. Stevens & Sons; H. Sweet; and W. Maxwell. 1860.]

THIS work comes before the Profession as a new edition of one of the classics of English law. The merits of Serjeant Stephen's Treatise on Pleading are generally acknowledged; but, in order to understand their full value, it is necessary to bear in mind the state of law and pleading at the time when the original edition appeared in 1824. The old system was then in its full glory—the law of England was effectually overlaid by a complicated, unmeaning, and absurd procedure; our system of pleading—partly from defects inherent in its original constitution, partly from departures from its principles in more modern times, but principally from the manner in which the whole was worked in practice—had reached a state, not merely inimical to justice, but disgraceful to the jurisprudence of any nation, civilised or barbarous. Nor was even this all. Pleading was so entangled with the law as really to form part of it, and, indeed, seemed in the eyes of pleaders, if not of the Bar and Bench also, to be the more worthy object of attention; in other words, pleading, instead of being, as it unquestionably is, a handmaid to the law in determining the rights of parties, was viewed as a principal, to which the substantive rules of law were merely accessories. To estimate the amount of injustice worked and absurdity perpetrated under our old system of pleading and procedure would be a most painful, were it a possible, task; but the then existing race of practitioners clung to it with as much tenacity as if they thought the entire jurisprudence of the land dependent on its preservation down to the minutest particular. Associated with all this was another evil, to a certain extent the consequence of the former, namely, the fearful deterioration of our legal literature—the legal works of that period being written in the most loose and careless manner, in utter disregard of style, and not unfrequently of grammar also. But under all this absurd and mischievous rubbish there lay, though imperceptible to ordinary vision, a noble and beautiful science, which Serjeant Stephen had the merit of digging out. Disregarding the prejudices of his day, he acted in the spirit of the motto which is prefixed to the fifth edition of his work—

"Res antiquæ laudis et artis Ingredior, sanctos ausus recludere fontes."

He traced the original rules of pleading to a few elementary principles of the most simple and rational kind, evidently established by able minds after mature consideration, and admirably adapted to attain the objects of the law, namely, the extricating the real facts in dispute by the mutual allegations of the contending parties, instead of leaving them to be gathered by the tribunal from loose allegations propounded at large; the securing that the issue thus extracted should be alike material, single, and certain; and the whole without obscurity or confusion, prolixity or delay. It is true, that even in the ancient pleading there were many disgraceful subtleties, but by far the greatest evils of our system of pleading were introduced in much later times, and were for the most part clearly traceable to the losing sight of the fundamental principles of the science. Serjeant Stephen concluded his work by offering some suggestions for amending the science of pleading, although these were scarcely needed by any person who had carefully perused his work, for the very beauty of the original system brought out, by contrast, the vices of the existing one in all their hideous and disgusting deformity. As might naturally be expected, the work of Serjeant Stephen not only commanded the admiration of every enlightened lawyer, but became the elementary work for students, and, there is every reason to believe, had a large share in attracting the attention of the Legislature to the fearful state of the existing system, and the imperative necessity for its reformation.

The reforms suggested by Serjeant Stephen, together with many others, have been carried into effect by the Reg. Gen., Hil. T., 4 Will. 4, (repealed and remodelled by the Reg. Gen., Trin. T., 1853), the Common-law Procedure Acts, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 126, and other enactments, much to the improvement of our judicial system. But these alterations clearly established the necessity either of fresh treatises on the subject of pleading, or new editions of the existing works adapted to the altered state of things. The Treatise before us accordingly professes to modernise the celebrated work of Serjeant Stephen; and it only remains to inquire into the manner in which its editors, Mr. James Stephen and Mr. Francis F. Pinder—the former already favourably known to the Profession as editor of the last edition of Stephen's Commentaries, and also of the last edition of Lush's Practice—have executed their task.

We think we have at the outset some cause to complain of a discrepancy between the title-page and the preface of the work. According to the former, it is "A Treatise on the Principles of Pleading in Civil Actions," &c., "being the Sixth Edition of Mr. Serjeant Stephen's Work under that Title, with Alterations adapting it to the present System." In the Preface, however, it is described as follows:—

"The fifth and last edition of Mr. Serjeant Stephen's well-known Treatise on the Principles of Pleading in Civil Actions was published in the year 1843—a time when a stricter system of pleading than at present in use prevailed, and while it still comprised some ingenious but unnecessary subtleties.

"Important reforms in pleading, however, were effected by the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852; and as a sufficient period has since elapsed to allow of the complete development of the improved system then introduced, the present time appeared to be proper for again laying before the Profession a work on the Principles of Pleading. The question then arose, as to what extent, if any, Mr. Serjeant Stephen's Treatise could be made available for this purpose. A new edition of that work, of the ordinary kind, seemed wholly insufficient to meet the requirements of the case, for the changes which had been made were so extensive as not to admit of satisfactory treatment by means of notes, or by slight alterations of the text. Instead, therefore, of attempting what we felt would prove a failure, we have chosen what seemed to us the more satisfactory course of presenting to the Profession a Treatise on the Principles of Pleading, for which, as a whole, we ourselves are alone responsible, though it is published in the form of a sixth edition of Mr. Serjeant Stephen's work. In carrying out our design we have not confined ourselves to the task of leaving out such parts of the original work as seemed inapplicable to the existing system, and adding new enactments and cases; but we have endeavoured to correct some inaccuracies which had crept into the later editions, and have also made such other alterations as appeared to us to be necessary; yet large portions of the original work have been preserved entire; and wherever a passage has been retained, it has been given, as far as possible, in Mr. Serjeant Stephen's own words, the authorship being in each instance distinguished by a system of brackets, explained in a notice subjoined to this Preface.

"With regard to the Appendix, some of the notes of the original Treatise have been omitted, as being on subjects to which little or no interest now attaches, or with regard to which fuller information can be now obtained in works of a more modern date. Such of the notes, however, as have been retained, are given, in general, without alteration."

The reader is thus left in doubt whether the work upon which he is about to enter is a new edition of Serjeant Stephen's most valuable book, or a new work by two other authors. On examination, the truth will be found to be, that the present work is an attempt to adapt Stephen on Pleading to the state of practice at the present day—to which it bears much the same relation as Stephen's Commentaries bears to Blackstone's Commentaries, and Taylor on Evidence bears to Professor Greenleaf's work on the same subject.

Viewing, then, in this light the work before us, we shall find that, as a whole, it has been ably executed, and certainly evinces a very industrious research by the editors into the modern statutes and authorities. Even the recent Common-law Procedure Act, 1880, (23 & 24 Vict. c. 126), which was passed so recently as the 28th of August in the present year, is frequently cited; and so early in the work, that we think it probable some corrected proof was cancelled to procure its admission. Thus far we can speak favourably of this Treatise, and make no doubt it will long be used by students as the text-book on Pleading.

We proceed, however, to notice what seem to us the weak parts of it. In the first place, then, the great changes in our procedure effected by the Regular Generals of the judges, and the Common-law Procedure Acts and other modern statutes, have given rise to the notion in many minds that pleading is now either an useless or insignificant appendage to our jurisprudence. This is, perhaps, only a natural reaction from the undue importance formerly attached to it; but the notion that the science and practice of pleading can ever cease to occupy an important place in the administration of the law is alike idle and mischievous, and most perilous to any practitioner who should be so rash as to adopt it. It is true, that the ignorant or unskilful pleader need no longer be alarmed by the terrors of a special demurrer; but the ignorance or unskilfulness of his pleading may be exposed before the court or a judge at chambers, to the injury of the reputation of the pleader, and the mulcting his client in costs; or his pleading may be found defective at the trial, in such a manner as to require amendments which the judge has not power to make, or, in the exercise of a sound discretion, refuses to make; and which, even if made, will entail costs upon the client. Moreover, it is a great mistake to imagine, that because great and beneficial reforms have been effected in our system of pleading, the whole or even the chief part of its principles are altered; on the contrary, most of the sound ones involved in it have been retained, and their value rendered all the more conspicuous by the strong contrast they present to the unsound ones that have been abolished. If this be so, it follows, that in order to understand pleading, (or indeed any other branch of law), the student or practitioner must first become acquainted with the old system before he can understand the full effect and advantage of the new. Now, it appears to us that the editors of the present work, acting, as it would seem, under the erroneous notions to which we have alluded, have sacrificed too much of the original text and notes of Serjeant Stephen, and have taken too little pains to shew the connexion between the old and the new law—to point out the rise and nature of the abuses under the former, and of the alterations to remedy them that have been made by the latter. This could have been done without unduly enlarging the work, for it is actually reduced in size from the previous edition, which exceeds it in bulk by about one-fourth.

Again: one of the most conspicuous vices of the legal literature of our times is the improper employment of notes. Their legitimate use is to confirm and illustrate the text—not to qualify or contradict it, or to refer to authorities or statutes having that effect; and the employing them for these purposes is a conclusive proof that the author has not got his subject in hand. Such is, however, the constant habit of our law writers; and objectionable as that habit is in ordinary works, or even in works of practice, it is insufferable in works of an elementary or institutional character, to which class the present Treatise most obviously belongs. We do not say that Mr. Stephen and Mr. Pinder offend much in this respect, but they are not quite emancipated from the practice.

Having made these general observations, we proceed to direct attention to two places in this work where the editors have, as we think unwisely, altered the text of Serjeant Stephen. First, as has been already mentioned, the great objects of the rules of pleading, as stated by that author, are, to secure—

1. The production of an issue.
2. The singleness of the issue.
3. The materiality of the issue.
4. The certainty of the issue.

The editors have preserved all these except the second, which they have erased, and instead of it have inserted, but fourth instead of second in order, a head intitled "Rules which tend to prevent duplicity in pleading."

The design of the common-law rule which required the issue to be single was to prevent more than one question being presented to the mind of the tribunal, whether court or jury; and with this view it not only prohibited several distinct pleadings to the same cause of action or defence, but required each individual pleading to be single in itself. Now, the objectionable part of this rule was the former; and it was the habit of the old pleaders to endeavour to evade it, by crowding, as they best could, various distinct matters into one pleading. The statutes allowing several pleadings have, to a considerable extent, although not entirely, abolished that part of the rule; but the second branch, prohibiting doubleness in each particular pleading, is as much in force as ever.

Secondly, we believe that the subject of "negatives pregnant," is not noticed in this work—it is certainly not to be found in the Index, or in its natural place, under the head of "ambiguity in pleadings." The rule prohibiting it still exists, and is a very salutary one; for the resorting to negatives pregnant is one of the natural resources of dishonesty and evasion.

The importance of the subject, and the high and deserved reputation of Serjeant Stephen's Treatise on Pleading, have induced us to extend this review beyond our usual limits.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 13, St. James's-square, London.

ESTABLISHED 1824.

EMPOWERED BY SPECIAL ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

REPORT PRESENTED AT THE ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING, HELD NOVEMBER 30, 1860.

The Directors have much satisfaction in presenting a favourable Report of the progress of the Society during the year ending the 30th June, 1860.

This year has been distinguished by the fact, that a larger amount of New Assurances has been effected than in any corresponding period.

During the twelve months 572 Policies were issued, for an aggregate sum of 324,575*l.*, and yielding 10,179*l.* in New Annual Premiums.

The Gross Income has increased in the same time from 179,119*l.* to 185,928*l.*, and the Assurance Fund from 1,255,531*l.* to 1,330,631*l.*. Thus, after the payment of all claims and expenses, the Accumulated Fund has received an augmentation of 75,090*l.*, a sum exceeding by 10,300*l.* the surplus of the previous year.

By the lamented death of the late Duke of Richmond the office of President of the Society, which his Grace had filled during a period of twenty-four years, became vacant. Whilst greatly regretting the severance of a connexion of such long standing, the Directors have the gratification of announcing that his Grace the Archbishop of York, previously a Vice-President, and who has been closely connected with the Society for a period of thirty-five years, has honoured the Society by accepting the office of President. The Directors have also the pleasure to state that the Duke of Marlborough has allowed his name to be added to the list of Vice-Presidents of the Institution.

The Directors desire, in conclusion, to observe, that all persons who shall have completed Policies on the Participating Scale before the 30th June, 1861, will share in the Bonus to be declared in January, 1862. This early participation in the Profits offers such advantages to new Assurers, that the Directors are unwilling to close their Report without inviting attention to the announcement.

The following are some of the distinctive features of the Society:—One-half of the Annual Premiums on Policies for the whole Life may for the first five years remain on credit, and may either continue as a debt on the Policy, or be paid off at any time.

Policies for TERMS of YEARS may be effected at rates peculiarly favourable to Assurers.

INVALID LIVES may be Assured at Premiums proportioned to the increased risk.

THE ACCOUNTS and BALANCE SHEETS are at all times open to the inspection of the Assured, or of Persons proposing to assure.

SERVICE IN ANY VOLUNTARY CORPS allowed within the United Kingdom without the payment of any extra Premium.

Forms of Proposal and further information can be obtained of GEORGE CUTCLIFFE, Actuary and Secretary, 13, St. James's-square, London, S.W.

COMMISSION.—10*l.* per Cent. on the First Premium, and 5*l.* per Cent. on Renewals, will be allowed to Solicitors. The Commission will be CONTINUED to the Person introducing the Assurance, without reference to the channel through which the Premiums may be paid.

THE JURIST.

LONDON, JANUARY 5, 1861.

As a general rule, by the law of England a surety paying off a debt was always entitled to the benefit of the securities which the creditor may have taken from the principal debtor. There was, however, a very material exception to the rule in those cases where the security itself was extinguished by the act of payment, for then, in fact, there remained nothing to assign to the surety who paid the debt. Where, for instance, a surety paid a bond debt, he could not have required an assignment of the bond, because by the act of payment he extinguished the bond; the consequence was, that he was not a creditor by specialty, but merely by simple contract. (See Copis v. Middleton, Turn. & R. 229; Hodgson v. Shaw, 3 My. & K. 190; and Jones v. Davids, 4 Russ. 277).

The same principle was also held applicable to judgment debts. Thus, in Armitage v. Baldwin, (5 Beav. 278), a creditor sued his principal debtor, and recovered a judgment against him and the bail in the action. The surety thereupon "paid and satisfied to the creditor" the amount of the judgment, with interest and costs, and took an assignment thereof. Lord Langdale, M. R., held that the judgment was discharged, and that the surety could not recover on the judgment against the bail.

According to the law of Scotland, the surety could always call on the creditor for a surrender or assignment of all securities for the debt, the rule not being there subject to the qualification or exception in the English law exemplified in the cases of Copis v. Middleton, Hodgson v. Shaw, and Armitage v. Baldwin. The difference between the English and Scotch law upon this subject was considered by the Mercantile Commission in their Second Report, 1855, (p. 13), and they thought, very justly, that the equity and propriety of the Scottish rule were obvious, inasmuch as the surety by it obtained much aid in operating his relief from the hardship of having been compelled to pay another party's debt, and yet no detriment was thereby inflicted on any other party.

In consequence of the recommendation of the commissioners, the law of England was assimilated to that of Scotland, as to the right of a surety or co-debtor to have, without any exception, an assignment from the creditor of all securities on payment of the debt.

This recommendation was carried into effect by the Mercantile-law Amendment Act, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 5, which enacts, that "every person who, being surety for the debt or duty of another, or being liable with another for any debt or duty, shall pay such debt or perform such duty, shall be entitled to have assigned to him, or to a trustee for him, every judgment, specialty, or other security which shall be held by the creditor in respect of such debt or duty, whether such judgment, specialty, or other security shall or shall not be deemed at law to have been satisfied by the payment of the debt or performance of the duty; and such person shall be entitled to stand in the place of the creditor, and to use all the remedies, and, if need be, and upon a proper indemnity, to use the name of the creditor in any action or other proceeding, at law or in equity, in order to obtain from the principal debtor, or any co-surety, co-contractor, or co-debtor, as the case may be, indemnification for the advances made and loss sustained by the person who shall have so paid such debt or performed such duty; and such payment or performance so made by such surety shall not be pleadable in bar of any such action or other proceeding by him: provided always, that no co-surety, co-contractor, or co-debtor shall be entitled to recover from any other co-surety, co-contractor, or co-debtor, by the means aforesaid, more than the just proportion to which, as between those parties themselves, such last-mentioned person shall be justly liable."

A case has lately been determined in the Common Pleas upon the construction of this section, in which we think the Court arrived at a conclusion entirely in accordance with the spirit in which the act was framed. The case to which we allude is Batchellor v. Lawrence, (6 Jur., N. S., part 1, p. 1306). There a co-debtor, having been taken in execution on a judgment recovered against himself and others, paid the entire debt. It was held that he was entitled, under the Mercantile-law Amendment Act, sect. 5, to have an assignment of the judgment. It was, indeed, argued by the counsel for the defendant in the action, first, that the judgment was not within the act of Parliament, because it was not held as a collateral security by the creditor, and that as the plaintiff had paid the debt, and satisfied the judgment, it was no longer a security at all; and, secondly, that, assuming the judgment to be within the act, the action did not lie, inasmuch as the judgment, if assigned, would be useless to every one, and could be of no use or advantage to the plaintiff. The Court, however, did not agree with this argument. With regard to the first branch of it, Williams, J., in giving judgment, said that he thought the judgment was within the ordinary and grammatical meaning of the words used in the statute, but that it also seemed to have been the object of the Legislature to enact that the fact of the satisfaction of the judgment should not avail as an answer after it should have been assigned under the 5th section; that there seemed to be no reason to doubt that the statute intended that a person who had been a surety for others, or a person whom the statute regards as in the nature of a co-surety, should have the full benefit of an assignment over to him, from the creditor, of the judgment, in order that he might be in a better position, than he could heretofore have been in, to enforce payment of such part of the debt as remained due from the co-debtors. As to the second point urged on the part of the defendant, that the judgment would be useless if it were assigned, because there would be a plea in bar to any action upon it by reason of the previous proceedings—the taking in execution and paying off the debt—the learned judge said that he agreed with Erle, C. J., that the Legislature had spoken in terms reaching not only to a surety, but also to a co-debtor, and that the Court was fully justified in considering the word "surety" to refer to both parties for whose benefit the enactment was passed—that is, both co-sureties and co-debtors. Besides, he was not prepared to say that the co-debtor, paying the debt, had not a right to the assignment of the judgment which the statute gave him, to make the most of it that he could; although possibly there might be a plea so framed as to throw difficulties in the way of proceeding on the judgment.

This decision of the Court of Common Pleas is, we have no doubt, quite right, and it would have been much to have been regretted if the Legislature, by the use of inapt words, had failed, on so important a subject, to carry out what was manifestly its intention—the assimilation of the English to the Scottish law, which on this subject is founded on the Roman law.

It is, however, still left in doubt what use can be made of the judgment when assigned to the co-debtor who has paid off the debt. We think, whatever may be at present the effect of the Mercantile-law Amendment Act, that the broad and comprehensive doctrine of the Roman law should be, if it be not already, adopted and carried out in this country, so that, on payment of a debt by a surety or co-debtor, not only should he have a right (independently of collateral securities) to an assignment of the debt, or any judgment obtained in respect of it, but that such debt or judgment should come into the hands of the co-debtor with all the original obligatory force which either may have had in the hands of the principal creditor, the payment or satisfaction thereof being considered not in any respect as an extinguishment, but as a sale of the debt.

PAYMENT OF WITNESSES IN CRIMINAL CASES.

In a former number (ante, p. 331) we inserted an important presentment made at the Summer Assizes for Liverpool, condemning the insufficiency of the scale of allowances to witnesses at sessions and assizes, under the order of Sir George Grey of the 9th February, 1858. The grand jury of the county of York have adopted the same view, and presented the following memorial to the judge of the Winter commission of gaol delivery:—

"The grand jury of the county of York, at the Winter gaol delivery in December, 1860, desire most respectfully to call the attention of the Hon. Mr. Justice Hill to the scale of allowances to prosecutors and witnesses in criminal cases at assizes and quarter sessions, as being quite insufficient adequately to remunerate those in the humbler walks of life, who are necessarily called away from their families and their ordinary occupations, for their expenses and loss of time, by which last expression the grand jury understand the stats. 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 22, and 14 & 15 Vict. c. 45, to mean the reasonable allowance for the loss of wages during the time such witnesses are necessarily absent from their homes and their work. Those of the grand jury who are acting justices are not unfrequently very much embarrassed by the extreme reluctance of material witnesses to come forward to prosecute and give evidence in criminal cases of the gravest kind, as well as in all other cases likely to be sent for trial at assizes and quarter sessions within their jurisdiction, by reason of the loss of wages they thereby sustain, and the consequent privation to which their families are subjected. Necessary witnesses not unfrequently declare, that from their experience in former cases, they are reluctant, and even decline, again to come forward as witnesses. The grand jury are of opinion that justice is greatly impeded, and in many cases defeated, by the inadequate remuneration awarded under the present scale of allowances, and, from their observation and experience, they fear this is an increasing evil."

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Stewart Campbell, Esq., to be one of her Majesty's Counsel for the province of Nova Scotia.

PROSPECTUS OF THE LECTURES

To be delivered during the ensuing Hilary Educational Term by the several Readers appointed by the Inns of Court.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND LEGAL HISTORY.

THE Reader will pursue the History of our Constitution from the Accession of Henry VIII to the Accession of George III. He will trace the progress and varieties of judicial opinion as it affected the interpretation of Law—the Law of Real Property, the Law of Evidence, the Law of Libel, the Criminal Law, and the Doctrines of Equity; and he will point out the changes and growth of the Statute Law during the same period.

In his Private Classes he will continue to explain the History of our Constitution, and to point out its gradual progress during the Reigns of the Plantagenets, Tudors, and Stuarts.

The books to which he will refer are—Blackstone's Commentaries, by Kerr—Reeves's History of the English Law—Millar's History—Lord Brougham's Political Philosophy, vol. 3—Plowden's Reports—Hallam's Constitutional History—Rapin's History of the Period—Appendices to Hume's History—State Trials of the Period—Butler's Notes to Coke Littleton—Statute Book of the Period—Fortescue, (Amos)—Parliamentary History—Hayes's History of Conveyancing—Clarendon's Life and History—May's History—Burnet's History—Starkie's Law of Libel—Greenleaf on Evidence—Ralph's History and Memoirs—Coke's Institutes—Foster's Crown Law.

EQUITY.

The Reader on Equity proposes to deliver, during the ensuing Educational Term, a course of Nine Lectures on the following subjects:—

1. On Voluntary Conveyances and Settlements.
2. On Donaciones Mortis Causa.
3. On Charitable and Superstitious Uses.
4. On Trusts for the Separate Use of Married Women.
5. On a Wife's Equity to a Settlement.

The Reader will continue with his Senior and Junior Classes the general Courses of Equity already commenced. He will also continue in the Senior Class, and commence in the Junior, to explain the leading Rules of Pleading in Equity, from the work of Lord Redesdale.

THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY.

The Reader on the Law of Real Property proposes to deliver, in the ensuing Educational Term, Nine Lectures on the following subjects:—

1. The Statutes of Mortmain and Charitable Trusts.
2. The Law of Marriage Settlements and Separation Deeds.

In his Private Classes the Reader on the Law of Real Property will refer more particularly to the cases cited in the Public Lectures. He will also continue his course of Real Property Law, using the work of Mr. Joshua Williams as a text-book.

JURISPRUDENCE AND THE CIVIL LAW.

The Reader on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law proposes to deliver Nine Public Lectures, in the course of the ensuing Term, on the following subjects:—

1. The Roman Law of Wills, and the Principles descended from it to Modern Jurisprudence.
2. The Analysis of the principal Legal Conceptions.
3. Principles of Classification in Jurisprudence.
4. The Roman Law of Contract.
5. The Roman Law relating to Women, and its Influence on Modern Jurisprudence.

With his Private Class the Reader will proceed through all the principal departments of Roman Law, beginning with the Law of Things, and using as his text-book the Institutiones Juris Romani Privati of Warnkönig.

COMMON LAW.

The Reader on Common Law proposes to deliver, during the ensuing Educational Term, a course of Nine Public Lectures on Contracts generally, and on Mercantile Contracts, as under:—

Lecture 1. Remarks as to Contracts generally—the different Kinds of Contracts—their Obligatory Force.

2. Leading Principles which govern the Law of Contracts.

3. The Nature and Requisites of a Simple Contract.
4 and 5. Inquiry as to the Origin and Progress of Mercantile Law in this Country.

6 and 7. In these Lectures the Provisions of some of our Leading Mercantile Statutes will be considered.

8. The Mercantile Instruments in common Use will be specified, and their Operation will be briefly explained.

9. The Rules applicable to the Construction and Interpretation of Mercantile Instruments will be stated and illustrated.

With his Private Class the Reader will consider seriatim the subjects above enumerated, using as text-books, and for reference, Smith's Compendium of Mercantile Law, by Dowdeswell; Smith's Leading Cases, last edition; and Tudor's Leading Cases on Mercantile and Maritime Law.

By order of the Council,
(Signed) RICHARD BETHELL, Chairman.

THE STATUTES

PASSED IN THE SESSION 1860—23 & 24 VICTORIA.

CAP. I.

An Act to render valid certain Marriages in the Chapel of St. Mary, in Rydal, in the County of Westmoreland.
[19th March, 1860.]

CAP. II.

An Act to apply the Sum of Four Hundred and Seven Thousand Six Hundred and Forty-nine Pounds out of the Consolidated Fund to the Service of the Year ending the 31st March, 1860.
[19th March, 1860.]

CAP. III.

An Act to apply the Sum of Four Million Five Hundred Thousand Pounds out of the Consolidated Fund to the Service of the Year 1860.
[23rd March, 1860.]

CAP. IV.

An Act to enable the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to defray One Moiety of the Expense of the annual Revision of the Valuation of Rateable Property in Ireland out of the Consolidated Fund.
[26th March, 1860.]

Whereas the tenement valuation of rateable property in Ireland, made and revised in pursuance of the provisions of an act passed in the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 63, and of an act passed in the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 8, is now used as the basis of public general as well as local taxation in Ireland, and it is expedient to provide that one moiety of the expense of the annual revision of such valuation shall be defrayed out of the public funds, and otherwise to amend the laws relating thereto: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. Commencement of act.

2. Power to Treasury to advance such sums of money as they may think fit towards the expense of the annual revision of the valuation of rateable property in Ireland.

3. Commissioner of valuation, &c. to continue to act.

4. Power to Treasury to appoint commissioner of valuation, &c.

5. Commissioner of valuation to appoint surveyors, writing clerks, &c.

6. Valuation lists may be in the form annexed to this act.

7. As to the valuation of mills, &c.

8. Proportion of expense to be paid by counties, &c., as provided by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 63.

9. Commissioner authorised to supply copies of valuations and maps to Landed Estates Court and other courts or persons, and to charge fees for the same, &c. Copies of valuations to be received as evidence.

10. Power to obtain decision of superior courts on questions of law. Chairman of quarter sessions may state case for opinion of superior court.

11. Power to superior court to decide such questions as may be referred thereto. Decision of court of quarter sessions to be binding until the decision of superior court.

12. No writ of certiorari required.

13. Provisions of acts inconsistent with this act repealed.

14. Acts to be construed together.

15. Short title.

CAP. V.

An Act to regulate Probate and Administration with respect to certain Indian Government Securities; to repeal certain Stamp Duties; and to extend the Operation of the Act of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 39, to Indian Bonds.
[23rd March, 1860.]

Sect. 1. Indian Government notes on which interest is payable in London, and certain Indian Government promissory notes, to be deemed bona notabilia in England. Probate, &c. or confirmation granted in Scotland valid &c.

2. Transfers of territorial debt and of Indian Government loans not chargeable with stamp duty.

3. Power to raise money under the act 22 & 23 Vict. c. 39, extended to repayment of East India Bonds.

Sect. 1. All Indian Government promissory notes, and certificates issued or stock created in lieu thereof, being assets of a deceased person, the interest whereon or in respect of which shall be payable in London by drafts payable in India, and which at the decease of the owner thereof shall have been registered in the books of the Secretary of State in council in London, or in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or shall have been enforced in India for the purpose of being so registered before the decease of the owner thereof, and all Indian Government promissory notes issued with coupons attached, which, under such regulations and conditions as may be determined from time to time by the Secretary of State in council, shall be so registered, and all certificates issued or stock created in lieu thereof, shall be deemed and taken to be personal estate and bona notabilia of such deceased person in England, and probate or letters of administration in England, or confirmation granted in Scotland, and sealed with the seal of the principal Court of Probate in England, in pursuance of the provisions of the Confirmation and Probate Act, 1856, shall be valid and sufficient to constitute the persons therein named the legal personal representatives of the deceased with respect to such notes and monies as aforesaid.

2. So much of the 5th section of the said first-recited act as enacts that every transfer of any part of the said territorial debt in the books of the East India Company in England, whether upon a sale thereof or otherwise, shall be chargeable with a stamp duty of 1*l.* 10*s.*, and no more, is hereby repealed; and no transfer of any part of the said territorial debt or of Indian Government loans registered and transferable in the books of the Secretary of State in council in London, or in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, shall be chargeable with any stamp duty.

3. Upon or for the repayment of any principal money secured by the said bonds, the Secretary of State in council may at any time borrow or raise, by all or any of the modes authorised by the said recited act passed in the session holden in the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 39, all or any part of the principal money so repaid or to be repaid, and so from time to time as all or any part of the principal money secured by the said bonds may have been repaid or require to be repaid, but the amount to be charged upon the revenues of India shall not in any case exceed the principal money repaid or required to be repaid; and the provisions of the said recited act with reference to the creation of the capital stock and annuities created under the authority of the said act, and with reference to the issue, payment, and transfer of the capital stock, annuities, bonds, and debentures issued under the authority of the said act, shall be held to be in force, and to apply to the creation, issue, payment, and transfer of the capital stock, annuities, bonds, and debentures created and issued under the authority of this act.

CAP. VI.

An Act to transfer to the Postmaster-General Securities entered into with the Commissioners of the Admiralty in relation to the Packet Service.
[23rd March, 1860.]

CAP. VII.

An Act to amend the Medical Acts.
[23rd March, 1860.]

Sect. 1. Licentiates in surgery of any university in Ireland entitled to be registered under the first-recited act [21 & 22 Vict. c. 90] in like manner as masters in surgery.

2. Certain powers given to medical council extended to this act.
3. "The 1st January, 1861," to be substituted, in sects. 32, 34, 36, and 37 of the first-recited act, for "the 1st July, 1859," so far as relates to persons authorised to be registered under this act.
4. No person authorised to be registered under this act disqualified to hold certain offices, unless he has failed to be registered.
5. Recited acts [21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, and 22 Vict. c. 21] and this act to be construed as one.
6. Short title.

Sect. 1. From and after the passing of this act the diploma or license in surgery granted by any university of that part of the United Kingdom called Ireland, legally authorised to grant the same, shall be considered a sufficient qualification to practise under the said first-recited act, [21 & 22 Vict. c. 90], and every person to whom such diploma or license has been granted shall be entitled to be registered under the provisions of the said first-recited act, in the like manner, and with the like effect, and subject to the like provisions as are prescribed by the said first-recited act in respect of the registration of any master in surgery of any university of the United Kingdom.

2. The powers given to the medical council in the said first-recited act with respect to the studies and examinations required for obtaining a qualification under the said act shall be extended to the studies and examinations required for a qualification under this act.

3. "The 1st January, 1861," shall be deemed to be substituted in sects. 32, 34, 36, and 37 respectively of the said first-recited act, as the same are amended by the said second-recited act, [22 Vict. c. 21], for "the 1st July, 1859," so far as the same relate to any person authorised to be registered under this act; and the said several sections, as so amended, and all the provisions of the said act having reference thereto, shall, with respect to any such person so authorised to be registered under this act, be construed and take effect as if the words "the 1st January, 1861," had been originally inserted in each of the said sections, instead of the words "the 1st July, 1859."

4. No person authorised to be registered under this act, who shall be acting as medical officer under an order of the Poor-law Commissioners or Poor-law Board, shall, by reason of the said recited acts, [21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, and 22 Vict. c. 21], or either of them, be or be deemed to have been disqualified to hold such office, or any appointment mentioned in sect. 36 of the said first-recited act, unless he shall have failed to be registered on or before the 1st January, 1861.

5. The said recited acts and this act shall be construed together as one act.

6. This act may for all purposes be cited as "The Medical Acts Amendment Act, 1860."

CAP. VIII.

An Act to amend the Law relating to the unlawful administering of Poison. [23rd March, 1860.]

- Sect. 1. Any person maliciously administering poison, &c., with intent to endanger life, or inflict grievous bodily harm, to be guilty of felony.
2. Any person maliciously administering poison, &c., with intent to injure, aggrieve, or annoy any other person, to be guilty of a misdemeanour.
3. If the jury be not satisfied that any person charged is guilty of felony, but guilty of misdemeanour, they may find him guilty accordingly.

Sect. 1. That whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously administer to, or cause to be administered to or taken by, any other person, any poison or other destructive or noxious thing, so as thereby to endanger the life of such person, or so as thereby to inflict upon such person any grievous bodily harm, shall be guilty of felony, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable to be sentenced to penal servitude for any period not exceeding ten years, and not less than three years, or to imprisonment for any term not more than three years, with or without hard labour, at the discretion of the court.

2. Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously administer to, or cause to be administered to or taken by, any other person, any poison or other destructive or noxious thing, with intent to injure, aggrieve, or annoy such person, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable to be sentenced to imprisonment for any period not exceeding three years, with or without hard labour, at the discretion of the court, and the costs and expenses of the prosecution of any such misdemeanour may be allowed by the court as in cases of felony.

3. If, upon the trial of any person charged with the felony above mentioned, the jury shall not be satisfied that such person is guilty thereof, but shall be satisfied that he is guilty of the misdemeanour above mentioned, then, and in every such case, the jury may acquit the accused of such felony, and find him guilty of such misdemeanour, and thereupon the delinquent shall be liable to be punished in the same manner as if convicted upon an indictment for the misdemeanour.

An Act to amend the Law relating to Endowed Schools. [31st March, 1860.]

- Sect. 1. Power to trustees of endowed schools to make orders for the admission of children of denominations herein stated.
2. Act not to apply to certain institutions, or to Scotland or Ireland.
3. Short title.

Sect. 1. It shall be lawful for the trustees or governors of every endowed school from time to time to make, and they shall be bound to make, such orders as, whilst they shall not interfere with the religious teaching of the other scholars as now fixed by statute or other legal requirement, and shall not authorise any religious teaching other than that previously afforded in the school, shall nevertheless provide for admitting to the benefits of the school the children of parents not in communion with the church, sect, or denomination according to the doctrines or formularies of which religious instruction is to be afforded under the endowment of the said school: provided, that in the will or wills, deed or deeds, or other instrument or instruments regulating such endowment, nothing be contained expressly requiring the children educated under such endowment to learn or to be instructed according to the doctrines or formularies of such church, sect, or denomination.

2. This act shall not apply to any of the institutions mentioned in sect. 24 of the act of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 77, "An Act for improving the Condition and extending the Benefits of Grammar Schools," nor to any school established, or to be established, by or in union with, or to be in union with, the National Society for promoting the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church, nor to any institution maintained wholly by voluntary subscriptions, or partly by voluntary subscriptions and partly by school payments, nor to Scotland or Ireland.

3. This act may be cited as "The Endowed Schools Act, 1860."

An Act to prevent the Members of Benefit Societies from forfeiting their Interest therein by being inrolled in Yeomanry or Volunteer Corps. [31st March, 1860.]

Sect. 1. No man by reason of his inrolment or service in any corps of yeomanry or volunteers shall lose or forfeit, or be deemed to have lost or forfeited, any interest he may pos-ness, or may have possessed at the time of his so being inrolled or serving, in any friendly or benefit society, any laws, rules, or regulations of such society to the contrary notwithstanding; and in case any dispute shall arise between any such society and any such man by reason of such inrolment or service, it shall be considered as being a dispute directed by the rules of such society to be decided by justices of the peace, pursuant to the provisions of the acts in force relating to friendly societies.

CAP. XIV.

An Act for granting to Her Majesty Duties on Profits arising from Property, Professions, Trades, and Offices.

[3rd April, 1860.]

- Sect. 1. Grant of duties on property, &c. for one year.
 2. Duties to be assessed and raised under provisions of former acts.
 3. The sums assessed under certain schedules for the last year to be taken as the annual value for this act. Property, &c. not charged for the last year to be assessed under this act.
 4. Where, since the last assessment, property has been divided, proportions of the tax to be settled.
 5. Commissioners for special purposes to assess railways;
 6. And also the persons employed by railway companies.
 7. Power for persons assessed for mines or quarries to appeal to the special commissioners.
 8. Duties to be collected and accounted for.
 9. *Exemption where income under 100*l.*, and abatement where less than 150*l.
 10. Repayment not to be granted unless claimed within three years.
 11. Relief in respect of life insurances, &c. continued.

Sect. 1. There shall be charged, collected, and paid for one year, commencing on the 6th April, 1860, for and in respect of all property, profits, and gains mentioned or described as chargeable in the act passed in the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34, either by assessment, contract of composition, or otherwise, the following rates and duties—that is to say, upon the annual value or amount of any property, profits, or gains, (except property, profits, and gains described as chargeable under Schedule (B.) of the said act), the rate or duty of 10*d.* for every 20*s.* of the annual value or amount of all such property, profits, and gains respectively; and for and in respect of the occupation of lands, tenements, hereditaments, and heritages described as chargeable under Schedule (B.) of the said act, the rate or duty of 6*d.* in England, and 3*d.* in Scotland and Ireland respectively, for every 20*s.* of the annual value thereof.

2. The duties hereby granted shall be assessed, raised, levied, and collected under the regulations and provisions of the said last-mentioned act and of the several acts therein mentioned or referred to, so far as the same are or may be applicable, consistently with the express provisions of this act; and all the powers, regulations, and penalties of the said acts shall, so far as aforesaid, be applied, enforced, and put in execution with respect to the duties granted by this act.

3. The sum charged as the annual value of any property, profits, or gains in the several and respective assessments made under Schedules (A.), (B.), (D.), and (E.) of the said act, for the year ending on the 5th April, 1860, shall (except as to railways and otherwise, as hereinafter provided) be taken as the annual value or amount of such property, profits, or gains for the year commencing on the 6th April, 1860; and the duties granted by this act shall be computed and charged according to such annual value or amount, and shall be collected, levied, and paid for the said year commencing on the 6th April, 1860, subject, nevertheless, to be increased, abated, or discharged in like manner as the assessments made for the year ending on the said 5th April, 1860: provided, whenever it shall appear that any property, profits, or gains chargeable under this act have not been charged by the assessments made for the said last-mentioned year, such property, profits, and gains shall be assessed to the duties granted by this act, under the provisions of the said several acts applicable thereto.

4. If, since the making of any assessment under Schedules (A.) and (B.) for the year ending the 5th April, 1860, the lands thereby charged shall have been divided into two or more distinct occupations, the commissioners for general purposes shall, on the appeal of the parties interested respectively, settle and adjust what proportion of the duties granted by this act under the said schedules shall be paid or borne by each occupier; and the amount apportioned on the respective parties shall be collected and levied in like manner as an original assessment.

5. No assessment shall be made under this act by the commissioners for general purposes in respect of the annual value or profits and gains arising from any railway, but in lieu thereof every such assessment shall be made by the commissioners for special purposes, and upon the value or profits and gains for the year ending the 5th April, 1860; and the said last-mentioned commissioners shall notify the assessment to the secretary or other officer of the company upon which the same shall be made, and the amount of such assessment shall be paid, collected, and levied in like manner as any other assessment made by the said commissioners for special purposes.

6. In like manner as aforesaid the commissioners for special purposes shall assess the duties payable under Schedule (E.) in respect of all offices and employments of profit held in or under any railway company, and shall notify to the secretary or other officer of such company the particulars thereof, and the said assessment shall be deemed to be and shall be an assessment upon the company, and paid, collected, and levied accordingly; and it shall be lawful for the company or such secretary or other officer to deduct and retain out of the fees, emoluments, or salary of each such officer or person the duty so charged in respect of his profits and gains.

7. It shall be lawful for any person assessed to the duty chargeable under Schedule (A.) of the said act in respect of any mine of coal, tin, lead, copper, mundic, or iron, or any other mine, or any quarry of stone or slate, to appeal against any such assessment to the commissioners for special purposes, instead of the commissioners for general purposes, if he shall think fit, and give due notice of his intention so to do; and thereupon such appeal shall be heard and determined by two or more of the commissioners for special purposes, in like manner as any appeal against an assessment of the duties contained in Schedule (D.) of the said acts may lawfully be heard and determined by them; and all powers and authorities, rules and regulations, contained in the said acts in relation to any such last-mentioned assessment and appeal, and to the carrying into execution and enforcing the determination of the said commissioners for special purposes thereon, shall be exercised and put in force in relation to any appeal by this act authorised to be made to the said last-mentioned commissioners and their determination thereon.

8. The several collectors shall pay to the proper officer for receipt, or to his deputy, all the monies of the said duties collected and levied by such collectors, on the respective days to be appointed by such officer for receipt, or his deputy, next after the receipt of the said duties by the said collectors, and shall at the same time account for the duties given them in charge respectively, and then payable by law, in like manner as they are now by law required to account half-yearly.

9. Any person assessed or charged to any of the duties granted by this act who shall prove that his aggregate annual income is less than 100*l.* shall be exempt from the said duties; and any person who shall be assessed or charged to any of the said duties, or shall have paid the same, either by deduction or otherwise, and who shall claim and prove that his total income from every source, although amounting to 100*l.* or upwards, is less than 150*l.* a year, for the year of the assessment of his profits or gains, shall be entitled to be relieved from so much of the said duties assessed upon or paid by him as shall exceed the rate of 7*d.* for every 20*s.* of his profits or gains, and such relief shall be given in the manner provided or directed in the like cases by the said act of the 16 & 17 Vict., and the act of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, therein mentioned.

10. No claim for repayment of duty under this act, or any former act relating to the income tax, shall be allowed unless it shall be made within three years next after the end of the year of assessment to which the claim shall relate.

11. The clauses and provisions contained in the following acts—that is to say, the act of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34, s. 54, another act of the same year, c. 91, and an act of the 18 & 19

Vict. c. 36—for granting relief to persons who have made such insurances or contracted for such annuities as in the said acts mentioned, shall be continued in force, and be applied for the granting of the like relief in regard to the duties imposed by this act.

CAP. XV.

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain Duties of Stamps.
[3rd April, 1860.]

Sect. 1. Duties on instruments described in schedule repealed.

2. New duties, as set forth in schedule, granted.
3. Provisions of former acts to apply.
4. Personal estate appointed by will under general powers to be chargeable with probate and inventory duties.
5. Probate and inventory duties in respect thereof to be a charge on the property.
6. Money secured on heritable property, and by heritable bonds, in Scotland, to be chargeable with probate and inventory duties.
7. Certain testamentary dispositions in Scotland not to be chargeable with stamp duty.
8. Certain duties in the schedule to be denoted either by impressed or adhesive stamps.
9. The persons making the instruments to affix adhesive stamps, and cancel the same. In default, penalty 20l. No charge for brokerage, &c. to be lawful unless instrument, &c. shall be duly stamped.
10. Penalty for fraudulently stating goods to be under the value of 40s.
11. The person requesting the entry of transfer of any share to affix and cancel an adhesive stamp. In default, penalty 20l.
12. The payers of bills of exchange, &c. to cancel stamps. In default, penalty 20l.
13. The stamps on foreign bills to be adhesive. The provisions of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 83, to be applied.
14. Penalty on committing frauds in relation to adhesive stamps.
15. Penalty on stamping an agreement under the value of 20l. to be 20s. only.

Sect. 1. The stamp duties now payable in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland for or in respect of the several instruments, matters, and things mentioned or described in the schedule to this act annexed, whereon other duties are by this act granted, shall respectively cease and determine, and shall be and the same are hereby repealed; provided that the stamp duties now chargeable on any of the said instruments, matters, and things shall be payable in respect of such of them as shall have been or shall be made, signed, or dated at any time before the passing of this act, save and except that the stamp duties on foreign bills of exchange by this act granted shall be payable on all such bills as shall, after the passing of this act, be first negotiated, or, if not negotiated, paid in the United Kingdom.

2. There shall be granted, raised, levied, and paid in and throughout the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, to and to the use of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, for and in respect of the several instruments, matters, and things described or mentioned in the said schedule, or for or in respect of the vellum, parchment, or paper upon which any of them respectively shall be written, the several stamp duties or sums of money set down in figures against the same respectively, or otherwise specified and set forth in the said schedule; which said schedule, and the several provisions, regulations, and directions therein contained with respect to the said duties, and the instruments, matters, and things charged therewith, shall be deemed and taken to be part of this act, and shall be applied and put in execution accordingly.

3. All the powers, provisions, clauses, regulations, directions, allowances, and exemptions, fines, forfeitures, pains, and penalties, contained in or imposed by any act or acts, or any schedule thereto, relating to any duties of the same kind or description heretofore payable in the United Kingdom, and in force at the time of the passing of this act, shall respectively be of full force and effect with respect to the duties by this act granted, and to the vellum, parchment, paper, instruments, matters, and things charged and chargeable therewith, and to the persons liable to the payment of the said duties, so far as the same are or shall be applicable, in all cases not hereby expressly provided for, and shall be observed, applied, allowed, enforced, and put in execution for and in the raising, levying, collecting, and securing of the said duties hereby granted, and otherwise in relation thereto, so far as the same shall not be superseded by, and shall be consistent with, the express provisions of this act, as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as if the same had been heretofore repeated and specially enacted, mutatis mutandis, with reference to the duties by this act granted.

4. The stamp duties payable by law upon probates of wills and letters of administration with a will annexed, in England and Ireland, and upon inventories in Scotland, shall be levied and paid in respect of all the personal or moveable estate and effects which any person, hereafter dying, shall have disposed of by will, under any authority enabling such person to dispose of the same, as he or she shall think fit; and, for the purpose of this act, such personal or moveable estate and effects shall be deemed to be the personal or moveable estate and effects of the person so dying in respect of which the probate of the will, or the letters of administration with the will annexed, of such person are or is granted, or the inventory is, or is required to be, exhibited and recorded, as the case may be; and such estate and effects, and the value thereof, shall accordingly be included in the affidavit required by law to be made on applying for probate or letters of administration, in order to the full and proper stamp duty being paid.

5. The said last-mentioned duties shall be a charge or burthen upon the property in respect of which the same are so payable, and shall be paid thereout by the trustees or owners thereof to the person for the time being lawfully having or taking the burthen of the execution of the will or testamentary instrument, or the administration or management of the personal or moveable estate and effects of the deceased; for the benefit of the persons entitled to the personal or moveable estate and effects of the deceased.

6. Money secured on heritable property in Scotland, and money secured by Scotch bonds in favour of heirs and assignees, excluding executors, shall, for the purposes of this act, be held and interpreted to be moveable property, and shall be included in any inventory to be exhibited and recorded in any commissary court in Scotland of the estate and effects of any person deceased entitled thereto, and in England and Ireland respectively shall be deemed to be estate and effects for or in respect whereof any probate of will or letters of administration shall be granted; and every such inventory, probate, and letters of administration shall be chargeable with stamp duty in respect of such moveable property; and such property, and the value thereof, shall be included in any such affidavit as aforesaid made on applying for probate or letters of administration in respect thereof in England or Ireland.

7. Whereas it is considered that certain testamentary dispositions in Scotland are chargeable with stamp duty, and it is expedient that the same should be exempted: be it enacted, that no will, testament, testamentary instrument, or disposition mortis causa shall be chargeable with any stamp duty.

8. The duties by this act granted of 1d. and 3d. respectively specified in the said schedule, and also of 6d. therein specified, under the head of "cost-book mines," may be denoted either by a stamp impressed upon the paper, or by an adhesive stamp affixed thereto; and the Commissioners of Inland Revenue shall provide stamps of both descriptions for the purpose of denoting the said duties; and the provisions and regulations relating to adhesive stamps contained in the next succeeding section of this act shall apply to all cases where the paper upon which the instrument, document, or writing charged with the duty shall not, at the time of its being written, made, or signed, have thereon the proper impressed stamp for denoting the said duty.

9. The person who shall make, sign, or issue any instrument, document, or writing in the schedule to this act mentioned, and chargeable with any of the duties of 1d. and 3d., shall, before he shall deliver the same out of his hands, custody, or power, affix to it the proper adhesive stamp denoting the duty chargeable thereon or in respect of it, and shall effectually cancel and obliterate the stamp, by writing upon it his name, or the name of his firm or principal, or the initials thereof respectively, and the date of the day and year on which he shall so write the same, and so and in such manner as clearly and distinctly to indicate that the said stamp has already been used, and so that it cannot, without fraud, be again made use of; and if any person who ought so to affix any such stamp, and to cancel and obliterate the same, shall refuse or neglect so to do, or if any person shall receive or take by way of security or indemnity any of the said instruments, documents, or writings, or shall deliver out or authorise the delivery out of any goods, wares, or merchandise to which the same relates, the said instrument, document, or writing not having a proper adhesive stamp affixed thereto, and cancelled and obliterated as hereby required, every such person shall for every such offence forfeit the sum of 20*l.*; and no charge for brokerage, commission, agency, or otherwise, made or to be made by any broker, agent, or other person, in or about the sale or purchase mentioned or referred to in any such instrument, document, or writing made by him, shall be lawful unless such instrument, document, or writing shall be duly stamped as by this act is required: provided that no person shall be subject or liable to the said penalty for delivering any goods, wares, or merchandise, under the authority of any unstamped order, in any case where the value of such goods, wares, and merchandise shall therein be stated by the person making, signing, or issuing the same to be under the value of 40*s.*

10. If any person, who shall make, sign, or issue any order for, or any writing or document authorising, the delivery of any goods, wares, or merchandise by this act charged with the stamp duty of 1*d.*, shall knowingly and wilfully state or permit to be stated therein that the said goods, wares, or merchandise are or is under the value of 40*s.*, he shall, unless the said order, writing, or document shall, at the time of its being issued, be stamped to denote the said duty, forfeit the sum of 20*l.*

11. The person who shall write or sign any note, instrument, or writing requesting or authorising the purser or other officer of any mining company conducted on the cost-book system to enter or register the transfer of any share or shares, or part of any share, in any mine, or shall give any notice in writing to such purser or other officer of any such transfer, in whatever form such notice shall be, shall, in like manner as hereinbefore provided, affix thereto the proper adhesive stamp to denote the duty by this act charged thereon, and cancel and obliterate the same; and if he shall refuse or neglect so to do, or if the purser or other officer to whom such request, authority, or notice shall be addressed, delivered, sent, or given shall enter or register the transfer of any share mentioned or referred to in such notice, or shall comply with or in any way give effect to such notice, the same not being stamped as by this act is required, every such person so offending shall forfeit the sum of 20*l.*

12. Whenever any bill of exchange, draft, or order, having thereon an adhesive stamp, shall be presented for payment, the person to whom the same shall be presented shall, upon paying the same, write or impress, or cause to be written or impressed, upon every stamp affixed to the bill, the word "paid," to the end that the stamp may be more effectually cancelled, and made incapable of being used again; and in default of so doing he shall forfeit the penalty of 20*l.*

13. The duties by this act granted upon or in respect of bills of exchange, drafts, or orders drawn out of the United Kingdom shall be denoted by adhesive stamps, in like manner as the duties now payable on bills of exchange drawn out of the United Kingdom; and all the clauses, provisions, directions, regulations, penalties, and forfeitures contained in the act passed in the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 83, relating to adhesive stamps on bills of exchange drawn out of the United Kingdom, as well as in this act, so far as the same are applicable, shall be applied and put in force in respect of the stamp duties on bills of exchange by this act granted, as fully and effectually as if the same were herein repeated and enacted.

14. If any person shall fraudulently remove, or cause to be removed, or assist in removing, from any instrument, document, or writing of any kind, any adhesive stamp, or shall affix any stamp which shall have been so removed to any other instrument, document, or writing chargeable with stamp duty, or to any paper, with intent that such stamp might be used again; or if any person shall sell, or offer for sale, or utter any stamp, or shall utter any instrument, document, or writing with any stamp thereon which shall have been so as aforesaid removed, knowing the same to have been removed, or shall practise or be concerned in any fraudulent act, contrivance, or device not specially provided for, with intent to defraud her Majesty of the duty, he shall forfeit, over and above any other penalty to which he may be liable, the sum of 50*l.*

15. Where an instrument or writing chargeable under this act with the duty of 6*d.*, as an agreement, shall be unstamped, and it shall appear thereby that the matter thereof is under the value of 20*l.*, the penalty payable to her Majesty, her heirs or successors, on stamping the same, shall be 20*s.* over and above the said duty, in lieu of the penalty now by law payable on stamping an agreement under hand only.

SCHEDULE

Referred to, containing the Duties imposed by this Act.

AGREEMENT for a lease or tack of any lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritable subjects for any term not exceeding seven years; and agreement, minute, or memorandum of agreement, containing the terms and conditions on which any lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritable subjects are let, held, or occupied for any such terms as aforesaid—The same duty as on a lease or tack for the term, rent, consideration, and conditions mentioned in such agreement, minute, or memorandum.

Provided that any lease or tack of the same lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritable subjects afterwards made, in pursuance of and conformably to any such agreement, minute, or memorandum, which shall have actually paid the duty payable on such lease or tack as aforesaid, shall not be chargeable with any higher stamp duty than 2*s.* 6*d.*, exclusive of progressive duty, notwithstanding any variation in the terms or conditions only, not affecting the stamp duty; and in any such case the lease or tack shall, if required for the sake of evidence, be stamped with a particular stamp for denoting or testifying the payment of the full and proper stamp duty on the agreement, minute, or memorandum, on the same and the agreement, minute, or memorandum being produced, and appearing to be executed or signed, and duly stamped in all other respects.

AGREEMENT, or any minute or memorandum of an agreement, made in England or Ireland under hand only, or made in Scotland without any clause of registration, and not otherwise charged nor expressly exempted from all stamp duty, where the matter thereof shall be of the value of 5*l.* or upwards, whether the same shall be only evidence of a contract, or obligatory upon the parties from its being a written instrument; together with every schedule, receipt, or other matter put or indorsed thereon or annexed thereto—6*d.*

And where the same shall contain 3160 words or upwards, then for every entire quantity of 1080 words contained therein, over and above the first 1080 words, a further progressive duty of 6*d.*

Provided always, that where divers letters shall be offered in evidence to prove any agreement between the parties who shall have written such letters, it shall be sufficient if any of such letters shall be stamped with a duty of 1*s.*, although the same shall in the whole contain any quantity of words exceeding 3160.

BILL OF EXCHANGE, Draft, or Order for the payment of money exceeding 4000*l.*, now chargeable with the stamp duty of 2*l.* 5*s.*—

For every 1000*l.* or part of 1000*l.* of the money thereby made payable—10*s.*

BILL OF EXCHANGE, (foreign), drawn in a set of three or more, for the payment of money exceeding 4000*l.*, where every bill of the set is now chargeable with the stamp duty of 15*s.*—

Every bill of the set, for every 1000*l.* or part of 1080*l.* of the money thereby made payable—3*s.* 4*d.*

BILL OF EXCHANGE, Draft, or Order, (foreign), drawn or indorsed out of the United Kingdom, for the payment of money on demand—The same duty as on an inland bill of exchange for the payment of money otherwise than on demand, according to the amount thereby made payable.

All bills, drafts, or orders for the payment by any banker, or person acting as a banker, of any sum of money, though not made payable to the bearer or to order, and whether delivered to the payee or not; and all writings or documents entitling, or intending to entitle, any person whatever to the payment from or by any banker, or person acting as a banker, of any sum of money, whether the person to whom payment is to be made shall be named or designated therein or not, or whether the same shall be delivered to him or not, shall respectively be deemed to be bills, drafts, or orders for the payment of money chargeable with stamp duty, as if the same had been made payable to bearer or to order.

Provided always, that any one document or writing, although directing the payment of several sums of money to different persons, shall be chargeable with stamp duty as one order only.

Exemptions.

Any draft or order drawn by any banker upon any other banker, not payable to bearer or to order, and used solely for the purpose of settling or clearing any account between such bankers.

Any letter written by a banker to any other banker directing the payment of any sum of money, the same not being payable to bearer or to order, and such letter not being sent or delivered to the person to whom payment is to be made, or to any person on his behalf; and all warrants or orders for the payment of any annuity granted by the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, or for the payment of any dividend or interest on any share in the government or parliamentary stocks or funds, and all drafts or orders drawn by the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery in England or Ireland, shall be exempt from all stamp duty.

COPY.—Certified copy or extract of or from any register of births, baptisms, marriages, deaths, or burials—1*d*.

The said duty to be paid by the person requiring any such copy or extract.

Exemptions.

Copies of entries of baptisms, marriages, and burials transmitted to the registrar of the diocese, in pursuance of the 52 Geo. 3, c. 146.

Certified copies of registers sent by superintending registrars to the general registrar, in pursuance of the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86.

And copies or extracts made or given under or in pursuance of the 7 Vict. c. 15, to amend the laws relating to labour in factories.

COST-BOOK MINES.—Any note, instrument, or writing requesting or authorising the purser or other officer of any mining company conducted on the cost-book system to enter or register any transfer of any share or shares or part of a share in any mine, or any notice to such purser or officer of any such transfer—6*d*.

DECLARATION in lieu or in the nature of an affidavit, in any case where, if the same were an affidavit, it would be chargeable with any stamp duty—The same duty as would be chargeable on such affidavit.

DELIVERY ORDER.—Any writing or document commonly called a delivery order, or by whatever name the same shall be designated, entitling or intended to entitle any person therein named, or his assigns, or the holder thereof, to the delivery of any goods, wares, or merchandise of the value of 40*s*. or upwards, lying in any dock or port, or in any warehouse in which goods are stored or deposited on rent or hire, or upon any wharf, such writing or document being signed by or on behalf of the owner of such goods, wares, or merchandise, upon the sale or transfer of the property therein—1*d*.

DOCK WARRANT.—Any warrant or document commonly called a dock warrant, or any other writing or document, by whatever name the same shall be designated, which shall evidence the title of any person therein named, or his assigns, or the holder thereof, to the property in any goods, wares, or merchandise lying in any dock or warehouse, or upon any wharf, such writing or document being signed or certified by or on behalf of the company or person in whose custody such goods, wares, or merchandise may be—3*d*.

Exemption.

Any writing or document given by any inland carrier, acknowledging the receipt of goods conveyed by such carrier.

LETTER or POWER of ATTORNEY for the sale, transfer, or acceptance of any of the government or parliamentary stocks or funds not exceeding in value 20*l*.; or for the receipt of any sum of money, or any cheque, note, or draft for any sum of money, not exceeding 20*l*.; or dividends or interest of any such stocks or funds, or any other periodical payments, not exceeding the annual sum of 10*l*.—5*s*.

CAP. XVI.

An Act to make further Provision concerning Mortgages and other Dispositions of Property belonging to Municipal Corporations in England and Ireland. [15th May, 1860.]

1. Treasury, in approving mortgages by municipal corporations, may require money borrowed to be repaid within a limited time, by instalments or by a sinking fund, or by both.
2. How sinking fund to be raised.
3. When money paid into the Bank, under any act of Parliament, for purchase of lands, &c. of a municipal corporation, is paid out, Treasury may require provision to be made for replacing the amount. Not to apply to money when provision for its application is contained in any local act.
4. Treasury may, where they authorise a sale of land of any municipal corporation, direct investment of proceeds.
5. Power to apply certain investments for the benefit of the borough. Proviso setting aside, in certain cases, direction as to investment of proceeds.
6. Provision for cases of mortgage, &c. before the passing of this act.
7. Penalty for misappropriation of monies, as stated in the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 54.
8. Councils of cities or boroughs may acquire lands, &c. with the consent of the Treasury.
9. Answer of the Treasury to applications of the council to be published &c.
10. Corporations may submit schemes to Commissioners of Treasury for payment of borough mortgage debt.
11. As to payment of debts due under authority of acts of Parliament.
12. Power of local boards in boroughs.
13. Not to affect powers under local acts.
14. Act to be construed with the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, and the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 108, (Ireland).
15. Short title.

1. In any case where the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury approve of any mortgage of any hereditaments of the body corporate of any borough, the said commissioners may, as a condition of their approval, require that the money borrowed on the security of such mortgage shall be repaid, with all interest thereon, in thirty years, or any less period, and either by instalments or by means of a sinking fund, or both, as the said commissioners may think fit; and in every such case the sums required for providing for the repayment of the principal and interest of the money borrowed shall by virtue of this act become charged upon the hereditaments comprised in such mortgage, (without prejudice to the security thereby created), or any other hereditaments (if any) of the said body corporate, or the borough fund, or the borough or other rates legally applicable for the payment or discharge of the money borrowed, or the expenses which such money may be borrowed to defray, or on all or any of the securities aforesaid, as the said commissioners may direct.

2. When any money to be borrowed as aforesaid is directed to be repaid by means of a sinking fund, the council of the borough shall, out of the rents and profits of the hereditaments, or out of the borough fund or rates on which the sums required for such sinking fund are charged under this act, invest or cause to be invested such sums, and at such times and in such Government annuities, as the said commissioners may direct, and shall also from time to time invest or cause to be invested in like manner all dividends of such annuities, so as to accumulate at compound interest, and all annuities in which such investments are made shall, in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England and of the Governor and Company of the Bank of Ireland respectively, be placed to the account of the body corporate, and "In the Matter of the Municipal Corporation Mortgages, &c. Act, 1860," and the dividends of such annuities shall be paid to such person or persons as the said council, by power of attorney under the corporate seal of the borough, from time to time appoint, and shall be invested as herein directed; but the annuities to be purchased shall not be sold or transferred without the consent in writing of the said commissioners, addressed to the chief accountant of the Bank of England or of the Bank of Ireland, (as the case may require); and the direction in writing of the council of the borough, by power of attorney under the corporate seal of the borough, with such consent in writing of the said commissioners, shall be sufficient authority to the Governor and Company of the Bank of England or of the Bank of Ireland (as the case may be) for permitting the transfer of such annuities, or any part thereof.

3. Where any purchase money or compensation has been paid into the Bank of England or Ireland, under any act of Parliament, in respect of any hereditaments, or any interest therein, purchased or taken from any such body corporate, or in respect of any permanent damage to any land of any such body corporate, and the said commissioners approve of the payment of such money or compensation, or of any money to arise from the sale of any Government securities in which the same may have been invested, to such body corporate or their treasurer, the said commissioners may, as a condition of their approval, require provision to be made for raising, in manner hereinbefore provided with respect to a sinking fund for repayment of money borrowed on mortgage, and investing in Government annuities, a sum equivalent to the amount of money so paid to such body corporate or their treasurer; and the provisions hereinbefore contained, in the case of a sinking fund, as to the mode of investing, payment of dividends, and transfer of annuities, shall be applicable in the case of investments under this provision; and the said commissioners shall, when it appears to them that an amount of annuities equivalent to the amount paid as aforesaid has been raised by investment under this enactment, direct that the accumulation shall cease; and such annuities and the dividends thereof shall thenceforth be applicable as the same would have been if such annuities had arisen from investment under the act of Parliament under which such purchase money or compensation as aforesaid became payable: provided always, that this section shall not apply to any money payable to a body corporate, when provision for the application of such money, or of the price or compensation from which such money has been derived, is contained in any local act of Parliament relating thereto, and the money is to be paid to such body corporate, to be applied in conformity with such provision.

4. Where the said commissioners approve of the sale of any hereditaments, or any interest therein, of any such body corporate, their approval may be subject to such conditions for and in relation to the investment of the proceeds of such sale for the benefit of such body corporate as the said commissioners may see fit; and where they direct the same to be invested in Government annuities, the provisions hereinbefore contained as to the mode of investing, payment of dividends, and transfer of such annuities, shall be applicable, but not so as to render necessary any accumulation; or if the said commissioners see fit to consent to the application of the proceeds of such sale, or any part thereof, for the benefit of the inhabitants of the borough, they may, as a condition of their consent, require the like provision to be made as they are authorised to require in the case of their approval of payment to any such body corporate or their treasurer as hereinbefore mentioned; and this enactment shall apply as well to any money received for equality of exchange by any such body corporate as to the proceeds of the sale of any hereditaments or interest in hereditaments of any such body corporate.

5. The said commissioners may at any time consent to the application of any annuities arising from investments under either of the two last preceding sections, or of the monies to arise from the sale thereof, or any part thereof respectively, for the benefit of the inhabitants of the borough, and, as a condition of their consent, may require the like provision to be made as they are authorised to require in the case of their approval of payment to any such body corporate or their treasurer as hereinbefore mentioned, and so from time to time, as often as the said commissioners think fit, and the provisions of this act shall be applicable accordingly: provided always, that nothing in this act shall be deemed to make it imperative on the said commissioners to require such provision as aforesaid as a condition of their assent to the application of such annuities or monies, or to the payment of any purchase money or compensation in respect of hereditaments of a body corporate, (or money to arise from the sale of investments thereof), to such body corporate or its treasurer, where, by reason of the application of such annuities or monies to improvement of the property of such body corporate, or for the permanent benefit of the borough or otherwise, under the special circumstances of the case, the commissioners in their discretion think fit to dispense with such provision.

6. Where, before the passing of this act, the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury have approved of any mortgage of the hereditaments of the body corporate of any borough, and on such approval have required a sinking fund to be formed from time to time in the name of trustees, or have approved of the payment to any such body corporate or their treasurer of any such purchase money or compensation as aforesaid, or of any money arising from the sale of any Government securities in which the same may have been invested, and have on such approval required provision to be made for raising, by means of investments in the names of trustees, an amount equivalent to the amount paid with such approval to such body corporate or their treasurer, or have approved of the sale or alienation of any hereditaments or interest therein of any such body corporate, and have required on such approval the investment of the proceeds of such sale in the names of trustees, the said commissioners may require any securities in which any such investments may have been already made to be transferred into the name of such body, and "In the Matter of the Municipal Corporation Mortgages, &c. Act, 1860," or may require any money applicable for the purposes of such sinking fund to be invested in the purchase of Government annuities, in the name of such body, and "In the Matter of the Municipal Corporation Mortgages, &c. Act, 1860;" and the order in writing of the said commissioners for that purpose shall be a sufficient discharge to such trustees from all claims in respect of the transfer of such securities, in pursuance of such order; and the said commissioners may, in the respective cases aforesaid, give such directions as they might give in the analogous cases hereinbefore provided for, arising after the passing of this act, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case may require; and the provisions of this act shall be applicable accordingly.

7. If any person authorised to receive the monies to arise from the sale of any annuities or securities purchased or transferred under this act, or any dividends, or any other such money as aforesaid, appropriate the same otherwise than as directed by this act, or by the said commissioners in pursuance thereof, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall be subject in respect thereof to the provisions of the act of the session holden in the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 54, applicable to any person guilty of a misdemeanour under that act.

8. In every case in which the council of any city or borough in England, the body corporate of which has not power to purchase or acquire land and hereditaments, or to hold land in mortmain, deem it expedient to purchase or otherwise acquire, for public purposes, any hereditaments, such council shall represent the circumstances of the case to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and it shall be lawful for such council, with the approbation of the said commissioners, to purchase or acquire any hereditaments, in such manner, and on such terms and conditions, as may have been approved of by the said commissioners, and such hereditaments may be conveyed to and holden by the body corporate of such borough accordingly; and in any such case as aforesaid, and also in any other case where the said commissioners are satisfied, upon representation of the circumstances, that all or any part of the purchase money of any hereditaments proposed to be purchased for public purposes by the council of a borough should be raised by mortgage or charge as hereinbefore mentioned, the council may, with the approbation of the commissioners, charge and make liable, by way of mortgage or otherwise, the hereditaments so to be purchased, or any other hereditaments of the body corporate, or the borough fund, or borough rates of the borough, or all or any of the securities aforesaid, with the payment of any money necessary for effecting such purchase, and interest; and the provisions hereinbefore contained, with reference to the approval of mortgages, shall be applicable in the case as well of charge on the borough rates or borough fund as of mortgages under this provision; provided that notice of the intention of the council to make such application shall be given, and a copy of the memorial intended to be sent be open to inspection, as by law required in the case of a like application in relation to a disposition of hereditaments.

9. Where any application by the council of any borough is made for the approbation of the said commissioners to any proposed disposition, purchase, or acquisition of any property, and the said commissioners either altogether refuse the application, or grant their approbation conditionally, or otherwise qualify the same, notice of the correspondence between the said commissioners and the council shall forthwith and for one month be fixed on the outer door of the town hall, or in some public and conspicuous place within the borough; and a copy of such correspondence shall, during the same period, be kept in the town clerk's office, and be freely open to the like inspection as by law provided with respect to the copy of the memorial containing such application required to be kept in such office.

10. Whereas, in certain boroughs, mortgage debts have been heretofore incurred, for the payment and discharge of which no adequate legal provision now exists: it shall be lawful for the corporation of any such borough to submit to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury any scheme for the discharge of any such debts by instalments, or by a sinking fund, or by both, extending over any term of years; and if the said commissioners approve of such scheme, the sums required for providing for the discharge of the debt to which such scheme relates, in the manner proposed therein, shall, by virtue of this act, become charged upon all or any of the hereditaments of the body corporate, or the borough fund, or the borough rates, or any other rates which would have been applicable to or towards the discharge of such debts, or on all or any of the securities aforesaid, as the said commissioners may approve and direct; and the provisions hereinbefore contained applicable where provision is made for repayment of money borrowed on mortgage by a sinking fund and instalments, or both, except the limitation to a period of thirty years, shall be applicable to the provision for the discharge of a mortgage debt under this provision; provided that notice of the intention of the council to make application to the said commissioners for the approval of any such scheme shall be given, and a copy of the memorial intended to be sent shall be open to inspection, in like manner as in cases of application to the commissioners for their approval of a disposition of hereditaments.

11. And whereas in certain boroughs sundry debts have from time to time been incurred under the authority of acts of Parliament, with different periods assigned for the discharge of the same: be it enacted, that it shall be lawful for the corporations of such boroughs respectively, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and with the consent in writing of the persons or bodies corporate to whom such debts respectively may be owing, previously obtained, to consolidate all such sundry debts into one, and thereon to make provision for the discharge of such consolidated debt, by annual instalments or by a sinking fund, or by both, extending over a period not exceeding thirty years, and to make such annual instalments or payments a legal charge upon the borough fund or the borough rates, or any other rates which would have been applicable to or towards the discharge of such debts, or on all or any of the securities aforesaid, as the said commissioners may approve and direct: provided that notice of the intention of the council to make application to the said commissioners for the purpose aforesaid shall be given, and a copy of the memorial intended to be sent shall be open to inspection, in like manner as in cases of application to the commissioners for their approval of a disposition of hereditaments.

12. Where, in any borough subject to the provisions of the act passed in the session holden in the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, and intitled "An Act to provide for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales," a surplus is standing to the credit of the borough fund arising from the rents and profits of the property of the corporation, and not from a borough rate, and such borough is a district within the meaning of the Public Health Act, 1846, the corporation, acting as the local board of health of such borough, may, with the consent of such corporation, apply such surplus in payment of any expenses that have been previously to the passing of this act or may hereafter be incurred by them, acting as the local board of health of such borough, in the improvement of the borough or of any part thereof, by drainage, enlargement of streets, or otherwise, in pursuance of the Public Health Act, 1846, and the Local Government Act, 1858, or of one of such acts.

13. Provided always, that nothing in this act shall repeal, abridge, or affect any power or authority of any body corporate, or the council of any borough, under any local act of Parliament relating to such body corporate or borough.

14. This act shall, as regards England, be construed with the act of the session holden in the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, as one act; and shall, as regards Ireland, be construed with the act of the session holden in the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 108.

15. This act may be cited as "The Municipal Corporation Mortgages, &c. Act, 1860."

CAP. XXIV.

An Act to remove Doubts as to the Validity of certain Marriages in Extra-parochial Places. [25th May, 1860.]

The preamble recites the 20 Vict. c. 19.

Sect. 1. The authority given by the bishop in consequence of the said recited act for the publication of banns, and the solemnisation of marriages by banns or license, in such church or chapel, shall be construed to extend to and authorise marriages in such churches or chapels between parties both or either of them being resident in such extra-parochial place, and all such marriages so had shall be deemed valid, in like manner as if such extra-parochial place had been a parish: provided that, when the parties to any marriage intended to be solemnised, after publication of banns, shall reside within different ecclesiastical districts, the banns of such marriage shall be published in the church or chapel, authorised under the provisions of the said recited act, in which the marriage is intended to be celebrated, as well as in the chapel of the other district, licensed under the provisions of one of the statutes in such case made and provided, where one of the parties then is resident; and if there be no such chapel, then in the church or chapel in which the banns of such last-mentioned party might be legally published if no such statute had been passed.

2. The provisions of stat. 6 & 7 WILL. 4, c. 85, s. 25, shall apply to such marriages as in this act mentioned.

43. How excise penalties under this act are to be recovered &c.

44. Covenants against houses, &c. being used as public-houses to extend to persons licensed to sell wine under this act.

45. Act not to affect the two Univerities, or the Vintners Company in London, or the borough of St. Albans.

46. Extent of act.

Sect. 1. From and after the 1st July, 1860, there shall be charged, levied, and paid, unto and for the use of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, for and upon the several licenses hereinafter mentioned, the respective rates and duties following; that is to say—

For every license to keep a refreshment house—

If the house and premises in respect of which such license shall be granted shall be under the rent and value of 20l. a year £0 10 6

And if the same shall be of the rent or value of 20l. a year or upwards ..... 1 1 0

And for every license to be granted as herein-after mentioned to any licensed keeper of a refreshment house to sell therein by retail foreign wine to be consumed in such house or on the premises belonging thereto—

If such house and premises shall be under the rent and value of 50l. a year ..... 3 3 0

And if the same shall be of the rent or value of 50l. a year or upwards ..... 5 5 0

And for every license to be taken out by any person for the selling by retail in any shop of foreign and British wine not to be consumed in the house or shop or on the premises where sold—

If the house and premises shall be under the rent and value of 50l. a year ..... 2 2 0

And if the same shall be of the rent or value of 50l. a year or upwards ..... 3 3 0

2. The duties by this act granted shall be deemed to be excise duties, and shall be under the care and management of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue for the time being; and all powers, provisions, and regulations, penalties, and forfeitures contained in or enacted by any act in force in re-

tion to excise duties, shall, in all cases not herein expressly provided for, and so far as the same are not superseded by and are consistent with the express provisions of this act, be duly observed, applied, and put in execution for ascertaining the rent or value of any house or premises in respect of which any license shall be applied for under this act, and for charging, collecting, and securing the said duties hereby granted, and otherwise relating thereto, as fully and effectually as if the same powers, provisions, and regulations, penalties and forfeitures, were repeated and re-enacted in the body of this act with reference to such rent or value, and to the said duties hereby granted.

3. Every person who shall keep a shop for the sale of any goods or commodities other than foreign wine, or who shall have taken out a license as a dealer in wine, (except persons expressly disqualified by this act), shall, without producing or having any other license or authority, be entitled to take out a license under this act to sell by retail, and in reputed quart or pint bottles only; in such shop foreign wine not to be consumed on the premises where sold, anything in any former act to the contrary notwithstanding.

4. Every sale of foreign wine in any less quantity than two gallons, or in less than one dozen reputed quart bottles, at one time, shall be deemed to be a selling by retail.

5. If any person licensed to sell wine not to be consumed on the premises shall, with intent to evade the provisions of this act, take or carry, or authorise or employ, or permit or suffer, any person to take or carry, any wine out of or from the house, shop, or premises of such licensed person, for the purpose of being sold on his account, or for his benefit or profit drunk or consumed, in any other house, or in any tent, shed, or other premises of any kind whatever belonging to such licensed person, or hired, used, or occupied by him, such wine shall be deemed and taken to have been drunk or consumed upon the premises; and the person selling the same shall be subject to the like penalties as if such wine had been actually consumed in any house or upon any premises licensed only for the sale thereof as aforesaid.

6. All houses, rooms, shops, or buildings kept open for public refreshment, resort, and entertainment at any time between the hours of nine of the clock at night and five of the clock of the following morning, not being licensed for the sale of beer, cider, wine, or spirits respectively, shall be deemed refreshment houses within this act, and the resident, owner, tenant, or occupier thereof shall be required to take out a license under this act to keep a refreshment house; and every person who shall keep any house, room, shop, or building for the purpose of selling therein any victual or refreshment to be consumed on the premises where the same shall be sold, (except beer, cider, wine, and spirits sold respectively under a proper license in that behalf), and every person who shall keep any house, room, shop, or building for the consumption therein by the public of any refreshment, (except as aforesaid), although the same shall not be sold therein, may, if he shall think fit, take out a license under this act to keep a refreshment house; and in all proceedings, and upon all occasions whatever, it shall be sufficient to describe, by the term "refreshment house," any house, room, shop, or building in which any such article as aforesaid (except as aforesaid) is sold to be consumed, or is consumed as aforesaid, without further or otherwise designating or describing the same.

7. Every person who shall be licensed to keep a refreshment house, and shall pursue therein the trade or business of a confectioner, or shall keep open such house as an eating-house, for the purpose of selling, to be consumed therein, animal food or other victuals wherewith wine or other fermented liquors are usually drunk, shall be entitled (subject to the terms and conditions of this act, and not being expressly disqualified thereby) to take out a license to sell foreign wine by retail in such refreshment house, to be consumed on the premises where the same shall have been sold, without producing or having any other license or authority than as aforesaid; and every confectioner and eating-house keeper respectively, who shall have taken out such license to retail wine under this act, shall not be subject or liable to any penalty or forfeiture under any other act or acts by reason or on account of his selling wine by retail, or having the same in his possession in his entered premises, anything in any other act or acts to the contrary notwithstanding.

8. Provided always, that no license to sell foreign wine by retail, to be consumed on the premises, shall be granted for any refreshment house which, with the premises belonging thereto and occupied therewith, shall be under the rent and value of 10*l.* a year, nor for any refreshment house situated in any city, borough, town, or place containing a population exceeding 10,000, according to the then last parliamentary census, if such refreshment house, with the premises belonging thereto and occupied therewith, shall be under the rent and value of 20*l.* a year; and no sheriff's officer, or officer executing the legal process of any court of justice, shall be capable of receiving or using any license under this act to sell wine by retail to be consumed on the premises; and every license which shall be granted contrary hereto shall be void to all intents and purposes.

9. Every person who shall keep a refreshment house for which a license is required by this act, without taking out and having in force a proper license in that behalf granted to him under the authority of this act, shall forfeit a sum not exceeding 20*l.*, which penalty shall be recovered as hereinafter directed.

10. All licenses authorised to be granted under this act shall be granted by and under the hands of the collector or other person having charge of the excise collection, and the supervisor of excise of the district within which respectively the refreshment house or other house or shop for or relating to which any such license shall be required, or by such other person or persons as the Commissioners of Inland Revenue shall appoint or authorise in that behalf, on payment of the duty chargeable for such licenses respectively; and every such license shall be in the form contained in the schedule annexed to this act: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of Inland Revenue from time to time to make such alterations therein as they may deem to be necessary, in consequence of any alteration or amendment of the law, in order to make such form of license conformable to the law for the time being.

11. All licenses which shall be granted under the authority of this act between the 31st March and the 1st May in any year shall be dated on the 1st April; and all licenses which shall be granted at any other time shall be dated on the day on which the same shall be granted; and all such licenses, whensoever granted, shall have effect on and after the day of the date thereof until the 1st April then next following, and shall be renewed annually on payment of the duty by this act charged thereon respectively.

12. Upon the death of any person licensed under this act before the expiration of the license, it shall be lawful for the persons authorised to grant licenses to authorise and empower, by indorsement or otherwise, as the Commissioners of Inland Revenue shall direct, the executors or administrators, or the widow or child, of such deceased person who shall be possessed of and occupy the dwelling-house and premises before used for such purpose, to continue the business for which such license was granted, and to sell in the same house and premises such articles as by the said license are authorised to be sold therein, during the residue of the term for which such license was originally granted, without taking out any fresh license or payment of any additional duty thereon, and the person so authorised and empowered shall then be deemed to be a person licensed under this act, and accordingly subject to the provisions, conditions, regulations, and penalties contained therein.

13. If any person licensed to keep a refreshment house shall be desirous of selling foreign wine by retail to be consumed therein, he shall, previously to the granting to him for the first time of a license for that purpose, fill up and sign a requisition for such license, in such form as the Commissioners of Inland Revenue shall provide in that behalf, specifying therein the true Christian and surname, and place or places of abode during the last six months, of the applicant, the description and situation of the house for which the license is required, and the true yearly rent or annual value thereof; and such requisition shall be made in duplicate, and delivered to the supervisor of excise for the district in which such refreshment house is situated, who shall forthwith deliver or transmit by post one of such duplicates, together with a notice, to the effect hereinafter directed, to the clerk of the special sessions in London, at the Mansion House of the city of London, if the refreshment house shall be situated within the said city or the liberties thereof, or to the clerk to the justices of the court of petty sessions holden for the division or place within which such refreshment house is situated, if situated elsewhere than as aforesaid; and every such duplicate shall be accompanied by a notice to the lord mayor of the city of London and such justices respectively, signed by the said supervisor, to the effect that a license to retail wine will be granted, pursuant to such requisition, on or immediately after a day to be specified in such notice, not less distant than thirty days from the day of the delivery or transmission of the same, unless in the meantime notice in writing, signed by the said lord mayor, or by the alderman of the ward in which the refreshment house is situated, or by the said justices, or a majority of them, present in petty sessions, as the case may be, shall be received by the said supervisor, to the effect that the said lord mayor, alderman, or justices, as the case may be, doth or do object to the granting of the said wine license, on one or more of the following grounds, specifying the same; that is to say, that the house for which such license is required is not a confectioner's shop, or an eating-house, within the meaning of this act, or not of the yearly rental or annual value required by this act, or that it is a disorderly house, or a house frequented by prostitutes or other disorderly persons, or that it is adjudged disqualified for the sale of wine therein, or that the applicant is disqualified from selling wine under the provisions of this act, specifying the grounds of such disqualification respectively, or that the applicant has within three years been convicted of any offence punishable by imprisonment, or that the applicant, having within three years held a license to keep a beer-house, common inn, ale-house, or victualling-house, has forfeited or been refused a renewal of such license; and if such notice of objection shall be received by the said supervisor within the time limited as aforesaid the said license shall not be granted; but if otherwise, and no such caveat as hereinafter mentioned be received by the said supervisor, then such license shall be granted on payment of the duty by this act charged thereon, provided the applicant shall be entitled to such license under the provisions of this act in other respects: provided always, that no such notice of objection shall be signed or sent by the said lord mayor, alderman, or justices until after they respectively shall have summoned the applicant for such license to shew cause, and shall have heard him against the objection to the granting thereof, or he shall have refused or neglected to attend before them respectively to shew cause, pursuant to their summons; and every such summons shall specify the grounds of such objection; and it shall be lawful for the said lord mayor, alderman, and justices respectively, pending their decision upon any such objection as aforesaid, and before the expiration of the said period of thirty days, to transmit to the said supervisor a notice, by way of caveat, against the granting of such license; and in that case the license shall not be granted if, within the further period of thirty days from the receipt of such caveat, the objection to the granting of the license shall be affirmed by the said lord mayor, alderman, or justices, and notice thereof shall be given to the said supervisor.

14. Provided always, that every person intending to apply for a license to be granted under the authority of this act to retail wine to be consumed on the premises in respect of any house, room, shop, or building not theretofore licensed for the consumption of wine therein, shall affix or cause to be affixed a notice on the door of such house, room, shop, or building, and on the door of the church or chapel of the parish or place in which such house shall be situate, and, where there shall be no church or chapel, on some other public and conspicuous place within such parish or place, on three several Sundays previous to his application for such license, at some time between the hours of ten of the clock in the forenoon and four of the clock in the afternoon, and shall serve a copy of such notice upon one of the overseers of the poor, and upon one of the constables or other peace officers of the said parish or place, fourteen days at the least previous to such application; and every such notice, and the copies thereof, shall be written in a fair and legible hand, or printed, and shall be signed by the party intending to make such application, or by his agent thereto authorized, and shall set forth the situation of the house, shop, or building in a true and particular manner, and the Christian and surname of the party applying, together with the place of his residence, and his trade or calling, during the six months previous to the time of serving such notice, and his intention to apply for a license to retail wine to be consumed in such house or premises.

15. Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the said lord mayor and alderman, and for any two justices in petty sessions respectively, after any such wine license shall have been granted for any refreshment house within their respective jurisdictions, but three months at least before the expiration of such license, to give notice to the holder thereof to appear before them respectively, and shew cause why an objection (stating the grounds thereof) should not be lodged against a renewal of his license; and if upon the hearing the said lord mayor or alderman, or the justices present in petty sessions, or a majority of them, (as the case may be), shall see just cause of objection on one or more of the grounds mentioned in the preceding clause, they shall give to the said supervisor of the district within which the said refreshment house shall be situated notice of objection against the renewal of such license, and shall specify the grounds of objection in such notice; and on the expiration of such wine license, after such notice as aforesaid given to the supervisor, no renewal thereof shall be granted unless the decision of the said lord mayor or alderman or justices shall be reversed upon an appeal against the same, as hereinafter allowed; (that is to say): provided always, that it shall be lawful for the holder of the said license to appeal against the said decision of the said lord mayor or alderman or justices to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace which shall be holden for the city or county (as the case may be) after the expiration of ten days from the making of such decision, upon giving seven days' previous notice in writing to the said lord mayor or alderman or justices of his intention so to appeal; and the said court of sessions shall hear and finally determine the said appeal, and upon notice of such determination given to the said supervisor, the said license shall be refused or granted conformably therewith.

16. A list or register of every license granted under the authority of this act, specifying the name and place of shop of every person licensed, and the name and description of the house for which such license shall be granted, and whether the license shall be to keep a refreshment house or for the sale of wine therein, shall be kept at the office or dwelling-house of every collector and supervisor of excise in their respective collections and districts; and such list or register shall at all times be produced to, and shall be open to the inspection and perusal of, any justice of the county or place where such license shall be granted, and where such house shall be situate, and a copy of such list and register shall, once in every six months, be transmitted by every collector and supervisor of excise to the clerk of the magistrates for the district in which such license shall be granted, and any copy or extract of or from such list or register, which shall be at any time required by the clerk to the said justices, shall be given to him by such collector or supervisor whenever thereto required.

17. In case any complaint shall be laid before two justices of the peace against any person licensed to sell wine by retail under the authority of this act, for any offence against the tenor of his license or against this act, it shall be lawful for the said two justices (if they shall think fit) to require such person to produce his license before them, for their examination; and if such person shall wilfully neglect or refuse so to do, he shall forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding £4, as the said justices shall think proper.

18. It shall be lawful for all constables and officers of police, when and so often as they shall respectively think proper, to enter into all houses licensed as refreshment houses under the authority of this act, and into and upon the premises belonging thereto; and if any person licensed to keep a refreshment house, or any servant or other person in his employ or by his direction, shall refuse to admit or shall not admit any constable or officer of police demanding admittance into such refreshment house or upon such premises, the person so licensed shall for the first offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding £4, together with the costs of conviction, to be recovered before one or more justices of the peace, on information or complaint made within seven days next after the day on which such offence was committed; and it shall be lawful for any two or more justices before whom any such person shall be convicted for the second time of any such offence to adjudge (if they shall so think fit) the license or licenses of such offender in respect of such refreshment house to be forfeited, and that he shall be disqualified from having any license granted to him under this act in respect of such house for the space of two years, or for such shorter space of time as they may think proper to adjudge.

19. Every person who shall sell any wine by retail, whether to be consumed on the premises or not, without having a proper license in force duly authorising him in that behalf, shall, over and above any other penalty to which he may be liable, forfeit the sum of 20*l*., which shall be denominated an excise penalty.

20. If any person, not being duly licensed to sell wines, shall retail any wine, either to be consumed in or upon the house or premises or off the premises where sold, or if any person shall sell any wine to be consumed in or upon the house or premises where sold without being licensed so to do, such person shall, in addition to any excise penalty to which he may thereby become subject, forfeit the sum of 5*l*.

21. All liquor which shall be sold or offered for sale by any person, whether licensed under this act or not, as being foreign wine, or under the name by which any foreign wine is usually designated or known, shall, as against the person who shall so sell or offer the same for sale, be deemed and taken to be foreign wine; and any fermented liquor containing a greater proportion than forty per centum of proof spirit shall be deemed and taken to be spirits.

22. Every person who shall be convicted of felony or of selling spirits without license shall for ever thereafter be disqualified from selling wine by retail, and no license to sell wine by retail under this act shall be granted to any person who shall have been so convicted as aforesaid; and if any person shall, after having been so convicted as aforesaid, take out or have any license to sell wine by retail under this act, the same shall be void to all intents and purposes; and every person who shall, after being convicted as aforesaid, sell any wine by retail in any manner whatsoever, shall incur the penalty for so doing without license; and in all such cases, in the prosecution for the recovery of such penalty, a certificate from the clerk of assize or the clerk of the peace, or person acting as such, of any such conviction as aforesaid, shall on the trial in such prosecution be legal evidence thereof.

23. Every person licensed to retail wine under this act shall, in manner directed by the laws of excise in that behalf, make entry with the proper officer of excise of every house, cellar, room, and place for storing, keeping, or retailing of wine, on pain of forfeiting the penalties imposed by the statutes in that behalf for making use of any unentered room or place; and all wine found in any such unentered house, cellar, room, or place shall be forfeited.

24. It shall be lawful for any officer of excise, during the hours in which any house licensed for the retail of wine to be consumed on the premises may be kept open, to enter into every house, cellar, room, or place entered for the storing, keeping, or retailing of wine to be consumed as aforesaid, and to make search for and seize all spirits which may be found in any such house, cellar, room, and place, and to examine all wine kept therein.

25. If any person licensed to retail wine under this act shall receive into or keep or have in his possession, in any cellar, room, or place entered for storing, keeping, or retailing wine, any spirits, he shall, in addition to all other penalties, forfeit the sum of 50*l*., which shall be denominated an excise penalty; and all spirits found in any such entered cellar, room, or place shall be forfeited; and on conviction of any such licensed person in any penalty for having spirits in his possession, or for selling or retailing spirits, the license of such person for retailing wine shall become null and void, and shall be so adjudged.

26. Every person licensed under this act to sell wine by retail shall, if required, sell or otherwise dispose of all such wine (except wine in bottle, and quantities less than half a pint) by the gallon, quart, pint, or half pint measure, sized or marked according to the standard, and shall also, if required by any guest or customer purchasing such wine, retail the same in a vessel sized or marked according to such standard; and in default thereof he shall for every such offence forfeit the illegal measure, and pay a sum not exceeding 40*s*., together with the costs of the conviction, to be recovered by information or complaint made within seven days next after that on which the offence was committed, before two justices of the peace; and such penalty shall be over and above all penalties to which the offender may be liable under any other act.

27. No person licensed under this act to sell wine by retail shall have or keep his house open for the sale of wine, nor shall sell any wine, nor shall suffer any wine to be drunk or consumed in or at such house at any time before the hour of five of the clock in the morning, nor after twelve of the clock at night, of any day in the week, in the cities of London or Westminster, or within the boundaries of any of the boroughs of Marylebone, the Tower Hamlets, Lambeth, or Southwark, as defined by an act passed in the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 64; nor after eleven of the clock at night within any parish or place within the bills of mortality, or within any city, cinque port, town corporate, parish, or place, the population of which, according to the last parliamentary census, shall exceed 2500, or within one mile, to be measured as aforesaid, from any polling place used at the last election for any town having a like population, and returning a member or members to Parliament, nor after ten of the clock at night elsewhere; nor shall any such house be open for the sale or consumption therein of any article whatever at any time during which the houses of licensed victuallers now are or hereafter shall be closed on any Sunday, Good Friday, or Christmas Day, or any day appointed for a public fast or thanksgiving, nor at any time between the hours of one and four of the clock in the morning on any day whatever; and if any person licensed as aforesaid shall keep his house open for selling or shall sell any wine, or suffer any wine to be drunk or consumed in or at such house, at any other time than as hereinbefore prescribed and directed, or shall keep his house open as aforesaid, contrary to any prohibition in this clause contained, he shall forfeit the sum of 40*s*. for every offence; and every separate sale shall be deemed a separate offence: provided always, that nothing in this clause contained shall extend to prevent the keeper of a refreshment house, being duly licensed to retail wine, from selling to any lodger therein any wine at any hour of the day or night, either on Sunday or any other day.

28. It shall be lawful for any two justices of the peace acting for any county or place where any riot or tumult shall happen or be expected to take place, to order or direct that every person licensed under the authority of this act to sell wine by retail in any house within their respective jurisdiction, in or near the place where such riot or tumult shall happen or be expected to take place, shall close his house at any time which the said justices shall order or direct; and every such person who shall keep open his house at or after any hour at which such justices shall have so ordered or directed such house to be closed, shall be taken and deemed to have not maintained good order and rule therein, and to be guilty of an offence against the tenor of the license granted to him.

29. Every person licensed under this act to sell wine by retail who shall permit any person to be guilty of drunkenness or other disorderly conduct in the house or premises mentioned in such license, or who shall himself be guilty of any such disorderly conduct, shall for every such offence forfeit the respective sums following; and every person who shall transgress or neglect, or shall be a party in transgressing or neglecting, the conditions and provisions specified in such license, or shall allow such conditions or provisions to be in any way transgressed or neglected in the said house or premises, shall be deemed guilty of disorderly conduct; and every person so licensed who shall permit or be guilty of any such disorderly conduct shall for the first offence forfeit any such sum, not less than 40*s*. nor more than 5*l*., as the justices before whom he shall be convicted of such offence shall adjudge, and for the second offence any sum not less than 5*l*. nor more than 10*l*., and for the third such offence any sum not less than 20*l*. nor more than 50*l*.; and it shall be lawful for the justices before whom any such conviction for any such second or third offence shall take place to adjudge, if they shall so think fit, that such offender shall be disqualified from selling wine by retail for any term not exceeding five years next ensuing such conviction; and if any person so licensed as aforesaid shall mix or cause to be mixed any spirits, or any drugs or other pernicious ingredients, with any wine sold in his house or premises, or shall fraudulently dilute or in anyways adulterate any such wine, or shall sell or offer for sale any wine which, to the knowledge of such person, has been so mixed, diluted, or adulterated, he shall for the first offence forfeit any sum not less than 10*l.* nor more than 20*l.*, as the justices before whom he shall be convicted of such offence shall adjudge, and for the second such offence he shall be disqualified from selling wine by retail for the term of five years, or forfeit any sum of money not less than 20*l.* nor more than 50*l.*, at the discretion of the justices before whom he shall be adjudged guilty of such second offence; and if any offender convicted of such second offence as last aforesaid shall during such term of five years sell any wine by retail, either in the house and premises mentioned in his license or in any other place, he shall forfeit any sum not less than 25*l.* nor more than 50*l.*, and shall be subject to a like penalty at any and every house or place where he shall commit such offence.

30. All penalties under this act, except those denominated excise penalties, shall be recovered upon the information or complaint of a constable or other peace-officer before two justices acting in petty sessions, and shall be prosecuted and proceeded for within three calendar months next after the commission of the offence in respect of which such penalty shall be incurred, or within such shorter time as may be herein limited with regard to any particular penalty; and every person licensed under this act to retail wine to be consumed on the premises, who shall be convicted before two justices so acting in and for the division or place in which shall be situate the house kept, or theretofore kept, by such person, of any offence against the tenor of the license to him granted under this act, or of any offence for which any penalty is imposed by this act, shall, unless proof be adduced to the satisfaction of such justices that such person had been theretofore convicted within the space of twelve calendar months next preceding of some offence against the tenor of his license or against this act, be adjudged to be guilty of a first offence against the provisions of this act, and to forfeit and pay any penalty by this act imposed for such offence, or, if no specific penalty be so imposed, then any sum not exceeding 5*l.*, together with the costs of the conviction; and if such proof as aforesaid shall be adduced that such person had been previously convicted within the space of twelve calendar months next preceding of one such offence only, such person shall be adjudged to be guilty of a second offence against the provisions of this act, and to forfeit and pay any penalty by this act imposed for such offence, or, if no specific penalty be so imposed, then any sum not exceeding 10*l.*, together with the costs of the conviction; and if such proof as aforesaid shall be adduced that such person had been previously convicted, within the space of eighteen calendar months next preceding, of two such separate offences, and if proof shall be adduced to the satisfaction of the justices that such person so charged is guilty of the offence charged against him, such person shall be adjudged to be guilty of a third offence against the provisions of this act, and to forfeit any penalty imposed by this act in respect of such offence; or, if no such specific penalty shall be so imposed, then to forfeit and pay the sum of 50*l.*, together with the costs of the conviction.

31. It shall be lawful for the justices before whom any person holding a license under this act for the sale of wine by retail shall be convicted of any offence against the tenor of the said license, or for which any penalty is imposed by this act, if proof shall be adduced to their satisfaction that within two years last preceding such conviction two convictions for any such offence of the same person, or of any other person licensed in respect of the same house or premises, have taken place, to declare the license granted in respect of the said house or premises forfeited and void, and to adjudge that no license for the sale of wine shall be granted to any person whatever in respect of the said house or premises for the term of three years from the date of such adjudication, of which adjudication the justices shall give notice to the supervisor of excise; and any license for the sale of wine that may be granted in respect of the said house or premises during the said term of three years shall be null and void.

32. Every person licensed to keep a refreshment house under this act who shall (without a license for that purpose) sell, or permit or suffer to be sold, within such refreshment house, any intoxicating liquor, or shall knowingly suffer any unlawful games or gaming therein, or knowingly suffer prostitutes, thieves, or drunken and disorderly persons to assemble at or continue in or upon his premises, or do, suffer, or permit any act in contravention of his license, shall, upon conviction thereof before two justices, pay for the first offence a fine not exceeding 40*s.*, for the second offence a fine not exceeding 5*l.*, and for every subsequent offence a fine not exceeding 20*l.*, or be subject to a forfeiture of his license, at the discretion of the justices before whom he shall be convicted; and in case of such forfeiture of his license, such person shall be disqualified for the space of one year then next ensuing from obtaining a fresh license; and such fresh license, if obtained within the said year, shall be absolutely null and void to all intents and purposes.

33. It shall be lawful for the justices before whom any person shall be convicted of any offence against this act to mitigate, if they shall see cause, any penalty incurred for such offence; provided that where any conviction shall take place on any information exhibited under the laws of excise, such penalty shall not be mitigated to any sum less than one-fourth part thereof.

34. Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the party convicted of any such second or third offence to appeal to the general or quarter sessions of the peace then next ensuing, unless such sessions shall be held within twelve days next after such conviction, and in that case to the then next subsequent sessions; and in such case the party so convicted shall, before the convicting justices, forthwith enter into a recognisance, with two sufficient sureties, personally to appear at such general or quarter sessions, and to abide the judgment of the court thereupon, and to pay such costs as shall be by the court awarded, which recognisances such justices are hereby authorised to require and take, or, in failure of the party convicted entering in such recognisance, the conviction shall remain good and valid to all intents and purposes; and the said justices who shall take such recognisance from the party convicted are also hereby required to bind the person who shall make such charge in a recognisance to appear at such general or quarter sessions as aforesaid, then and there to give evidence against the person so charged, and in like manner to bind any other person who shall have any knowledge of the circumstances of such offence; and it shall be lawful for such court of general or quarter sessions to adjudge such person to be guilty of any such second or third offence against the provisions of this act, as the case may be, and such adjudication shall be final to all intents and purposes; and it shall be lawful for such court of general or quarter sessions to punish such offender by fine not exceeding the sum of 100*l.*, together with the costs of such appeal, or to adjudge the license granted to and held by or on behalf of such offender to be forfeited and void, or to adjudge that no wine shall be sold by retail in the house or premises mentioned in the license of such offender for the term of two years from the date of such adjudication, or to punish such offender by such fine as aforesaid, and to adjudge such premises to be disqualified for the sale of wine as aforesaid, and such license to be forfeited and void; and if such license shall be adjudged to be forfeited and void, it shall thenceforth be void accordingly; and whenever in such case, or in any other case, the license of such offender shall be adjudged to be void, such offender shall, from and after such adjudication, be deemed and taken to be incapable of selling wine by retail in any house kept by him for the space of two years, to be computed from the time of such adjudication, and any license granted to such person during such term shall be void to all intents and purposes.

35. Whenever it shall happen that any appeal in pursuance of this act shall be dismissed, or that the judgment appealed against shall be affirmed, or that such appeal shall be abandoned, it shall be lawful for the court to which such appeal shall have been made, or intended to have been made, and such court is hereby required, to adjudge and order that the party so having appealed, or having entered into such recognisance, shall pay to the justices against whose judgment such appeal shall have been made, or intended to be made, or to whomsoever they shall appoint, such sum by way of costs as shall in the opinion of such court be sufficient to indemnify such justices from all costs and charges whatsoever to which such justices may have been put in consequence of the intention or declared intention of such party to appeal; and if such party shall refuse or neglect to pay forthwith such sum, it shall be lawful for the said court to adjudge and order that the party so refusing or neglecting shall be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to remain until such sum be paid, or for any time not exceeding six calendar months, unless such sum be sooner paid; and in every case in which the judgment so appealed against shall be reversed it shall be lawful for such court (if it shall think fit) to adjudge and order that the treasurer of the county or place in and for which such justices whose judgment shall have been so reversed shall have acted on the occasion when they shall have given such judgment shall pay to such justices, or to whomsoever they shall appoint, such sum as shall in the opinion of such court be sufficient to indemnify such justices from all costs and charges whatsoever to which they may have been so put; and the said treasurer is hereby authorised to pay the same, which shall be allowed to him in his accounts.

36. In every case in which any appeal shall be made by any person convicted of any offence under the provisions of this act to the general or quarter sessions it shall be lawful for the convicting justices, if no other fit and proper person shall appear to prosecute such charge, and to carry on such proceedings as may be necessary to obtain at such session an adjudication thereon, to order that a constable of the city of London police force within the city of London and liberties thereof, or a constable of the metropolitan police force within the metropolitan police district, or if elsewhere the superintendent or inspector of police of the district, or the constable or other peace-officer of the parish or place in which the house kept by the person charged shall be situate, as to the said justices shall seem fit, shall carry on all proceedings necessary to obtain such adjudication as aforesaid, and to bind any such constable, or the said superintendent or inspector of police, or other peace-officer, in a sufficient recognisance so to do; and it shall be lawful for the justices before whom such offender shall have been convicted to order the treasurer of the county or place in and for which such justices shall then act to pay to such constable, superintendent, inspector, or other peace-officer, and to the witnesses on his behalf, such sum or sums of money as to the court shall appear to be sufficient to reimburse them respectively the expenses which they shall have been severally put to in and about such prosecution, which order the clerk of the peace is hereby directed and required forthwith to make out, and to deliver to such constable, superintendent, inspector, or other peace-officer and witnesses respectively; and the said treasurer is hereby authorised and required, upon sight of such order, forthwith to pay to the person authorised to receive the same such money as aforesaid, and the said treasurer shall be allowed the same in his accounts.

37. It shall be lawful for the said lord mayor or alderman, and for the justices of the peace before whom respectively any question shall be depending touching any objection against the granting or renewing of a license under the provisions of this act, to summon witnesses on behalf of either party to such question, and to examine all such witnesses on oath, and to do and perform all things necessary for the due and proper hearing and determination of such question, and also to order payment of fees, allowances, and reasonable expenses to their clerks, and to all witnesses, constables, and other persons by whom any duties shall have been performed or expenses or loss of time incurred respectively under this act; and the amount of such fees, allowances, and expenses shall be ascertained according to the tables of fees and allowances for the time being in force in the county, city, or borough respectively within which the refreshment house in question shall be situate; and the order for payment may be made, at the discretion of the said lord mayor, alderman, or justices, either wholly or partially, on the applicant or on the objector, or if the equity of the case shall seem so to require, then on the treasurer of the county, city, or borough aforesaid, who shall be reimbursed out of the county or borough rate; and the provisions of the act passed in the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, for the recovery of costs ordered by justices in petty sessions to be paid, shall apply to all costs, allowances, and expenses ordered to be paid under this act.

38. Any person summoned as a witness to give evidence before the said lord mayor or alderman, or any justices or sessions, touching any matters arising under this act, either on the part of the complainant or of the person accused, or of any person interested in any such matter, who shall neglect or refuse to appear at the time and place for that purpose appointed, and who shall not make such reasonable excuse for such neglect or refusal as shall be admitted and allowed by such lord mayor or alderman, or justices or sessions, or who appearing shall refuse to be examined on oath or affirmation and give evidence, shall, on conviction, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 10*l.* for every such offence.

39. Every person licensed to sell wine, spirits, beer, cider, or any other fermented or distilled liquors by retail, to be drunk or consumed on the premises, who knowingly harbours or entertains, or suffers to remain in the place wherein he carries on his business, any constable during any part of the time appointed for his being on duty, unless for the purpose of quelling any disturbance or restoring order, shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding 20*s.*

40. Every person found drunk in any street or public thoroughfare, and who while drunk is guilty of any riotous or indecent behaviour, shall, upon summary conviction of such offence before two justices, be liable to a penalty of not more than 40*s.* for every such offence, or may be committed, if the justices or magistrate before whom he is convicted think fit, instead of inflicting on him any pecuniary penalty, to the house of correction for any time not more than seven days.

41. Any person who shall be drunk, riotous, quarrelsome, or disorderly in any shop, house, premises, or place licensed for the sale of beer, wine, or spirituous liquors by retail to be consumed on the premises, or for refreshment, resort, and entertainment under the provisions of this act, and shall refuse or neglect to quit such shop, house, premises, or place upon being requested so to do by the manager or occupier, or his agent or servant, or by any constable, shall, on conviction thereof before one justice, be liable to pay a fine not exceeding 40*s.*; and all constables are hereby authorised, empowered, and required, on the demand of such manager, occupier, agent, or servant, to assist in expelling such drunken, riotous, quarrelsome, and disorderly persons from such shops, houses, premises, and places.

42. And with regard to all penalties incurred under this act, except the penalties herein denominated excise penalties, all the provisions contained in the act passed in the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, relating to proceedings for the recovery of penalties by summary conviction, and to appeals against such convictions, and the levying and enforcing of penalties, and the costs of such proceedings, shall be applied and put in force in relation to the penalties by this act imposed.

43. The penalties imposed by this act denominated excise penalties shall be recovered, levied, mitigated, and applied by the same ways, means, and methods, and in like manner, as penalties may be recovered, levied, mitigated, and applied under the laws of excise in that behalf.

44. Provided always, that any covenant or clause of restriction contained in any lease or contract between a landlord and tenant, whereby the trade or business of a vintner is prohibited from being carried on in any house, building, or place mentioned or comprised in such lease or contract, or whereby any such house, building, or place is prohibited from being used as a public-house, shall be construed to apply and extend to every person who shall be licensed to sell wine to be consumed on the premises under the provisions of this act, and to any house specified in the license granted to such person.

45. Nothing in this act contained shall extend to alter, or in any manner to affect, any of the rights or privileges of the Universities of Oxford or Cambridge, or the powers of the chancellors or vice-chancellors of the same, as by law possessed under the respective charters of the said Universities or otherwise, or the master, wardens, freemen, and commonalty of the vintners of the city of London, except as to those freemen of the said Company of Vintners who have obtained the same by redemption only, or the mayor or burgesses of the borough of St. Albans, in the county of Hertford, or their successors.

46. This act shall not extend to Scotland or Ireland.

CAP. XXVIII.

An Act to repeal the Act of the 7 Geo. 2, c. 8, commonly called "Sir John Barnard's Act," and the Act of the 10 Geo. 2, c. 8. [14th June, 1800.]

The preamble recites the 7 Geo. 2, c. 8, and the 10 Geo. 2, c. 8.

Section 1. Recited acts repealed.

CAP. XXIX.

An Act to amend an Act relative to malicious Injuries to Property. [14th June, 1800.]

Section 1. Persons damaging steam-engines, &c. used in working mines guilty of felony, and liable to punishments as in recited act.

2. As to offences within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty.

The preamble recites the 7 & 6 Geo. 4, c. 30.

Section 1. That if any person shall unlawfully and maliciously pull down or destroy or damage, with intent to destroy or to render useless, or shall stop, obstruct, or hinder the working of any steam-engine or other engine, or of any appliance or apparatus in connexion therewith, for sinking, draining, or working any mine, or for in anywise assisting in the working thereof, with intent thereby to destroy or damage such mine, or to hinder or obstruct or delay the working thereof, every such offender shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable to any of the punishments as may be awarded for any or either of the offences named in the 6th section of the said recited act.

2. Where any felony punishable under this act shall be committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England and Ireland, the same shall be dealt with, inquired of, tried, and determined in the same manner as any other felony committed within that jurisdiction.

CAP. XXX.

An Act to enable a Majority of Two-thirds of the Ratepayers of any Parish or District, duly assembled, to rate their District in aid of Public Improvements for general Benefit within their District. [3rd July, 1800.]

Section 1. Ratepayers may hold land, &c. for the purpose of forming public walks, &c., and levy rates for maintaining the same &c.

2. Adoption of act, according to the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 74.
3. As to public baths and washhouses.
4. Ratepayers, after notice given, to vote parishes.
5. Corporate bodies may attend and vote.
6. One-half of the estimated cost to be raised by private subscription.
7. Amount of rate.

Whereas it is expedient that facility should be given for the purpose of effecting local improvements beneficial to the health and comfort of the people: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Section 1. It shall be lawful for the ratepayers of any parish maintaining its own poor, the population of which, according to the last account from time to time taken thereof by the authority of Parliament, exceeds 500 persons, to purchase or lease lands, and to accept gifts and grants of land, for the purpose of forming any public walk, exercise or play ground, and to levy rates for maintaining the same, and for removal of any nuisances or obstruction to the free use and enjoyment thereof, and for improving any open walk or footpath, or placing convenient seats or shelters from rain, and for other purposes of a similar nature.

2. This act may be adopted for any borough, or for any parish having a population of 500 or upwards, (according to the last account for the time taken by authority of Parliament), in the same manner as the act of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 74, may be adopted in such borough or parish.

3. Where the act is adopted in a borough or in such a parish, the provisions of the act of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 74, for the purposes below specified applicable in the like cases where that act is adopted, shall take effect for the purposes of this act, viz. all the provisions concerning—

- (1). The authority by which and the manner in which the act is to be carried into execution;
- (2). The mode of providing the expenses of carrying the act into execution, (excluding the provisions for borrowing money for such expenses);
- (3). The appointment (in the case of a parish) of commissioners, the tenure of office and procedure, and the audit of their accounts;
- (4). The powers of the councils and commissioners for the purposes of the act, (except the powers of borrowing money).

4. After the adoption of this act it shall be lawful for the ratepayers, in meeting assembled, to rate such parish to a separate rate, to be called "The ——— parish improvement rate;" provided that such rate be agreed to by a majority of at least two-thirds in value of the ratepayers assembled at such meeting.

5. Corporate bodies shall be allowed to attend meetings to be held as aforesaid, and to vote thereat, by some person to be deputed by them for that purpose under their corporate seal.

6. Provided always, that previous to any such rate being imposed a sum in amount not less than at least one-half of the estimated cost of such proposed improvement shall have been raised, given, or collected by private subscription or donation.

7. Such rate shall not exceed 6d. in the pound.

CAP. XXXI.

An Act to repeal a certain Enactment for restraining the Governor and Company of the Bank of Ireland from lending Money on Mortgage. [3rd July, 1860.]

The preamble recites that sect. 7 of stat. 21 & 22 Geo. 3, c. 16, (Irish), provided, "that nothing therein contained shall be construed to enable the said corporation, or any person or persons on their behalf, to lend or advance any sum or sums to be secured by mortgage or sale of lands, tenements, or hereditaments redeemable, anything therein contained to the contrary notwithstanding."

Sect. 1. The said recited provision of the said act of the Parliament of Ireland of the 21 & 22 Geo. 3 shall be repealed; and it shall be lawful for the said corporation, or any person or persons on their behalf, to lend or advance any sum or sums of money to be secured by mortgage or sale of lands, tenements, or hereditaments redeemable, if the said corporation shall so think fit.

2. So much of the said recited act as remains unrepealed, and this act, shall be read and construed together as one act.

CAP. XXXII.

An Act to abolish the Jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts in Ireland in Cases of Defamation, and in England and Ireland in certain Cases of Brawling. [3rd July, 1860.]

Sect. 1. Jurisdiction of ecclesiastical courts in suits for defamation and brawling abolished as against persons not in holy orders. Persons in custody for defamation, &c. under order of ecclesiastical courts to be discharged. Order for discharge not to be made until costs lawfully incurred are paid.

2. Penalty on persons found guilty of making a disturance in churches, chapels, churchyards, or burial-grounds. Stat. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 81.

3. Offenders may be, immediately after the offence committed, apprehended &c.

4. Persons aggrieved may appeal against conviction.

5. Stat. 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 4, repealed.

6. Act not to affect statutes of the 1 Mary, sess. 2, c. 3; 1 Hm. c. 2; or sect. 16 of the 1 Wm. & M. c. 19.

7. Nothing to limit power of ordinary over fabric of churches, &c.

CAP. XXXIII.

An Act to amend certain Provisions in the Bankrupt Law of Scotland. [3rd July, 1860.]

Sect. 1. Short title.

2. Where it appears to the Court of Session, &c. that the estate ought to be distributed in England or Ireland, sequestration may be recalled.

3. Discharge of bankrupt may in certain cases be refused, although no opposition be made by creditors.

4. Interlocutors of the Lord Ordinary or sheriff subject to review.

5. "Gazette" in said act to mean "Edinburgh Gazette."

6. Fee to sheriff abolished.

7. Fee payable to sheriff for attendances, &c.

8. Recited act to remain in force.

Whereas it is expedient that certain provisions of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act, 1856, [19 & 20 Vict. c. 79], should be amended: be it enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. This act may be cited as "The Bankruptcy (Scotland) Amendment Act, 1860."

2. If, in any case where sequestration has been or shall be awarded in Scotland, it shall appear to the Court of Session or to the Lord Ordinary, upon a summary petition by the accountant in bankruptcy, or any creditor or other person having interest, presented to either division of the said court or to the Lord Ordinary at any time within three months after the date of the sequestration, that a majority of the creditors in number and value reside in England or in Ireland, and that from the situation of the property of the bankrupt or other causes his estate and effects ought to be distributed among the creditors under the bankrupt or insolvent laws of England or Ireland, the said court, in either division thereof, or the Lord Ordinary, after such inquiry as to them shall seem fit, may recall the sequestration.

3. The said court, in either division thereof, or the Lord Ordinary, or the sheriff, may refuse the application for the discharge of any bankrupt, although two years have elapsed from the date of the sequestration, and although no appearance or opposition shall be made by or on the part of any of the creditors, if it shall appear from the report of the accountant in bankruptcy, or other sufficient evidence, that the bankrupt has fraudulently concealed any part of his estate or effects, or has wilfully failed to comply with any of the provisions of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act, 1856.

4. All interlocutors pronounced by the Lord Ordinary or the sheriff under the provisions of this act shall be subject to the review of the said Court of Session.

5. To remove doubts which have arisen, it is declared that the word "Gazette" in the 67th section of the said act shall be held to mean the "Edinburgh Gazette;" and the provisions contained in the said act relative to deeds of arrangement shall extend to and include settlements or arrangements by way of composition.

6. The fee provided to be paid to the sheriff under Schedule (I.) of the said act is hereby abolished; but no claim shall exist in respect of any such fee which shall have been paid prior to the passing of this act.

7. For attending any meeting of creditors or, examination a fee of 1l. 1s. shall be payable to the sheriff for each such meeting or diet of examination not being on the same day.

8. The Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act, 1856, except in so far as altered by this act, shall be and remain in full force and effect, and shall be construed with this act; and words interpreted in the said act shall, when used in this act, have the same meanings as are assigned to them respectively by the said act.

CAP. XXXIV.

An Act to amend the Law relating to Petitions of Right, to simplify the Proceedings, and to make Provisions for the Costs thereof. [3rd July, 1860.]

- Sect. 1. Petitions of right may be intitled in any of the superior courts at Westminster. The form, nature, and contents of the petition as in Schedule No. 1.
2. Petition to be left with the Secretary of State for the Home Department for her Majesty's fiat.
3. Upon fiat being obtained, petition, &c. to be left at the office of the Solicitor of the Treasury, indorsed as in Schedule No. 2.
4. Time for answering by the Crown. Power to change the court or venue.
5. Time for answering by other persons, parties to the petition.
6. The answer or plea to such petition.
7. The practice and course of procedure in action and suit between subject and subject shall extend to petitions of right, so far as applicable.
8. Decrees or judgments by default.
9. Form of judgment or decree.
10. Effect of judgment of amoveas manus.
11. Costs recoverable by the Crown and any other person party to the petition.
12. The suppliant to be entitled to costs against the Crown and other parties to the proceedings.
13. Decree or judgment in favour of the suppliant to be certified to the Treasury, or the Treasurer of the Household, in form of Schedule No. 5.
14. Satisfaction of the judgment and costs.
15. Power to judges to make rules and regulations, &c.
16. Interpretation of terms.
17. Short title.
18. Nothing to prevent the suppliant proceeding as before.

Whereas it is expedient to amend the law relating to petitions of right, to simplify the procedure therein, to make provision for the recovery of costs in such cases, and to assimilate the proceedings, as nearly as may be, to the course of practice and procedure now in force in actions and suits between subject and subject: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. A petition of right may, if the suppliant think fit, be intitled in any one of the superior courts of common law or equity at Westminster, in which the subject-matter of such petition, or any material part thereof, would have been cognisable if the same had been a matter in dispute between subject and subject, and if intitled in a court of common law shall state in the margin the venue for the trial of such petition; and such petition shall be addressed to her Majesty in the form or to the effect in the schedule to this act annexed, (No. 1), and shall state the Christian and surname and usual place of abode of the suppliant and of his attorney, if any, by whom the same shall be presented, and shall set forth with convenient certainty the facts entitling the suppliant to relief, and shall be signed by such suppliant, his counsel or attorney.

2. The said petition shall be left with the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in order that the same may be submitted to her Majesty for her Majesty's gracious consideration, and in order that her Majesty, if she shall think fit, may grant her fiat that right be done; and no fee or sum of money shall be payable by the suppliant on so leaving such petition, or upon his receiving back the same.

3. Upon her Majesty's fiat being obtained to such petition, a copy of such petition and fiat shall be left at the office of the Solicitor to the Treasury, with an indorsement thereon in the form or to the effect in the Schedule (No. 2) to this act annexed, praying for a plea or answer on behalf of her Majesty within twenty-eight days, and it shall thereupon be the duty of the said solicitor to transmit such petition to the particular department to which the subject-matter of such petition may relate, and the same shall be prosecuted in the court in which the same shall be intitled, or in such other court as the Lord Chancellor may direct.

4. The time for answering, pleading, or demurring to such petition, on behalf of her Majesty, shall be the said period of twenty-eight days after the same, with such prayer of a plea or answer as aforesaid, shall have been left at the office of the Solicitor to the Treasury, or such further time as shall be allowed by the court or a judge: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, on the application of the Attorney-General or of the suppliant, to change the court in which such petition shall be prosecuted, or the venue for the trial of the same.

5. In case any such petition of right shall be presented for the recovery of any real or personal property, or any right in or to the same, which shall have been granted away or disposed of by or on behalf of her Majesty or her predecessors, a copy of such petition, allowance, and fiat shall be served upon or left at the last or usual or last known place of abode of the person in the possession, occupation, or enjoyment of such property or right, indorsed with a notice in the form set forth in the Schedule (No. 3), requiring such person to appear thereto within eight days, and to plead or answer thereto in the court in which the same shall be prosecuted within fourteen days after the same shall have been so served or left as aforesaid; and it shall not be necessary to issue any scire facias or other process to such person for the purpose of requiring him to appear and plead or answer to such petition, but he shall within the time so limited, if it be intended by him to contest such petition, enter an appearance to the same in the form set forth in Schedule (No. 4) to this act annexed, or to the like effect, and shall plead, answer, or demur to the said petition within the time specified in such notice, or such further time as shall be allowed by the court or a judge.

6. Such petition may be answered by way of answer, plea, or demurrer in a court of equity, or in a court of common law by way of plea or demurrer, or by both pleas and demurrer, by or in the name of her Majesty's Attorney-General on behalf of her Majesty, and by or on behalf of any other person who may, in pursuance hereof, be called upon to plead or answer thereto, in the same manner as if such petition in a court of equity were a bill filed therein, or, if the petition be prosecuted in a court of common law, as if the same were a declaration in a personal action, and without the necessity for any inquisition finding the truth of such petition, or the right of the suppliant, and such and the same matter as would be sufficient ground of answer or defence, in point of law or fact, to such petition on the behalf of her Majesty may be alleged on behalf of any such other person as aforesaid called on to plead or answer thereto.

7. So far as the same may be applicable, and except in so far as may be inconsistent with this act, the laws and statutes in force as to pleading, evidence, hearing, and trial, security for costs, amendment, arbitration, special cases, the means of procuring and taking evidence, set-off, appeal, and proceedings in error in suits in equity, and personal actions between subject and subject, and the practice and course of procedure of the said courts of law and equity respectively for the time being in reference to such suits and personal actions, shall, unless the court in which the petition is prosecuted shall otherwise order, be applicable, and apply and extend, to such petition of right: provided always, that nothing in this statute shall be construed to give to the subject any remedy against the Crown in any case in which he would not have been entitled to such remedy before the passing of this act.

8. In case of a failure on the behalf of her Majesty, or of any such other person as aforesaid called upon to answer or plead to such petition, to plead, answer, or demur in due time, either to such petition, or at any subsequent stage of the proceedings thereon, the suppliant shall be at liberty to apply to the court or a judge for an order that the petition may be taken as confessed; and it shall be lawful for such court or judge, on being satisfied that there has been such failure to plead, answer, or demur in due time, to order that such petition may be taken as confessed as against her Majesty or such other party so making default; and in case of default on the behalf of her Majesty, and any other such person (if any) called upon as aforesaid to answer or plead thereto, a decree may be made by the court, or leave may be given by the court, on the application of the suppliant, to sign judgment in favour of the suppliant: provided always, that such decree or judgment may afterwards be set aside by such court or a judge, in their or his discretion, on such terms as to them or him shall seem fit.

9. Upon every such petition of right, the decree or judgment of the court, whether given upon demurrer upon the pleadings, or upon a default to answer or plead in time, or after hearing or verdict, or in error, shall be that the suppliant is or is not entitled either to the whole or to some portion of the relief sought by his petition, or such other relief as the court may think right, and such court may give a decree or judgment that the suppliant is entitled to such relief, and upon such terms and conditions (if any) as such court shall think just.

10. In all cases in which the judgment, commonly called a judgment of amoveas manus, has heretofore been pronounced or given upon a petition of right, a judgment that the suppliant is entitled to relief as hereinbefore provided shall be of such and the same effect as such judgment of amoveas manus.

11. Upon any such petition of right, the Attorney-General or other person appearing on behalf of her Majesty, and every such other person as aforesaid who shall appear, and plead or answer to such petition, shall be entitled respectively to recover costs against the suppliant, in the same manner, and subject to the same restrictions and discretion, and under the same rules, regulations, and provisions, so far as they are applicable, as are or may be usually adopted or in force touching the payment or receipt of costs in proceedings between subject and subject, and, for the recovery of such costs, such and the same remedies and writs of execution as are authorised for enforcing payment of costs upon judgments in personal actions or decrees, rules or orders, shall and may be prosecuted, sued out, and executed respectively by or on behalf of her Majesty, and of such other person as aforesaid, as shall appear and plead to such petition, and any costs recovered on behalf of her Majesty shall be paid into the Exchequer, and shall become part of the Consolidated Fund, except where such petition shall be defended on behalf of her Majesty in her private capacity, in which case such costs shall be paid to the Treasurer of her Majesty's Household, or such other person as her Majesty shall appoint to receive the same.

12. Upon any such petition of right the suppliant shall be entitled to costs against her Majesty, and also against any other person appearing, or pleading, or answering to any such petition of right, in like manner, and subject to the same rules, regulations, and provisions, restrictions and discretion, as far as they are applicable, as are or may be usually adopted or in force touching the right to recover costs in proceedings between subject and subject; and for the recovery of any such costs from any such person, other than her Majesty, appearing, or pleading, or answering, in pursuance thereof, to any such petition of right, such and the same remedies and writs of execution as are authorised for enforcing payment of costs upon rules, orders, decrees, or judgments in personal actions between subject and subject shall and may be prosecuted, sued out, and executed on behalf of such suppliant.

13. Whenever, upon any such petition of right, a judgment, order, or decree shall be given or made that the suppliant is entitled to relief, and there shall be no rehearing, appeal, or writ of error, or, in case of an appeal or proceedings in error, a judgment, order, or decree shall have been affirmed, given, or made that the suppliant is entitled to relief, or upon any rule or order being made entitling the suppliant to costs, any one of the judges of the court in which such petition shall have been prosecuted shall and may, upon application on behalf of the suppliant, after the lapse of fourteen days from the making, giving, or affirming of such judgment or decree, rule or order, certify to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, or to the Treasurer of her Majesty's Household, as the case may require, the tenor and purport of the same, in the form in the Schedule (No. 5) to this act annexed, or to the like effect; and such certificate may be sent to or left at the office of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, or of the Treasurer of her Majesty's Household, as the case may be.

14. It shall be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and they are hereby required, to pay the amount of any monies and costs, as to which a judgment or decree, rule or order shall be given or made, that the suppliant in any such petition of right is entitled, and of which judgment or decree, rule or order the tenor and purport shall have been so certified to them as aforesaid, out of any monies in their hands for the time being legally applicable thereto, or which may be hereafter voted by Parliament for that purpose, provided such petition shall relate to any public matter; and in case the same shall relate to any private property of or enjoyed by her Majesty, or any contract or engagement made by or on behalf of her Majesty, or any matter affecting her Majesty in her private capacity, a certificate in the form aforesaid may be sent to or left at the office of the Treasurer of her Majesty's Household, or such other person as her Majesty shall from time to time appoint to receive the same, and the amount to which the suppliant is entitled shall be paid to him out of such funds or monies as her Majesty shall be graciously pleased to direct to be applied for that purpose.

15. It shall be lawful for the judges of the said courts of law and equity respectively, or any three or more of the judges of the Court of Chancery, of whom the Lord Chancellor shall be one, and for any eight or more of the judges of the courts of common law, of whom the chiefs of each of the said courts shall be three, from time to time to make all such general rules and orders in their said respective courts of law and equity, for regulating the pleading and practice on such petitions of right, and for the effectual execution of this act and of the intention and object hereof, and for fixing the costs to be allowed for and in respect of the several matters herein contained, and the performance thereof, and for the government and conduct of the officers of their respective courts in and relating to the distribution and performance of the duties and business to be done or performed in execution of this act, as such judges may think fit, reasonable, necessary, or proper, and to frame such writs and forms of proceedings as to them may seem expedient for the purposes aforesaid; and all such rules, orders, or regulations shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament, if Parliament be then sitting, immediately upon the making of the same, or if Parliament be not sitting, then within five days after the next meeting thereof; and no such rule, order, or regulation shall have effect until three months after the same shall have been so laid before both Houses of Parliament; and any rule, order, or regulation so made shall from and after such time aforesaid be binding and obligatory on the said courts, and on any courts of error or appeal into which any judgments or decrees of the said courts shall be carried by any writ of error or appeal, and be of the like force and effect as if the provisions contained therein had been expressly enacted by Parliament: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by any proclamation inserted in the London Gazette, or for either of the Houses of Parliament, by any resolution passed at any time within three months next after such rules, orders, and regulations shall have been laid before Parliament, to suspend the whole or any part of such rules, orders, or regulations, and in such case the whole, or such part thereof as shall be so suspended, shall not be binding and obligatory on the said courts.

16. In the construction of this act the words "her Majesty" shall extend to and include her Majesty's successors; and the words "Lord High Chancellor" and "Lord Chancellor" respectively shall mean and include the Keeper of the Great Seal and Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord Chancellor or Keeper of the Great Seal; the word "court" shall be understood to mean any one of the superior courts of common law or equity at Westminster in which any such petition is presented; the word "relief" shall comprehend every species of relief claimed or prayed for in any such petition of right, whether a restitution of any incorporeal right, or a return of lands or chattels, or a payment of money or damages, or otherwise; and the word "judge" shall be understood to mean a judge or baron of any of the said courts respectively; and wherever in this act, in describing or referring to any person, party, or thing, any word importing the singular number or masculine or feminine gender is used, the same shall be understood to include and be applicable to several persons and parties as well as one person or party, and to females as well as males, and males as well as females, and bodies corporate as well as individuals, and several matters and things as well as one matter or thing, unless it otherwise be provided, or there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction.

17. In citing this act in any instrument, document, or proceeding, it shall be sufficient to use the expression "The Petitions of Right Act, 1860."

18. Nothing in this act contained shall prevent any suppliant from proceeding as before the passing of this act.

CAP. XXXV.

An Act further to amend an Act of the Eighteenth Year of Her present Majesty, to amend the Law for the better Prevention of the Sale of Spirits by unlicensed Persons, and for the Suppression of illicit Distillation in Ireland.

[23rd July, 1860.]

Sec. 1. As to appeals from informal orders of justices refusing licenses.

2. If order of refusal reversed, excise officer to renew the licence.

CAP. XXXVI.

An Act to authorise the Appointment and Approval of Places for the warehousing of Goods for the Security of Duties of Customs.

[23rd July, 1860.]

Sec. 1. Power to appoint certain warehousing places.

2. Powers of Customs Acts conferred upon commissioners applicable to this act.

3. Warehouses to be for public accommodation, and to be of approved dimensions.
4. Warehouses to be within 1000 yards of custom-house.
5. Interpretation of "extra rates."
6. Rates herein named to be paid in lieu of existing charges.
7. Rates deemed customs duties.
8. Commencement and short title of act.

Be it enacted &c. as follows:—

Sec. 1. The Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury may, by their warrant, appoint that the parish of Manchester, the boroughs of Birmingham, Leeds, and Sheffield, or any of them, and such other places as they may see fit, shall be warehousing places, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained.

2. The powers and authorities conferred by the Customs Consolidation Act, 1853, upon the Commissioners of the Treasury for the appointment of warehousing ports, and upon the Commissioners of Customs for the approval of warehouses in such ports, shall extend to and be applicable to the said parish and boroughs, or any of them, and to any other place or places in the United Kingdom which the said Commissioners of the Treasury may consider to have a sufficient consumption of articles paying customs duties to justify the expense of a customs establishment, and may see fit to appoint as warehousing places, and to any warehouse or warehouses in any such place or places which the said Commissioners of Customs may see fit to approve for the warehousing of goods for the security of duties of customs; and the said Commissioners of the Treasury by warrant under their hands, and the said Commissioners of Customs by order under their hands, are hereby authorised and empowered to appoint and approve of any such place or places, warehouse or warehouses accordingly; and, except as hereinafter mentioned and provided, the said act, and all other acts now or hereafter to be made relating to the customs, and all the powers and authorities, provisions, privileges, forfeitures, securities, penalties, rules, regulations, restrictions, matters, and things contained therein, or made or done in pursuance thereof, with reference to warehousing ports and warehouses appointed or approved under the said act or any other act relating to the customs, shall, so far as the same are or can be made applicable, extend and apply to every warehousing place and warehouse which shall or may be appointed or approved under or in pursuance of this act, and to the proprietor or occupier of, and to the conduct and management of the business of, every such warehouse, and the security of duties of customs due or payable upon or in respect of all goods deposited therein.

3. No warehouse shall be appointed or approved under this act except for the general accommodation of any merchants, traders, or others having occasion to deposit goods therein for the security of duties of customs; nor shall any warehouse be approved under this act unless it be of such dimensions as the Commissioners of Customs consider sufficient, having regard to the wants of the town wherein it is situated.

4. When the site of the custom-house in any place appointed under this act shall have been fixed or determined on by the Commissioners of Customs, it shall be lawful for the said Commissioners to refuse their approval of any warehouse above 1000 yards from such site.

5. The words "extra rates," in the proviso to the 15th section of the Customs Tariff Amendment Act, 1860, shall be construed to mean the additional rates of 2s. 6d. for every 100l. of customs duty on tobacco, and of 5s. for every 100l. of customs duty on sugar and other goods, which by the said section are made payable upon the said articles when they shall have been removed under bond; and the single rates of 2s. 6d. and 5s. respectively imposed by the said section shall be payable in respect of goods delivered from warehouses which possessed the privilege of bonding at the passing of the said act, whether such goods shall have been removed or not.

6. In lieu of the sums now payable by the council of the city of Manchester to the said commissioners in respect of the expenses incident to the management and collection of the customs duties, under the several acts now in force relating thereto, there shall be charged upon goods deposited in any warehouse at Manchester approved under the said last-mentioned acts, on the delivery thereof for home consumption, the same rates as are made payable by the Customs Tariff Act, 1860, and this act, on the delivery for home consumption of the like kinds of goods from any warehouse approved under this act.

7. The rates made payable under the said Customs Tariff Amendment Act, 1860, and this act, shall be deemed to be duties of customs payable in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and may be sued for, enforced, recovered, and applied accordingly.

8. This act shall come into operation on the day of the passing thereof; and in citing it in other acts of Parliament and legal instruments it shall be sufficient to use the expression "Customs Inland Bonding Act, 1860."

CAP. XXXVII.

An Act to levy an Assessment in the County of Inverness to discharge a Debt on the Castle Stewart and Nairn Road, in the said County. [23rd July, 1860.]

CAP. XXXVIII.

An Act to further amend the Law of Property. [23rd July, 1860.]

- SECT. 1. Writs of execution of judgments to be registered.
2. Mode of registering.
3. Provision for protection of heirs and executors against unregistered judgments.
4. Judgments, as against heirs and executors, to be re-registered.
5. Extent of the word "judgment."
6. Restriction of effect of waiver.
7. Provision for cases of future and contingent uses.
8. Sect. 24 of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, extended to mortgages.
9. Form of applying for advice of judge, &c. under sect. 30 of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35.
10. Power to Lord Chancellors, &c. of England and Ireland to make general orders as to investment of cash under the control of the court.
11. Trustees, &c. to invest trust funds in the stocks, &c. in which cash under the control of the court may be invested.
12. Sect. 32 of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, to act retrospectively.
13. Extension of sect. 40 of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, to cases of claims to estates of intestates.
14. Order to take account of debts, &c. of deceased person, under sect. 19 of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35, may be made immediately after probate granted.
15. Act not to extend to Scotland, &c.

Be it enacted &c. as follows:—

SECT. 1. Whereas it is desirable to place freehold, copyhold, and customary estates on the same footing with leasehold estates, in respect of judgments, statutes, and recognisances, as against purchasers and mortgagees, and also to enable purchasers and mortgagees of estates, whether freehold, copyhold, or customary or leasehold, to ascertain when execution has issued on any judgment, statute, or recognisance, and to protect them against delay in the execution of the writ: be it therefore enacted, that no judgment, statute, or recognisance to be entered up after the passing of this act shall affect any land, of whatever tenure, as to a bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration, or a mortgagee, (whether such purchaser or mortgagee have notice or not of any such judgment, statute, or recognisance), unless a writ or other due process of execution of such judgment, statute, or recognisance shall have been issued and registered as hereinafter is mentioned before the execution of the conveyance or mortgage to him, and the payment of the purchase or mortgage money by him: provided always, that no judgment, statute, or recognisance to be entered up after the passing of this act, nor any writ of execution or other process thereon, shall affect any land, of whatever tenure, as to a bona fide purchaser or mortgagee, although execution or other process shall have issued thereon, and have been duly registered, unless such execution or other process shall be executed and put in force within three calendar months from the time when it was registered.

2. The registry hereinbefore required of any writ of execution, or other due process on any judgment, statute, or recognisance, in order to bind a purchaser or mortgagee, shall be made by a memorandum or minute referring to the judgment, statute, or recognisance already registered, so as to connect the registry of the writ of execution or other process therewith; such memorandum or minute to be left with the senior master of the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, who shall forthwith enter the particulars in a book in alphabetical order, by the name of the person in whose behalf the judgment, statute, or recognisance upon which the writ of execution or other process issued was registered, and also the year and the day of the month when every such memorandum or minute is left with him, and such officer shall be entitled for any such registry to the sum of 5s.; and all persons shall be at liberty to search the same book, in addition to all the other books in the same office, on payment of the sum of 1s. only: and all the provisions in this act in regard to writs of execution or other process, and the registry thereof, or otherwise relating thereto, shall extend, mutatis mutandis, to writs of execution or other due process issuing on judgments of the several Courts of Common Pleas of the county palatine of Lancaster, and of Pleas of the county palatine of Durham: but none of these provisions are to extend to Ireland.

3. And whereas, by an act passed in the 4 & 5 Will. & M., intitled "An Act for the better Discovery of Judgments in the Courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, in Westminster," it was enacted, that no judgment not docketed and entered in books in the manner thereby provided should affect any lands or tenements, as to purchasers or mortgagees, or have any preference against heirs, executors, or administrators, in their administration of their ancestors', testators', or intestates' estates: and whereas, by several later acts, judgments are required to be registered with more particulars than were required by the said recited act; and it is thereby enacted, that judgments not so registered shall not affect any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, as to purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, unless and until the same shall be registered in manner thereby required; and in obedience to a direction in one of the same acts contained, the dockets existing under the said first-recited act have been finally closed: and whereas the said several later acts do not expressly enact that judgments not docketed as thereby required shall not have any preference against heirs, executors, or administrators, in their administration of their ancestors', testators', or intestates' estates, in consequence whereof such heirs, executors, or administrators have been held to have lost the protection which they enjoyed under the said first-recited act, and it is expedient that the same should be restored: be it therefore declared and enacted, that no judgment which has not already been, or which shall not hereafter be, entered or docketed under the several acts now in force, and which passed subsequently to the said act of the 4 & 5 Will. & M., so as to bind lands, tenements, or hereditaments, as against purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, shall have any preference against heirs, executors, or administrators, in their administration of their ancestors', testators', or intestates' estates.

4. No judgments which since the passing of an act of the 1 & 2 Vict., intitled "An Act for abolishing Arrest on Means Process in Civil Actions except in certain Cases, for extending the Remedies of Creditors against the Property of Debtors, and for amending the Laws for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in England," (being one of the acts hereinbefore referred to), have been registered under the provisions therein contained, or contained in the later act of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, as explained and amended by the act of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 15, (being two other of the acts hereinbefore referred to), or which shall hereafter be so registered, shall have any preference against heirs, executors, or administrators, in their administration of their executors', testators', or intestates' effects, unless at the death of the testator or intestate five years shall not have elapsed from the date of the entry thereof on the docket, or from the only or last re-registry thereof, as the case may be, which re-registry from time to time is hereby authorised to be made in manner directed by the said act of the 2 & 3 Vict., as explained and amended by the act of the 18 & 19 Vict.; but it shall be deemed sufficient to secure such preference as aforesaid if such a memorandum as was required in the first instance is again left with the senior Master of the Common Pleas within five years before the death of the testator or intestate, although more than five years shall have expired by effluxion of time since the last previous registration, before such last-mentioned memorandum or minute was left; and so toties quoties upon every re-registration.

5. In the construction of the previous provisions the term "judgment" shall be taken to include registered decrees, orders of courts of equity and bankruptcy, and other orders having the operation of a judgment.

6. Where any actual waiver of the benefit of any covenant or condition in any lease on the part of any lessor, or his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, shall be proved to have taken place after the passing of this act in any one particular instance, such actual waiver shall not be assumed or deemed to extend to any instance or any breach of covenant or condition other than that to which such waiver specially relate, nor to be a general waiver of the benefit of any such covenant or condition, unless an intention to that effect shall appear.

7. Where by any instrument any hereditaments have been or shall be limited to uses, all uses thereunder, whether expressed or implied by law, and whether immediate or future, or contingent or executory, or to be declared under any power therein contained, shall take effect when and as they arise by force of and by relation to the estate and seisin originally vested in the person seised to the uses, and the continued existence in him or elsewhere of any seisin to uses or scintilla juris shall not be deemed necessary for the support of, or to give effect to, future or contingent or executory uses, nor shall any such seisin to uses or scintilla juris be deemed to be suspended, or to remain or to subsist in him or elsewhere.

8. The 24th section of the act 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, shall be read and construed as if the words "or mortgagee" had followed the word "purchaser" in every place where the latter word is introduced in the said section.

9. Where any trustee, executor, or administrator shall apply for the opinion, advice, or direction of a judge of the Court of Chancery under the 30th section of the act of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, the petition or statement shall be signed by counsel, and the judge by whom it is to be answered may require the petitioner or applicant to attend him by counsel either in chambers or in court, where he deems it necessary to have the assistance of counsel.

10. It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper, or Lords Commissioners for the Custody of the Great Seal of England, with the advice and assistance of the Master of the Rolls, the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, and the Vice-Chancellors of the said court, or any three of them, and for the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, with the advice and assistance of the Lords Justices of Appeal and the Master of the Rolls in Ireland, to make such General Orders from time to time, as to the investment of cash under the control of the court, either in the 3l. per Cent. Consolidated or Reduced or New Bank Annuities, or in such other stocks, funds, or securities as he or they shall, with such advice or assistance, see fit; and it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper, or Lords Commissioners in England, and for the Lord Chancellor in Ireland, to make such orders as he or they shall deem proper for the conversion of any 3l. per Cent. Bank Annuities now standing, or which may hereafter stand, in the name of the Accountant-General of the said Court of Chancery, in trust in any cause or matter, into any such other stocks, funds, or securities upon which, by any such General Order as aforesaid, cash under the control of the court may be invested; all orders for such conversion of Bank Annuities into other funds or securities to be made upon petition to be presented by any of the parties interested, in a summary way, and such parties shall be served with notice thereof, as the court shall direct.

11. When any such General Order as aforesaid shall have been made, it shall be lawful for trustees, executors, or administrators, having power to invest their trust funds upon Government securities, or upon parliamentary stocks, funds, or securities, or any of them, to invest such trust funds, or any part thereof, in any of the stocks, funds, or securities in or upon which, by such General Order, cash under the control of the court may from time to time be invested.

12. Clause 32 of the said act of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, shall operate retrospectively.

13. Whereas, by the act of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, a. 40, it was enacted, that after the 31st December, 1833, no action or suit or other proceeding shall be brought to recover any sum of money secured by any mortgage, judgment, or lien, or otherwise, charged upon or payable out of any land or rent, at law or in equity, or any legacy, but within twenty years next after a present right to receive the same should have accrued to some person capable of giving a discharge for or release of the same, unless such acknowledgment in writing, or payment of principal or interest, as therein mentioned, should have been given or made, and then within twenty years next after such payment or acknowledgment, or the last of such payments or acknowledgments: and whereas it is expedient that the said enactment should be extended to the case of claims to the estates of persons dying intestate: be it therefore enacted, that after the 31st December, 1860, no suit or other proceeding shall be brought to recover the personal estate, or any share of the personal estate, of any person dying intestate, possessed by the legal personal representative of such intestate, but within twenty years next after a present right to receive the same shall have accrued to some person capable of giving a discharge for or release of the same, unless in the meantime some part of such estate or share, or some interest in respect thereof, shall have been accounted for or paid, or some acknowledgment of the right thereto shall have been given in writing, signed by the person accountable for the same, or his agent, to the person entitled thereto, or his agent; and in such case no such action or suit shall be brought, but within twenty years after such accounting, payment, or acknowledgment, or the last of such accountings, payments, or acknowledgments, if more than one, was made or given.

14. The order to take an account of the debts and liabilities affecting the personal estate of a deceased person, pursuant to the 19th section of the act of the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35, may be made immediately, or at any time after probate or letters of administration shall have been granted; and such order may be made either by the Court of Chancery, upon motion or petition of course, or by a judge of the said court, sitting at chambers, upon a summons in the form used for originating proceedings at chambers; and after any such order shall have been made, the said court or judge may, on the application of the executors or administrators, by motion or summons, restrain or suspend, until the account directed by such order shall have been taken, any proceedings at law against such executors or administrators by any person having, or claiming to have, any demand upon the estate of the deceased, by reason of any debt or liability due from the estate of the deceased, upon such notice, and terms and conditions, (if any), as to the said court or judge shall seem just; and the judge, in taking an account of debts and liabilities pursuant to any such order, shall, on the application of the executors or administrators, be at liberty to direct that the particulars only of any claim or claims which may be brought, in pursuance of any such order, shall be certified by his chief clerk, without any adjudication thereon; and any notice for creditors to come in which may be published, in pursuance of any such order, shall have the same force and effect as if such notices had been given by the executors or administrators, in pursuance of the 29th section of the act of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35.

15. This act is not to extend to Scotland, nor are any of the clauses, except clause 6, and the subsequent clauses, to extend to Ireland.

Sect. 1. This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Metropolitan Building Act, (Amendment), 1860."

2. The rules of the Metropolitan Building Act, 1855, limiting the cubical dimensions or contents of buildings used either wholly or in part for the purposes of trade or manufacture, shall not after the passing of this act apply to any building to be used wholly for the manufacture of the machinery and boilers of steam-vessels beyond the distance of three miles from St. Paul's Cathedral: provided always, that every such building shall consist of one floor only, and shall be constructed of brick, stone, iron, or other incombustible material; and it shall not be lawful for the owners, lessees, or occupiers thereof, or for any persons interested therein, to use such building for any other purpose than the manufacture of the machinery and the boilers of steam-vessels until all the rules and provisions of the said act, as to party-walls and other matters which are applicable to buildings of a similar character, shall have been duly complied with: provided also, that every such building, if of greater dimensions than 216,000 cubic feet, shall be subject to the approval of the Metropolitan Board of Works, in the same manner as iron buildings or buildings to which the rules of the said act are inapplicable, as set forth in the 56th section of such act.

CAP. LIII.

An Act for the Limitation of Actions and Suits by the Duke of Cornwall in relation to Real Property, and for authorising certain Leases of Possessions of the Duchy.

[23rd July, 1860.]

Sect. 1. Provisions of the 9 Geo. 3, c. 16, as to limitations of actions and suits, to extend to the Duke of Cornwall.

2. Nothing to affect the provisions of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 105, the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, and the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 100.

3. The 21 & 22 Vict. c. 109. Power to council to grant leases of property declared to be vested in the Duke of Cornwall by the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 109.

4. Construction of the expression "Duke of Cornwall."

Whereas, by an act passed in the 9 Geo. 3, c. 16, provision is made for limiting the right of the King's Majesty, his heirs and successors, to sue, impeach, question, or implead any person, body politic or corporate, for or concerning any manors, lands, tenements, rents, tithes, or hereditaments whatsoever, (other than liberties or franchises), or for or concerning the revenues, issues, or profits thereof, and for quieting possessions and titles against the Crown: and whereas an act was passed in the session holden in the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 105, "to confirm and enfranchise the estates of the conventional tenants of the ancient assessionable manors of the duchy of Cornwall, and to quiet titles within the county of Cornwall as against the duchy, and for other purposes," but the provisions of the said act for quieting titles within the county of Cornwall as against the duchy do not extend to any property, right, claim, or question of, to, or concerning navigable rivers, estuaries, ports, or branches of the sea, or the fundus or soil thereof respectively, or the shores between high and low water mark thereof respectively: and whereas it is expedient that as to hereditaments not within the county of Cornwall, and also as to such hereditaments within the said county as are excepted from the provisions of the said act of the 7 & 8 Vict., the limitation applicable to actions and suits by the Crown should be made applicable to actions and suits by the Duke of Cornwall: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. All the provisions of the said act of the 9 Geo. 3, [c. 16], now applicable to her Majesty, her heirs and successors, shall extend and be applicable to the Duke of Cornwall, in like manner as if the same were re-enacted and the Duke of Cornwall were throughout mentioned or referred to where the "King's Majesty" or "his Majesty" is in the said act mentioned or referred to; subject nevertheless, as to the property and possessions included in this act, to the provisions contained in sects. 72 and 75 of the act of the 7 & 8 Vict. above referred to with respect to the property and possessions included therein.

2. Provided always, that nothing hereinbefore contained shall extend to the property or possessions in relation to which provision for the limitation of actions and suits and for quieting titles is made by the said act of the 7 & 8 Vict., [c. 105], or affect the provisions of the act of the session holden in the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, "for shortening the time of prescription in certain cases," or of the act of the same session of Parliament, c. 100, "for shortening the time required in claims of modus decimandi or exemption from or discharge of tithes."

3. And whereas, by the Cornwall Submarine Mines Act, 1856, it is enacted and declared, that all mines and minerals lying under the sea shore, between high and low water marks, within the said county of Cornwall, and under estuaries and tidal rivers and other places, (below high-water mark), even below low-water mark, being in and part of the said county, are, as between the Queen's Majesty in right of her crown on the one hand, and his Royal Highness Albert Edward Prince of Wales and Duke of Cornwall in right of his duchy of Cornwall on the other hand, vested in his said Royal Highness Albert Edward Prince of Wales and Duke of Cornwall in right of the duchy of Cornwall as part of the soil and territorial possessions of the said duchy, but this declaration is not to extend to the mines and minerals in or under land below high-water mark which is part and parcel of any manor belonging to her Majesty in right of her crown; and it is by the said act provided, that in that act, unless there is something in the context repugnant to such construction, the expression "mines and minerals" shall comprehend all mines and minerals, and all quarries, veins or beds of stone, and all substrata of any other nature whatsoever, and the ground and soil in, upon, and under which such mines and minerals, quarries, veins or beds of stone, and other substrata lie: be it further enacted, that in any case where it appears to the council of his Royal Highness Albert Edward Prince of Wales and Duke of Cornwall that any part of the land or hereditaments by the said Cornwall Submarine Mines Act declared to be vested in his said Royal Highness as part of the soil and territorial possessions of the duchy of Cornwall has been inclosed or otherwise improved by or at the expense of the person in the possession thereof, or of any person under whom he claims, it shall be lawful for the said council during the minority of his said Royal Highness to demise the land or hereditaments so improved, or any part thereof, for such term not exceeding ninety-nine years in possession, and subject to such rent, reservations, conditions, and agreements, as under the circumstances of the case may appear to the said council just and reasonable; and every such lease shall be made under the Great or Privy Seal of his said Royal Highness, and shall be enrolled in the office of the duchy of Cornwall.

4. In the construction of this act the expression "the Duke of Cornwall" shall include as well his Royal Highness Albert Edward, now Duke of Cornwall, as his predecessors and successors Dukes of Cornwall, and also the Queen's most Excellent Majesty and her predecessors and successors, Kings and Queens of England for the time being, entitled to the lands and possessions of the duchy of Cornwall, or the revenues thereof, during a vacancy of the duchy of Cornwall.

CAP. LIV.

An Act to amend an Act for abolishing certain Offices on the Crown Side of the Court of Queen's Bench, and for regulating the Crown Office. [6th August, 1860.]

Sect. 1. As to the office of Assistant Master on the Crown side of the Queen's Bench.

2. Prescribing mode of filling up future vacancies in offices. Present vacancy in office of Master.

Sect. 1. That from and after the passing of this act the office of Assistant Master, now vacant, on the Crown side of the said court, shall be abolished, and the officers on the Crown side of the said court shall be the Queen's coroner and attorney and one Master.

2. Instead of the certificate required by the 3rd section of the hereinbefore recited act [6 & 7 Vict. c. 20] to be given by the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench before filling up any vacancy in any such office, it shall be sufficient if the said Chief Justice shall certify, in the manner prescribed by the said act, that it is necessary for the efficient and satisfactory conduct of the business of the Crown side of the said court that such vacancy shall be filled up; such certificate to be made to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and to be laid before Parliament, as by the said recited act is provided: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the said Lord Chief Justice to fill up the office of Master on the Crown side of the said court (such office being now also vacant) immediately after the passing of this act, and without certifying as last aforesaid.

CAP. LV.

CAP. LVIII.

An Act to amend the Act of the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Years of Her Majesty relating to Friendly Societies. [6th August, 1860.]

Sect. 1. In case of dissolution of society under sect. 18 of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, not necessary to state in

- agreement intended division of funds; but may refer the same to the award of the registrar.*
- 2. Registrar's award to be conclusive, without appeal.
- 3. Evidence of dissolution.
- 4. Registrar's annual report to contain particulars of awards.
- 5. Provisions as to societies dissolved before passing of this act.
- 6. Sect. 8 of the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 101, repealed.
- 7. Penalty for not making annual return to registrar in compliance with sect. 6 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 27.
- 8. If accounts not made to commissioners, pursuant to sect. 34 of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, interest thereon to cease until accounts made.
- 9. Application on behalf of society may be made by registrar.
- 10. This and Friendly Societies Acts to be construed as one.

Sect. 1. In case of the dissolution of a society, according to the provisions of the 13th section of the act passed in the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, it shall not be necessary to state in the agreement the intended appropriation or division of the funds or other property, but it shall be lawful to the members, if they shall think fit, to refer such appropriation or division to the award of the registrar; and in case application shall be made in writing by the members of a society, not being less in number than five-eighths of the whole body thereof, setting forth that the funds of such society are insufficient to meet the claims thereon, with the grounds upon which such insufficiency can be proved, it shall be lawful for the registrar to investigate the same; and if upon such investigation he shall find that the said society is in an insolvent condition, and that it would conduce to the interests of all parties concerned that the affairs of the society should be wound up and brought to a termination, he shall make an award to that effect, and shall direct in what manner the funds and property of the society shall be divided or appropriated, and it shall not be necessary in such case that the provisions of the said 13th section be complied with; provided that previous to such investigation the registrar shall give not less than twenty-one days' notice in writing, to be sent by post to the trustees, secretary, or other officer of such society, at the place where such society holds its meetings.

2. Every award so made as aforesaid by the registrar shall be final and conclusive on all members and other persons having any claim on the funds of the said society, without appeal, and shall be enforced in the same manner as by sect. 41 of the said act is provided for enforcing the award of arbitrators; and the expenses of such award, and of publishing the notice of dissolution in the Gazette, shall be paid out of the funds of the society before any appropriation thereof shall be made.

3. When any agreement for the dissolution of a society authorised by sect. 13 of the said act shall be transmitted to the registrar, and when any award authorised to be made by this act shall be made by the registrar, notice thereof shall, within twenty-one days after the same shall have been so transmitted or made respectively, be advertised by the registrar, as respects societies in England in the London Gazette, as respects societies in Scotland in the Edinburgh Gazette, and as respects societies in Ireland in the Dublin Gazette; and unless within three calendar months from the date of the Gazette in which such advertisement shall appear a member or other person interested in or having any claim on the funds of the society shall commence proceedings to set aside the dissolution of the society consequent upon such agreement or award, the society shall be considered for all intents and purposes, and in all courts of law and equity, as legally dissolved, and the requisite consents to such agreement, or, as the case may be, to the application to the registrar, to have been duly obtained, without proof of the signatures thereto.

4. The registrar in his next annual report submitted to Parliament shall set forth the particulars of every award made under the provisions of this act which he may have made during the preceding twelve months.

5. In regard to societies which have been dissolved before the passing of this act, if notice of any agreement for the dissolution of such society already transmitted to the regi-

trar, or of any award made under sect. 13 of the said act, shall, within three months after the passing of this act, be advertised in such Gazette as aforesaid, the provisions of sect. 3 of this act shall apply in the same way as if such agreement and award had been transmitted and made subsequent to the passing of this act.

6. The 8th section of the act passed in the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 101, is hereby repealed; but where, previously to the passing of this act, any application has been made to the registrar respecting the dissolution of a society under the said section, such society shall be dissolved in the same manner and with the same incidents as if this act were not passed, and for the purposes of such dissolution the said section shall be deemed to remain in full force.

7. If default shall be made in transmitting to the registrar, before the 1st June in each year, the general statement or copy of the last annual report of any society, in compliance with the provisions of sect. 45 of the act of the session of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, the officer making such default shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 20s., to be recovered, with costs, at the suit of the registrar, before two or more justices, as to England, in manner directed by an act passed in the session holden in the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, intitled "An Act to facilitate the Performance of the Duties of Justices of the Peace out of Sessions within England and Wales with respect to summary Convictions and Orders;" and as to Scotland, before two or more justices or the sheriff of the county, in manner directed by the act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, intitled "An Act to amend or consolidate the Acts relating to Merchant Shipping," as regards offences in Scotland against that act, not being offences by that act described as felonies or misdemeanours; and as to Ireland, in manner directed by the act passed in the session holden in the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, intitled "An Act to consolidate and amend the Acts regulating the Proceedings of Petty Sessions, and the Duties of Justices of the Peace out of Quarter Sessions, in Ireland," or any act passed for the amendment of the above-mentioned acts; and the justices or sheriff imposing any penalty under this act may direct the whole or any part thereof to be applied in or towards payment of the costs of the proceedings; and, subject to such direction, all penalties shall be paid into the receipt of Her Majesty's Exchequer, in such manner as the Treasury may direct, and shall be carried to and form part of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

8. If the accounts and returns required from certain friendly societies by the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, pursuant to sect. 34 of the said act, be not made within thirty days after the same have been required, the account of the said society shall be closed by the said commissioners, and thenceforth no interest shall be credited to such society thereon, until such accounts and returns shall be furnished to the said commissioners, or the money be withdrawn.

9. Any application authorised by sect. 24 of the said recited act to be made by any person on behalf of a society may be made by the registrar.

10. This act and the Friendly Societies Acts, 1855 and 1858, shall be construed as one act, and may be cited together for all purposes as "The Friendly Societies Acts."

CAP. LIX.

An Act to extend the Provisions of the Universities and College Estates Act, 1858, and of the Copyhold Acts, and of the Acts of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 113, and the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 84, so far as the same relate to Universities and Colleges. [6th August, 1860.]

Sect. 1. Power to raise monies by mortgage, by way of compensation for loss of fines on non-renewal of leases.

2. Form of order to be issued by Copyhold Commissioners evidencing their consent.

3. Lands once leased at rack-rent not thereafter to be leased upon fines.

4. Amendment of certain provisions of the Copyhold Acts with respect to universities and colleges.

5. Power to transfer lands vested in individual members of universities or colleges to the university or college in its corporate capacity, upon like trusts,

6. Two Copyhold Commissioners to form a board for the exercise of powers under the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 44.
7. Extension of certain provisions of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 113, with respect to universities and colleges.
8. Provision as to right of patronage severed.
9. Stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, incorporated.
10. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners constituted the authority referred to.
11. Power to substitute land, or other permanent endowment, in lieu of annual rents or other payments, in extension of certain provisions of stat. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 84.
12. Interpretation of terms.
13. Short title.

Sect. 1. Whenever any lease of any lands belonging to the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, or Durham respectively, or any college therein respectively, or the Colleges of St. Mary of Winchester, near Winchester, or of King Henry the Sixth at Eton, the leases of which have been customarily renewed on payment of a fine, shall, from any cause whatever, (other than the refusal of the university or college, entitled to the reversion of such lands, to accept such a sum of money, by way of fine, as shall be deemed reasonable by the Copyhold Commissioners, and shall be tendered by the lessee at the first and each successive time of renewal after the commencement of this act, or within three months of such time, for the renewal of any lease theretofore regularly renewed), remain unrenewed at any customary period of renewal, or whenever any loss of fines shall have been occasioned by the surrender of any lease upon any transaction, by way of sale or exchange, between the said universities or colleges and their lessees, under the 4th section of the Universities and College Estates Act, 1858, it shall be lawful for the said universities and colleges respectively, from time to time, with the consent of the Copyhold Commissioners, (such consent to be evidenced by an order to be issued under their hands and the common seal of their board), to raise, by mortgage of any lands belonging to such university or college for any term of years, (determinable as hereinafter provided), such sum or sums of money (together with all reasonable costs and expenses incidental to such raising) as shall be required, and be stated in such order, with interest thereon, not exceeding the rate to be specified in such order, for the purpose of paying, by way of indemnity, to the then existing members of such university or college, the same amount of money which would have accrued to the said members if any such lease as aforesaid had been renewed in manner theretofore accustomed: provided always, that the said power of raising monies by mortgage shall not be exercised for the purpose of providing for the loss of more than two fines in respect of the same lands, and that, upon the creation of any such mortgage, provision shall be made by such university or college, with the approval of the said Copyhold Commissioners, for the discharge of the borrowed monies by some or one of the modes prescribed by the 28th section of the Universities and College Estates Act, 1858, or otherwise, so and in such manner as that the principal money to be borrowed at each customary period of renewal, in respect of the same lands, may be discharged with the meane interest of such money within, or at the expiration of, thirty years from the borrowing thereof: provided also, that in every such mortgage there shall be contained a proviso, that when the whole of such principal monies, interest, and costs shall be discharged, the mortgage term thereby created shall absolutely cease: provided always, that after any sum shall have been raised, under the power hereinbefore contained, in lieu of the fines payable in respect of any lease of any lands, no fine shall thenceforth be taken for the renewal or grant of any lease of the same lands.

2. The order to be issued by the said commissioners pursuant to the foregoing provisions shall be similar to the "form of order authorising a mortgage" contained in the schedule to the said Universities and College Estates Act, 1858, with such variations only as the circumstances of the case shall necessarily require.

3. Where any lands belonging to any such university or college as aforesaid shall at any time have been leased at the best and most improved yearly rent, without fine, no fine, premium, or foregift, or anything in the nature thereof, shall thereafter be taken by such university or college for the grant or renewal of any lease of the same lands.

4. And whereas it is expedient that certain provisions of the Copyhold Acts, so far as the same provisions relate to universities and colleges, should be amended and explained as hereafter provided: be it further enacted, that where any manor belonging to any of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Durham respectively, or any college therein respectively, or the Colleges of St. Mary of Winchester, near Winchester, or King Henry the Sixth at Eton, shall be held by any person or persons on lease for a life or lives, or for a term of years, granted by any such university or college, the university or college entitled to such manor in reversion expectant on such lease, and the lessee thereof as aforesaid, shall jointly constitute "the lord" of such manor within the meaning of the Copyhold Acts; and all consideration monies payable to the lord of any such manor under the same acts shall be dealt with in the manner directed by the 39th section of the Copyhold Act, 1852, or the 16th section of the Copyhold Act, 1858, (due notice of any such dealing being previously given to the university or college entitled as aforesaid), until the time when the reversionary interest of such university or college in the manorial rights of such manor would, if the same had not been extinguished, have come into possession, when the said consideration monies, or any securities in which the same may have been invested, shall, upon petition to the Court of Chancery or on application to the trustees in whom the same shall then be vested, (as the case may be), be paid or transferred to the Copyhold Commissioners to the account of the university or college entitled thereto, in the same manner and to be applied for the same purposes as enfranchisement monies payable for the benefit of any university or college are directed to be paid and applied by the 1st section of the Universities and College Estates Act, 1858.

5. When any lands shall be vested in any person or persons, being a member or members of any of the said universities or colleges, in trust or for the benefit of the university or college, or the head or any other member thereof, it shall be lawful for such person or persons (with the consent of the said Copyhold Commissioners, to be signified by any writing under their hands and the common seal of their board) to convey and transfer such lands in such manner as that the same may be vested in the university or college in its corporate capacity, upon the trusts nevertheless affecting the same lands respectively.

6. Any two of the Copyhold Commissioners shall form a board for the exercise of the powers and authorities conferred on the said commissioners by the Universities and College Estates Act, 1858, and this act; and any order, power of attorney, or other instrument issued or executed pursuant to the provisions of the said acts, which shall have been or shall hereafter be signed by any two of the said commissioners, and sealed with the common seal of their board, shall be valid and sufficient for all purposes whatsoever.

7. And whereas it is expedient that the provisions of the act of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 113, and also of the act of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 84, so far as the same relate to universities and colleges, should be extended and amended as hereafter provided: be it further enacted, that sect. 60 of the said act of the 3 & 4 Vict. shall be construed to extend to and shall include as well benefices with cure of souls as ecclesiastical rectories, prebends, and other preferments without cure of souls, advowsons, and rights of patronage, whether exclusive or alternate, inappropriate rectories, and other lands and hereditaments annexed or belonging to, or held either wholly or partly by or in trust for, any of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Durham, or any college therein respectively, or either of the Colleges of St. Mary of Winchester, near Winchester, and of King Henry the Sixth at Eton, or the head or any other member of any such college, and also to extend to, and to include and to authorise, sales by each of the same universities, as well as each of the colleges therein respectively, and the said Colleges of St. Mary of Winchester, near Winchester, and of King Henry the Sixth at Eton; and shall also be construed to enable the said universities or colleges to sell advowsons of benefices, the patronage whereof shall be vested in any person or persons in trust for any of the said universities or colleges, or for the benefit of the head or any other member thereof respectively, and also to authorise, under the authority hereinafter mentioned, the annexation of the whole or any part of the lands or other hereditaments or endowments belonging to any such ecclesiastical rectory, prebend, or other preferment without cure of souls, impropriate rectories, and other lands and hereditaments aforesaid, or the application of the proceeds of any sale thereof, and also the application of the proceeds of any sale of advowsons and rights of patronage, or any part of the proceeds of any such sales, which may be made under the said section of the said last-mentioned act, or the Universities and College Estates Act, 1858, or under any other authority, or of any monies, stocks, funds, or securities belonging to such university, college, head, or member, by way of endowment or augmentation of any benefice with cure of souls, the patronage whereof shall belong to, or be held in trust for, or for the benefit of such university or college, or the head or other member thereof: provided nevertheless, that the powers conferred by this clause shall not be exercised to the prejudice of the existing interest of any such head or other member of a college without his consent; and in case of any diminution being occasioned in the income of any such head or other member of a college by any sale, annexation, purchase, or investment that may be made under the provisions of the said acts, arrangements may be made under the like authority for giving to such head or other member adequate compensation for such diminution of his income out of the revenues of such college, or out of the proceeds of any such sale or investment; and the said section of the said last-mentioned act shall extend to authorise, under the like authority, the purchase out of any of the corporate funds or revenues of any such university or college of advowsons of benefices, and also of any rights of perpetual presentation or nomination to benefices, whether such benefices be or be not annexed to, or held by or in trust for, any of the said universities, or any such college as aforesaid, or the head or other member of any such college, to be added to those in the patronage of such university or college; and the words "colleges" and "college" in the said section of the last-mentioned act shall include the cathedral or house of Christ Church in Oxford; and the words "proper securities" in the same section shall be construed to extend to authorise and shall include the purchase of lands in fee-simple, and also an investment on any of the parliamentary stocks or public funds of Great Britain; and all such securities, lands, and stocks or funds shall be settled, held, applied, or disposed of in such manner as by the university or college effecting such sale, purchase, or investment, and by the like authority, shall be arranged and determined in that behalf; and every endowment or augmentation which shall be made by any university or college of any benefice with cure of souls under the authority of this section, or by virtue of the provisions of the act of the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 45, or any other act or acts of Parliament, shall be valid, notwithstanding the clear annual value of such benefice shall at the time of such endowment or augmentation exceed, or be thereby made to exceed, the limits prescribed by the 16th section of the said act of the 1 & 2 Will. 4, or any other act or acts of Parliament: provided, that no such augmentation or endowment beyond the clear annual value of 500*l.* shall be made under the said act of the 1 & 2 Will. 4, except with the consent of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England, (to be testified by writing under their common seal), in addition to such other consents as may be otherwise required thereto.

8. On the sale or annexation under the last preceding clause of any ecclesiastical rectory, prebend, or other preferment without cure of souls, or of any impropriate rectory to which any right of patronage shall belong, and which is not intended to be included in such sale or to accompany such annexation, such right of patronage shall immediately after such sale or annexation be separated from and be no longer exercised by the holder of such ecclesiastical rectory, prebend, or other preferment without cure of souls, or impropriate rectory, but shall by force of this act be absolutely transferred to and vested in the university or college, the former patrons or owners of such ecclesiastical rectory, prebend, or other preferment or impropriate rectory.

9. The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, (except such parts thereof as relate to the purchase of lands otherwise than by agreement, and to the recovery of forfeitures, penalties, and costs, and to the sale of superfluous lands), shall be incorporated with and form part of the said act. 69 of the said act of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 113, as extended by this act, and as if the corporate name or denomination of the university or college in each particular case had been inserted therein instead of "the promoters of the undertaking:" provided that the powers by the said act vested in "the promoters of the undertaking" shall be exercised only by such university or college with the consent of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England testified as aforesaid.

10. "The authority" hereinbefore and in the said act of the 3 & 4 Vict. provided shall, so far as relates to universities and colleges, be and be deemed to be "the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England," and such authority shall be deemed to be sufficiently exercised and evidenced by any writing under their common seal.

11. Where any rent or annual sum of money granted, reserved, or made payable, or to be granted, reserved, or made payable, under any of the powers of the said act of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 84, or of the several acts therein mentioned, or otherwise, to the incumbent of any church or chapel, by way of endowment, or in augmentation of the endowment, of any such church or chapel, is or shall be charged upon or made payable out of any rectory impropriate tithes, annual revenues, lands, tenements, or other hereditaments belonging to any of the said universities or colleges respectively, it shall be lawful for the said universities and colleges respectively, with the consent of the incumbent for the time being of the said church or chapel, and also with the consent of the archbishop or bishop of the diocese within which the said church or chapel shall be situate, and also of the patron or patrons of the said church or chapel, (such consent to be signified by the said consenting parties respectively executing the deed or deeds hereinafter mentioned), and notwithstanding any statute or law to the contrary, by deed duly executed, to appropriate and annex in perpetuity to such church or chapel any lands, tithes, or portion of tithes, or other hereditaments belonging to any such university or college as aforesaid, to the intent that the same may be held and enjoyed by the incumbent for the time being of such church or chapel in lieu of and substitution for such rent or annual sum of money as aforesaid; and it shall be lawful for the said incumbent for the time being to accept, to him and his successors, such substituted endowment or augmentation, and thereupon, by the same or any other deed duly executed by him, and with such consents, and so signified as aforesaid, to release any impropriate rectory tithes, annual revenues, lands, tenements, or other hereditaments theretofore charged with the said rent or annual sum of money, and the premises so released shall be thenceforth wholly discharged from the said rent or sum of money, and from all powers and remedies for the recovery thereof: provided always, that no consent of any archbishop or bishop shall be given to any such annexation and release respectively as aforesaid, unless such substituted endowment or augmentation shall be proved to the satisfaction of the said archbishop or bishop to produce an income which shall exceed or be fully equal to the rent or annual sum of money for which the same shall be substituted, and be expressed to be so proved in the deed by which such consent shall be signified: provided also, that when any lands, tithes, or portions of tithes, or other hereditaments, which shall be so annexed as aforesaid, shall be comprised in any subsisting lease or leases previously granted thereof, such annexation shall not prejudice or affect any such subsisting lease or leases; but in every such case any rent or rents reserved by any such lease or leases, or a proportionate part thereof, (in case other hereditaments shall also be comprised in such lease or leases), shall, during the continuance of the said lease or leases, be payable to the incumbent for the time being of the church or chapel to which the premises shall be annexed as aforesaid, and such incumbent for the time being shall have all the same powers for the recovery of the said rent or rents, or of the proportionate part thereof, as aforesaid, as the university or college by whom the annexation shall have been made might have had in case the premises had not been so annexed.

12. This act shall be read and construed according to the definitions and interpretations contained in the 31st and 32nd sections of the Universities and College Estates Act, 1858; and the word "college" in the said act of the 3 & 4 Vict. and in this act shall be interpreted to include any "hall" in the said universities, or either of them.

13. It shall be sufficient for all purposes to cite this act as "The Universities and College Estates Act Extension, 1860."

CAP. LX.

An Act to amend the Act for regulating the Queen's Prison.
[6th August, 1860.]

Sect. 1. Prisoners sent to Bethlehem Hospital, under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, may be removed when they would have been entitled to their discharge from the prison.

2. Lunatics removed from Bethlehem, under this act, to be within the provisions of the Lunacy Acts.

Sect. 1. Where any prisoner has been removed from the Queen's Prison to the said hospital of Bethlehem under the recited enactment, and has not been duly certified to have become of sound mind, but the term of his imprisonment has expired, or, by reason of the discharge of his debts or otherwise, such prisoner, if he had been of sound mind, and had continued in the Queen's Prison, would have been entitled to be discharged, it shall be lawful for one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, if he so think fit, by his warrant directed to the president, treasurer, and governors of Bethlehem Hospital, upon the application of any person who shall be named in such warrant, to order the removal of such prisoner to any other registered hospital, or to any lunatic asylum or house licensed for the reception of lunatics, or to the care or charge of any person mentioned or named in such warrant for this purpose; and every such warrant shall be made in duplicate, and one of the duplicates shall be delivered to and left with the superintendent of the said hospital of Bethlehem, and the other duplicate shall be delivered to and left with the superintendent or proprietor of the hospital, asylum, or house into which, or the person into whose care or charge, the prisoner is ordered to be removed; and such warrant shall be a sufficient authority for the removal of such prisoner, and also for his reception into the hospital, asylum, or licensed house into which, or by the person into whose care or charge, he is ordered to be removed; and thereafter the authority of the Secretary of State, in relation to the prisoner so removed, shall cease.

2. Any prisoner removed under this act to any hospital, asylum, or licensed house, or into the care or charge of any person other than the person upon whose application the warrant of the Secretary of State is mentioned to have been made, shall be considered and treated as an ordinary lunatic patient, under the acts for the regulation of the care and treatment of lunatics; and the said applicant for the warrant shall have the same powers, rights, and liabilities as if he had signed an order for the reception of the lunatic under the said acts, upon which such lunatic had been lawfully received into such asylum, registered hospital, or licensed house, or by the person into whose care or charge he is removed.

Whenever the House of Commons shall order that any resolution agreed to pursuant to the 1st section of the said recited act in the same session shall be a Standing Order of the House, any member professing the Jewish religion may thenceforth be sworn pursuant to such Standing Order, so long as the same shall continue in force; and it shall be lawful for such member, in taking and subscribing the oath which by the act of the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 48, was substituted for the oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration, to omit the words "and I make this declaration upon the true faith of a Christian," and the taking and subscribing by such member, pursuant to such Standing Order, of the oath so modified, shall, so far as respects the title to sit and vote in such House, have the same force and effect as the taking and subscribing by other members of the said oath in the form required by the last-mentioned act.

CAP. LXIV.

An Act to make further Provision for the Expenses of Local Boards of Health and Improvement Commissioners acting as Burial Boards.
[6th August, 1860.]

Sect. 1. Expenses of local board constituted a burial board may be paid out of general district rate, or by a separate rate.

2. Expenses of improvement commissioners, when acting as a burial board, may be paid out of improvement rate, or by a separate rate.

3. Separate accounts to be kept.

4. As to appointment of burial boards without consent of Secretary of State.

Sect. 1. Any money required by any local board constituted a burial board for defraying the expense of carrying into execution the powers and provisions of the Burial Acts and of this act in the district for which they may have been so constituted a burial board, or for paying any monies borrowed or annuities granted under the authority of the said acts, or any interest on monies borrowed, or for providing a sinking fund for the repayment of such monies, may, if the local board so think fit, be paid out of the general district rates leviable within such district; and such local board may levy, as part of the general district rate, or by a separate rate, under the name and designation of a burial rate, to be assessed and recovered in like manner as a general district rate, within the district for which they act as a burial board, such sums of money as shall be from time to time necessary for the purposes aforesaid, or any of them.

2. Any money required by any such commissioners as aforesaid, who shall have been constituted a burial board, for defraying the expense of carrying into execution the powers and provisions of the Burial Acts in the district for which they may have been so constituted a burial board, or for paying any monies borrowed or annuities granted under the authority of the said acts, or any interest on monies borrowed, or for providing a sinking fund for the repayment of such monies, may, if the commissioners so think fit, be paid out of the improvement rate leviable within such district; and the commissioners, as such burial board, may levy, as part of the improvement rate, or by a separate rate under the name and designation of a burial rate, to be assessed and recovered in like manner as an improvement rate, such sums of money as shall be from time to time necessary for the purposes aforesaid, or any of them.

3. The local board and the commissioners respectively who may have been constituted a burial board shall keep distinct accounts of their receipts and expenditure in the exercise of their functions as such burial board; and where their expenses are defrayed by monies raised under the provisions of this act, such accounts shall be audited in the same manner as other accounts of the receipts and expenditure of such local board and commissioners respectively, and any surplus of the monies raised by any rate made under this act, and of the income of any burial ground provided by means of monies raised or paid under the provisions of this act, which may remain after payment of the expenses and monies which should be defrayed or paid under the Burial Acts, shall be applied in aid of the general district rate or improvement rate, as the case may be, levied within the district which shall have been or might have been charged with a separate rate under this act.

4. Where any parish or place has been divided into two or more parts or districts for all or any ecclesiastical purposes, and any one of such parts has a separate burial ground, it shall not be lawful for the vestry, or meeting in the nature of a vestry, for such entire parish or place to appoint a burial board without the approval of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State.

SECT. 1. Power to Treasury, by warrant, to authorise private letters of commissioned and non-commissioned officers, &c. to be delivered free of the foreign postage chargeable in respect of redirection; or to reduce rates of British or colonial postage.

2. London Gazette to be evidence of due issuing of such warrant.

3. Act to be deemed a post-office act.

4. Commencement of act.

CAP. LXVI.

An Act to amend the Medical Act, 1858.

SECT. 1. Interpretation of terms.

2. New charters may be granted to the colleges.

3. Colleges to retain all existing rights, notwithstanding change of name.

4. Colleges to hold property, notwithstanding change of name.

5. Provisions in the 14 & 15 Hen. 8, c. 5, as to the elects, repealed.

6. Election of the president of the Royal College of Physicians of London.

SECT. 1. The expression in the Medical Act and this act "the Corporation of the Royal College of Physicians of London," or "the Royal College of Physicians of London," shall be taken to denote the corporation of "the President and College or Commonalty of the Faculty of Physic in London."

2. Any new charter which, under the provisions of the Medical Act, shall be granted to the corporation of the Royal College of Physicians of London, may be granted to them either by and in the name of the Royal College of Physicians of London, or, as provided by that act, by and in the name of the Royal College of Physicians of England; and any such new charter granted to the corporation of the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh may be granted to that college either by and in its present name, or, as provided by the Medical Act, by and in the name of the Royal College of Physicians of Scotland; and any such new charter granted to the corporation of the King and Queen's College of Physicians in Ireland may be granted to that college either by and in its present name, or, as provided by the Medical Act, by and in the name of the Royal College of Physicians of Ireland.

3. The granting of new charters to the said corporations respectively by and in the altered names and styles respectively, as provided in the Medical Act, shall not, in respect of such alteration of name or style merely, alter or affect in any way the rights, powers, authorities, qualifications, liberties, exemptions, immunities, duties, and obligations granted, conferred, or imposed to or upon, or continued and preserved to, the said corporations respectively, and the respective presidents, censors, fellows, members, and licentiates thereof, by the respective charters and acts of Parliament relating to the said corporations respectively, or by the Medical Act, the act to amend the Medical Act, the Medical Acts Amendment Act, 1860, and this act respectively; but the said corporations respectively, and the respective presidents, censors, fellows, members, and licentiates thereof, shall, notwithstanding any such change of name and style, have and retain all such and the same rights, powers, authorities, qualifications, liberties, exemptions, and immunities, and be subject to all such and the same duties and obligations, as if such new charters respectively had been granted to them by and in their respective names and styles as then existing.

4. Each of the said corporations shall also, notwithstanding any such alteration of name or style, have, hold, and enjoy, and continue to have, hold, and enjoy, all lands and other real and personal, heritable and moveable, property belonging to such corporation, either beneficially or in trust, at the date of the granting of such new charter, and may execute and perform any use or trust for the time being vested or reposed in such corporation.

5. So much of the act of the 14 & 15 Hen. 8, c. 5, as relates to the elects of the said Royal College of Physicians of London, and their powers and functions, shall be and the same is hereby repealed, but this repeal shall not prejudice or affect the rights and privileges of any persons to whom the said president and elects may have granted letters testimonial; and all trusts which by any deed, gift, devise, or bequest are vested in, or to be executed or performed by, the elects, or some defined number of them, shall vest in and accrue to, and be executed and performed by, the censors of the said college for the time being as if the name of the censors had in such instruments respectively been used instead of that of the elects, and the office and name of elects of the said college shall henceforth wholly cease and determine.

6. The office of president of the Royal College of Physicians of London shall be an annual office; and Thomas Mayo, Doctor of Physic, the now president of the said corporation, shall remain such president until the day next after Palm Sunday in the year 1861, when he shall go out of office; and the fellows of the said corporation shall, at a meeting to be holden by them for that purpose, on the same day, and on the same day in every subsequent year, elect some one of the fellows of the said corporation in such manner as shall be provided by any by-law or by-laws made in that behalf by the said corporation, and for the time being in force, to be president of the said corporation, but the retiring president shall always be capable of being re-elected, and every president shall remain in office until the actual election of a new president; or in case of the death, resignation, or other avoidance of any such president before the expiration of his year of office, the said fellows shall, at a meeting to be holden by them for that purpose, as soon as conveniently may be, (of which due notice shall be given), elect one other of the fellows of the said corporation in such manner as aforesaid to be president for the remainder of the year in which such death, resignation, or other avoidance shall happen, and until such election the duties of president shall be performed by the senior censor for the time being.

Nuisances Removal.

Sects. 1. Sects. 3, 6, 7, and 9 of the said Nuisances Removal Act for England, 1855, shall be repealed: provided always, that such repeal as aforesaid shall not extend to any charges or expenses already incurred, but the same may be defrayed and recovered, and all proceedings commenced or taken under the said act, and not yet completed, may be proceeded with, and all contracts under the said act shall continue and be as effectual as if this act had not been passed.

2. The following bodies shall respectively be the local authority to execute the said Nuisances Removal Act in the districts hereunder stated in England:

In any place within which the Public Health Act is or shall be in force, the local board of health:

In any other place wherein a council exists or shall exist, the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses by the council, except in the city of London and the liberties thereof, where the local authority shall be the commissioners of sewers for the time being, and except in the city of Oxford and borough of Cambridge, where the local authority shall be the commissioners acting in execution of the Local Improvement Act in force respectively in the said city and borough:

In any place in which there is no local board of health or council, and where there are or shall be trustees or commissioners under an improvement act, such trustees or commissioners:

In any place within which there is no such local board of health, council, body of trustees, or commissioners, if there be a board of guardians of the poor for such place, or for any parish or union within which such place is situate, such board of guardians, and, if there be no such board of guardians, the overseers of the poor for such place, or for the parish of which such place forms part.

3. Provided, that in any place where a highway board, or the nuisances removal committee chosen by the vestry in pursuance of the said act, is subsisting, and at the time of the passing of this act employs, or joins with other local authorities in employing, a sanitary inspector or inspectors, such highway board or nuisances removal committee may continue to act, and a like committee may be annually chosen by the vestry for such place in the same manner as if this act had not been passed; but in case in any year the nuisances removal committee be not chosen for such place in manner provided by the said act, or if the highway board or committee now subsisting, or hereafter chosen, fall for two months in any year to appoint or employ a sanitary inspector or inspectors, the authority of such highway board or committee shall cease, and no like committee shall be chosen for such place, and the same body or persons shall thenceforth be the local authority for the place, as if no such highway board or committee had been appointed therein.

4. All charges and expenses incurred by the local authority in executing the said Nuisances Removal Act, and not recovered as therein provided, shall be defrayed as follows; to wit,

Out of general district rates where the local authority is a local board of health:

Out of the borough fund or borough rate where the local authority is the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses, by the council :

Provided always, that in the city of Oxford and borough of Cambridge such expenses shall be deemed annual charges and expenses of cleansing the streets of the said city and borough respectively, and shall be so payable :

Out of the rates levied for purposes of improvement under any Improvement Act, where the local authority is a body of trustees or commissioners acting in execution of the powers of such an act :

Where a board of guardians for a union is such local authority for the whole of such union, such charges and expenses shall be defrayed by means of an addition to be made to the rate for the relief of the poor of the parish or parishes for which the expense has been incurred, and be raised and paid in like manner as money expended for the relief of the poor :

Where the board of guardians for a union is such local authority for two or more places maintaining their own poor, but not for all such places in such union, such charges and expenses shall be paid out of the poor rates of the places aforesaid for which the board is the local authority :

Where the board of guardians for a union is under this act the local authority for a single place maintaining its own poor, and where the board of guardians for any such single place, or the overseers of any such place, or the nuisances removal committee continued or chosen as hereinbefore provided in any such place, are under this act the local authority for such place, such charges and expenses shall be defrayed out of the rates for the relief of the poor thereof :

Where the board of guardians for a union is under this act the local authority for part only of any place maintaining its own poor, together with the whole of any other such place, or part of any other such place, such board shall apportion such charges and expenses between or among any or every such part, and any or every such place; and so much of such charges and expenses as may be apportioned to any or every such place, for the whole of which such board is the local authority, shall be defrayed out of the rates or funds applicable to the relief of the poor thereof :

So much of any such charges and expenses as may be apportioned to part of a place maintaining its own poor, and any such charges and expenses incurred by any board of guardians or overseers, where such board or overseers are the local authority for part of any such place only, shall be defrayed by means of an addition to be made to the rate for the relief of the poor thereof, and be raised and paid in like manner as money expended for the relief of the poor.

5. Provided, that the board of guardians for a union may appoint a committee or committees of their own body, under sect. 5 of the said Nuisances Removal Act, to act in and for one or more of the parishes or places for which the board is the local authority; and every committee so appointed shall have the full power of executing the said act in all respects, within the specified place or places for which it is appointed, unless its power be expressly limited by the terms of its appointment; and the board of guardians shall cause the charges and expenses of every such committee to be paid out of the poor rates of the place or places for which such committee is appointed; and where a committee is so appointed for any such place or places, the charges and expenses of the board, as local authority for or in respect of the place or places for which a committee is not appointed, shall be paid or contributed by such last-mentioned place or places in like manner as the expenses of a committee; provided that where any one such committee is appointed for all the places for which the board is the local authority, its charges and expenses shall be contributed and paid in like manner as the charges and expenses of the board would have been contributed and paid if such committee had not been appointed.

6. Provided also, that as regards the metropolis, the vestries and district boards under the act of the session holden in the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, within their respective parishes and districts, shall continue and be the local authorities for the execution of the said Nuisances Removal Act, and their charges and expenses shall be defrayed as if this act had not been passed.

7. All wells, fountains, and pumps provided under sect. 50 of the Public Health Act, 1848, or otherwise, for the use of the inhabitants of any place, and not being the property of or vested in any person or corporation other than officers of such place, shall be vested in the local authority under this act for such place, who shall from time to time cause to be kept in good repair and condition, and free from pollution, all wells, fountains, and pumps vested in them under this act, and may also keep in good repair and condition, and free from pollution, other wells, fountains, and pumps dedicated to or open to the use of the inhabitants of such place.

8. If any person do any act whatsoever whereby any fountain or pump is wilfully or maliciously damaged, or the water of any well, fountain, or pump is polluted or fouled, he shall, upon summary conviction of such offence before two justices, forfeit a sum not exceeding 5*l.* for such offence, and a further sum, not exceeding 20*s.*, for every day during which such offence is continued after written notice from the local authority in relation thereto; but nothing herein contained shall extend to any offence provided against by sect. 23 of the said Nuisances Removal Act.

9. Local authorities under this act may, for the purposes of the act, severally appoint or employ inspectors of nuisances, and make such payments as they see fit for the remuneration and expenses of such inspectors.

Diseases Prevention.

10. Sects. 2 and 3 of the Diseases Prevention Act, 1855, and every other enactment constituting a local authority for the execution of the same act, or providing for the expenses of the execution thereof, except those contained in the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, (the Metropolis Local Management Act), shall be repealed.

11. The board of guardians for every union, or parish not within an union, in England, shall be the local authority for executing the said Diseases Prevention Act in every place within their respective unions and parishes; and in every parish and place in England not within a union, and for which there is no board of guardians, the overseers of the poor shall be the local authority to execute the same act; and the expenses incurred in the execution of such act by the board of guardians for a union shall be defrayed out of the common fund thereof, and the expenses of the board of guardians or overseers of the poor of any single parish or place shall be defrayed out of the rates for the relief of the poor of such parish or place; provided that every such board of guardians shall, for the execution of the said Act for the Prevention of Diseases, have the like powers of appointing committees, with the like authority; and where any such committee is appointed, the expenses thereof and of the board shall be paid in the same manner as hereinbefore provided where such a board is the local authority for the execution of the said Nuisances Removal Act: provided also, that any expenses already incurred by any local authority in the execution of the said act shall be defrayed as if this act had not been passed: provided moreover, that in respect of any place where, under this act, the local authority for executing the Nuisances Removal Act is any other body than the board of guardians or the overseers of the poor, the Privy Council, if it see fit, may, in the manner provided for the exercise of its powers under the Public Health Act, 1858, authorise such other body to be, instead of the board of guardians or the overseers of the poor, the local authority for executing the Diseases Prevention Act: provided also, that, as regards the metropolis, the vestries and district boards, under the act of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, within their respective parishes and districts, shall continue to be the local authorities for the execution of the said Diseases Prevention Act, 1855, and their charges and expenses shall be defrayed as if this act had not been passed.

12. It shall be lawful for the local authority for executing the said Diseases Prevention Act to provide and maintain a carriage or carriages suitable for the conveyance of persons suffering under any contagious or infectious disease, and to convey such sick and diseased persons as may be residing within such locality to any hospital or other place of destination, and the expense thereof shall be deemed to be an expense incurred in executing the said act.

13. Upon complaint before a justice of the peace, by any inhabitant of any parish or place, of the existence of any nuisance on any private premises in the same parish or place, such justice shall issue a summons requiring the person by whose act, default, permission, or sufferance the nuisance arises, or, if such person cannot be found or ascertained, the owner or occupier of the premises on which the nuisance arises, to appear before two justices in petty sessions assembled at their usual place of meeting, who shall proceed to inquire into the said complaint, and act in relation thereto as in cases where complaint is made by a local authority, under sect. 12 of the said Nuisances Removal Act, and as if the person making the complaint were such local authority: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the said justices, if they see fit, to adjourn the hearing or farther hearing of such summons for an examination of the premises where the nuisance is alleged to exist, and to require the admission, or authorise the entry, into such premises of any constable or other person or persons; and thereupon the person or persons authorised by the order of the justices may enter and act as the local authority might under a like order made by any justice under sect. 11 of the said act: provided also, that the costs in the case of every such application shall be in the discretion of the justices, and payment thereof may be ordered and enforced as in other cases of summary adjudication by justices: any order made by justices under this enactment shall be attended with the like penalties and consequences for disobedience thereof, and subject to the like appeal, as any order made under sect. 12 of the said Nuisances Removal Act; and the justices making such order may thereby authorise any constable, or other person or persons, to do all acts for removing or abating the nuisance condemned or prohibited, and for executing such order, in like manner as a local authority obtaining the like order might do under the said act, and to charge the costs to the person on whom the order is made, as is provided in the case where a like order is obtained and executed by such local authority.

14. The guardians of any union, or parish not within an union, may at any time employ one of their medical officers to make inquiry and report upon the sanitary state of their union or parish, or any part thereof, and pay a reasonable compensation for the same out of their common fund.

15. The several words used in this act shall be construed in the same manner as is declared with reference to the same words in the above cited act, termed "The Nuisances Removal Act for England, 1855," and all the provisions therein, and in "The Diseases Prevention Act, 1855," contained, shall respectively be applicable to this act, except so far as they shall be hereby repealed, or be inconsistent with anything herein provided.

16. No justice of the peace shall, unless objected to at the hearing of any complaint or charge, be deemed incapable of acting in cases other than appeals arising under the said Nuisances Removal Act, by reason of his being a member of any body hereby declared to be the local authority to execute the said act, or by reason of his being a contributor, or liable to contribute, to any rate or fund out of which it is hereby provided that all charges and expenses incurred in executing the said act, and not recovered as therein provided, shall be defrayed.

CAP. LXXVIII.

An Act to place the Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children in Bleaching Works and Dyeing Works under the Regulations of the Factories Acts.

Sect. 1. Recited acts to apply to bleaching and dyeing works, and to the employment of females, young persons, and children therein.

2. Females and young persons may be employed until half-past four o'clock on Saturdays, and until eight o'clock on other days, but not so as to exceed in any period of six months and part of another month the total number of hours allowed by this act, &c.

3. Restriction as to time females and young persons are to be employed on Saturdays and on other days.

4. Females and young persons may be employed during the night in case of suspension of employment by deficiency or excess of water in the stream, Saturday night excepted.

5. Occupiers who employ females and young persons, according to the provisions of this act, to keep registers in the form given in the schedules annexed hereto.

6. As to employment of females and young persons who have not been before employed in bleaching or dyeing works, &c.

7. Interpretation of terms.

8. Amendment of sect. 28 of stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 15, as to notice of time lost intended to be recovered.

9. Act not to apply to premises used solely for purposes declared in the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 29, regulating labour of children in print works.

10. Certain provisions of Factories Acts not to extend to bleaching &c. works.

11. Hours of work defined.

12. Provisions in Factories Acts as to meal times not to extend to this act.

Whereas it is the practice of some of the occupiers of bleaching works and dyeing works to keep females, young persons, and children at work during the night, and an unreasonable number of hours during the day: and whereas such practices are not necessary to the successful carrying on of those trades, but are very injurious to the health and morals of the females, young persons, and children employed therein, and it has become necessary to regulate the employment of such people, and to provide for the education of such children: and whereas an act was passed in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, [c. 103], intituled "An Act to regulate the Labour of Children and Young Persons in the Mills and Factories of the United Kingdom:" and whereas an act was passed in the 7 & 8 Vict. [c. 15], intituled "An Act to amend the Laws relating to Labour in Factories:" and whereas an act was passed in the 10 & 11 Vict. [c. 29], intituled "An Act to limit the Hours of Labour of Young Persons and Females in Factories:" and whereas an act was passed in the 13 & 14 Vict. [c. 54], intituled "An Act to amend the Acts relating to Labour in Factories:" and whereas an act was passed in the 16 & 17 Vict. [c. 104], intituled "An Act further to regulate the Employment of Children in Factories:" and whereas an act was passed in the 19 & 20 Vict. [c. 38], intituled "An Act for the further Amendment of the Laws relating to Labour in Factories:" be it therefore enacted &c, as follows:—

Sect. 1. That from and after the 1st August, 1861, the powers and provisions of the hereinbefore recited acts shall apply, and be held to apply, to bleaching works and dyeing works, except works in which the operation of bleaching by the open-air process is the only operation of bleaching carried on, and to the employment of females, young persons, and children in bleaching works and dyeing works, except as aforesaid, to all intents and purposes as completely and effectively as if such bleaching works and dyeing works had been mentioned and included in the provisions of the hereinbefore recited acts, or any of them, except as is hereinafter provided: provided nevertheless, that until the 1st August, 1862, it shall be lawful to employ females above the age of eighteen years and young persons in bleaching works and dyeing works until eight of the clock at night on every working day except Saturdays, and until half-past four of the clock in the afternoon on Saturdays.

2. Provided also, that after the said 1st August, 1862, it shall be lawful to employ females above the age of eighteen years and young persons in bleaching works and dyeing works, in every case where the employment of such females and young persons, as regulated by the hereinbefore recited acts or any of them, or by this act, shall have been suspended or time shall have been lost in consequence of fluctuations in trade, the nature of the process, or any other cause, in recovering time so lost, until half-past four of the clock in the afternoon on Saturdays, and until eight of the clock at night on other days: provided that by means of such employment the whole time which such females and young persons, or any of them, shall have been employed during the then present calendar month and the then last past six calendar months, do not exceed the total number of hours which such females and young persons may lawfully be employed according to the provisions of the 1st section of this act and of the provisions of the recited acts.

3. It shall not be lawful in any case, after the said 1st

12. The provisions contained in the Factories Acts fixing the times for the meals of the workpeople employed in factories shall not extend to workpeople employed in bleaching works or dyeing works.

[illegible]

CAP. LXXXIII.

An Act to explain an Act of the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Years of her present Majesty, enabling Infants, with the Approbation of the Court of Chancery, to make binding Settlements of their Real and Personal Estate on Marriage. [6th August, 1860.]

The preamble recites the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 43.

Sect. 1. In the interpretation of the said recited act, and for all the objects and purposes thereof, the words "Court of Chancery" shall include and be taken to include the Court of Chancery in Ireland; and all orders made and approbations already given by the Court of Chancery in Ireland, in cases provided for and contemplated by the said act, shall be as valid and binding in law as if the words "the Court of Chancery in Ireland" had been expressly contained in the said act in all places where the words "the Court of Chancery" are mentioned therein.

CAP. LXXXIV.

An Act for preventing the Adulteration of Articles of Food or Drink. [6th August, 1860.]

Sect. 1. Penalty on persons selling articles of food or drink knowing the same to be injurious to health. As to subsequent offences.

2. Protection against articles of food and drink being tampered with by purchaser.
3. Power to appoint analysts.
4. Power to purchasers of articles of food and drink to have them analysed. Certificate of analyst made evidence.
5. Power to justices to have articles of food and drink analysed.
6. Appeal to quarter sessions.
7. Where conviction within six days of quarter sessions, time allowed for appeal.
8. Persons convicted of selling adulterated patented articles may have a case stated for opinion of superior court.
9. Procedure in cases under this act. Application of monies.
10. Proceedings in Ireland as to complaints, &c. to be subject to the provisions of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, and the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 100.
11. Appeal to quarter sessions.
12. As to expenses of executing act.
13. Indictment or other remedy not affected.
14. Interpretation of terms.

Sect. 1. Every person who shall sell any article of food or drink with which, to the knowledge of such person, any ingredient or material injurious to the health of persons eating or drinking such article has been mixed, and every person who shall sell as pure or unadulterated any article of food or drink which is adulterated or not pure, shall for every such offence, on a summary conviction of the same before two justices of the peace at petty sessions in England, and in Scotland before two justices of the peace in justice of the peace court, or before the sheriff substitute of the county, or before justices at petty sessions or a divisional justice in Ireland, forfeit and pay a penalty not exceeding 5*l.*, together with such costs attending such conviction as to the said justices shall seem reasonable; and if any person so convicted shall afterwards commit the like offence, it shall be lawful for such justices to cause such offender's name, place of abode, and offence to be published, at the expense of such offender, in such newspaper or in such other manner as to such justices shall seem desirable.

2. On the hearing by the justices of any complaint under this act in any district, county, or borough wherein any analyst shall have been appointed, the purchaser shall prove to the satisfaction of such justices that the seller of the article of food or drink alleged to be adulterated, or his servants, had such notice of the intention of the purchaser to have such article analysed, and also such opportunity of accompanying the purchaser to an analyst appointed by this act, as the justices shall think reasonable, in order to secure such article from being tampered with by the purchaser.

3. In the city of London and the liberties thereof the commissioners of sewers of the city of London and the liberties thereof, and in all other parts of the metropolis the vestries and district boards acting in execution of the Act for the better Local Management of the Metropolis, in England and Ireland the court of quarter sessions of every county, and the town council of every borough having a separate court of quarter sessions, and in Scotland the commissioners of supply at their ordinary meetings for counties, and town councils within their several jurisdictions, may from time to time, for their respective city, districts, counties, or boroughs, appoint and remove one or more persons possessing competent medical, chemical, and microscopical knowledge, as analysts of all articles of food and drink purchased within the said city, metropolitan districts, counties, or boroughs, and may pay to such analysts such salary or allowances as they may think fit; but such appointments and removals shall at all times be subject in Great Britain to the approval of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and in Ireland to that of the Lord Lieutenant.

4. Any purchaser of any article of food or drink in any district, county, city, or borough where there is any analyst appointed under this act, shall be entitled, on payment to the analyst of a sum not less than 2*s.* 6*d.* nor more than 10*s.* 6*d.*, to have any such article analysed by any analyst who may be appointed for such district, county, city, or borough, and to receive from such analyst a certificate of the result of his analysis, specifying whether, in his opinion, such article is adulterated, and also whether it is so adulterated as to be injurious to the health of persons eating or drinking the same; and such certificate, duly signed by such analyst, shall, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, be sufficient evidence before the justices or in any court of justice of the matters therein certified, and the sum so directed to be paid for such certificate shall be deemed part of the costs.

5. The justices before whom any complaint may be made under this act may, in their discretion, cause any article of food or drink to be examined and analysed by such skilled person as they may appoint for that purpose, who may be required to give evidence of the same at the hearing of the case; and the expense thereof, and of such examination and analysis, if not paid by the complainant or party complained against, shall be deemed part of the expenses of executing this act, but nevertheless such expense may be ordered by such justices to be paid by the party so complaining or complained against, as they shall think proper.

6. Any person who has been convicted of any offence punishable by this act by any justices may appeal to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace which shall be held for the city, county, town, or place wherein such judgment or conviction shall have been made; or in the case of the conviction having been before a sheriff substitute in Scotland, then the appeal shall be to the sheriff of the county; provided that such person enter into a recognisance within two days next after such conviction, with two sufficient sureties, conditioned to try such appeal, and to be forthcoming to abide the judgment and determination of the court at such general or quarter sessions, or sheriff, and to pay such costs as shall be by such court awarded; and the justices before whom such conviction shall be had are hereby empowered and required to take such recognisance; and the court at such general or quarter sessions, or sheriff, are hereby authorised and required to hear and finally determine the matter of every such appeal, and may award such costs to the party appealing or appealed against as they shall think proper.

7. If any such conviction or judgment or order of forfeiture shall happen to be made within six days before any general or quarter sessions of the peace shall be held for the city, county, town, or place wherein such conviction shall have been made, the person who shall think himself aggrieved by any such conviction may, on entering into a recognisance in manner and for the purposes before directed, be at liberty to appeal either to the then next or next following general or quarter sessions of the peace which shall be held for any such city, county, town, or place wherein any such conviction shall have been made, on giving six days' notice to the complainant of his intention to appeal.

8. Any person who shall have been convicted by any justices or sheriff substitute of any offence punishable by this act, in respect of the selling of any article of food or drink which shall have been manufactured according to any process patented before the passing of this act, either by the patentee or owner of the patent, or by any person carrying on his business or otherwise claiming under him during the continuance of such patent, may, instead of appealing to the general or quarter sessions of the peace or sheriff of the county, apply in writing, within five days after such conviction, to the justices or sheriff substitute, to state and sign a case for the opinion of one of the superior courts of law thereon, in like manner as under the stat. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, he might have applied to the justices to state and sign a case, and thereupon all such proceedings shall take place upon and in relation to such application, and all such provisions shall be applicable thereto, as would have taken place upon and in relation thereto, and been applicable thereto, under the provisions of the said last-mentioned act; and in Scotland, for the purposes of such appeal, the justices or sheriff substitute may state and sign a case for the opinion of the Court of Session, in like manner as the justices in England and Ireland may for the opinion of the superior courts of law under the said act, and the Court of Session shall have in relation thereto the like powers as the superior courts have under the said act, and all the other provisions of the said act shall be applicable to such appeals.

9. In England the provisions in the Nuisance Removal Act for England, 1855, as to procedure, and the provisions of the stat. 11 & 12 Vict., intitled "An Act to facilitate the Performance of the Duties of Justices of the Peace and of Session within England and Wales with respect to summary Convictions and Orders," and in Scotland the ordinary rules regulating the procedure of justices of the peace, so far as the same are respectively applicable, shall extend and apply to cases arising under this act in England or Scotland; and all monies arising from penalties under this act in any county, city, district, or borough where there are analysts appointed under this act shall, when paid or recovered, be paid in England and Ireland to the vestry, district board, commissioners, county treasurer, or town council for such county, city, district, or borough respectively, to be applied for the general purposes of such vestry, district board, commissioners, county, city, or borough respectively, and to the collector of rogue money for each county in Scotland.

10. All proceedings under this act in Ireland as to compelling the appearance of any such person or of any witness, and as to the hearing and determination of such complaints, and as to the making and executing of such orders, and as to the applications of fines, amerciaments, and forfeited recognisances imposed or levied under this act at petty sessions, shall be subject in all respects to the provisions of the Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851, as the same is amended by the Petty Sessions Clerk (Ireland) Act, 1858, (when the case shall be heard in any petty sessions district), and to the provisions of the acts relating to the divisional police offices, (when the case shall be heard in the police district of Dublin metropolis), so far as the said provisions shall be consistent with any special provisions of this act; and when any fine or penalty is imposed at any of the divisional police offices of Dublin metropolis, or by the justices in any corporate town, under the provisions of this act, such fines and penalties shall be paid over to the same purposes, and appropriated and applied in the same manner, as is now by law authorised in respect of fines and penalties imposed at such divisional police offices, or by the justices in any such corporate town respectively.

11. In Ireland any person who has been convicted of any offence punishable by this act may appeal to the next court of quarter sessions to be held in the same division of the county where the order shall be made by any justice or justices in any petty sessions district, or to the recorder at his next sessions where the order shall be made by the divisional justices in the police district of Dublin metropolis, or to the recorder of any corporate or borough town when the order shall be made by any justice or justices in such corporate or borough town, (unless when any such sessions shall commence within seven days from the date of any such order, in which case, if the appellant sees fit, the appeal may be made to the next succeeding sessions to be held for such division or town); and it shall be lawful for such court of quarter sessions or recorder, as the case may be, to decide such appeal, if made in such form and manner, and with such notices, as are required by the Petty Sessions Acts respectively hereinbefore mentioned as to appeals against orders made by justices at petty sessions; and all the provisions of the said Petty Sessions Acts respectively as to making appeals and as to executing the orders made on appeal, or the original orders where the appeals shall not be duly prosecuted, shall also apply to any appeal or like order to be made under the provisions of this act.

12. The expense of executing this act shall be borne, in the city of London and the liberties thereof, out of the consolidated rates raised by the commissioners of sewers of the city of London and the liberties thereof, in the rest of the metropolis out of any rates or funds applicable to the purposes of the Act for the better Local Management of the Metropolis, and in counties out of the county rate, and in boroughs out of the borough fund, or out of the rogue money in counties in Scotland.

13. Nothing in this act contained shall be held to affect the power of proceeding by indictment, or to take away any other remedy against any offender under this act.

14. In the construction of this act the words "articles of food or drink" shall (if not inconsistent with the context or subject-matter) include not only all alimentary substances, whether solids or liquids, but also all eatables or drinkables whatsoever, not being medical drugs or articles usually taken or sold as medicines; but this act shall not be construed so as to affect the ordinary reduction of the strength of foreign, British, or colonial spirits by persons licensed and paying duties under the excise.

CAP. LXXXVII.

An Act to remove Doubts as to the Authority of the Senior Member of the Council of the Governor-General of India in the Absence of the President. [15th August, 1860.]

Whereas doubts have arisen, where the Governor-General of India has nominated some member of his council to be president of the said council during his absence, under the provisions of the act of the session holden in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 85, and the president so appointed is absent owing to indisposition or other cause, whether it is competent to the senior member of the council present at the council to preside and exercise the powers and authorities which during the absence of the Governor-General, where no such president is appointed, such senior member is competent to exercise under the provisions of the act of the session holden in the 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 79, and it is expedient that such doubts should be removed: be it therefore declared and enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. Whenever a president of the council of the Governor-General of India, appointed by the said Governor-General under the provisions of the said act of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, is, from indisposition or other cause, absent from any meeting of the council, (the Governor-General also continuing absent therefrom), it is and shall be deemed to have been lawful for the senior member of the council who is present at such meeting to preside at the council, and to exercise the powers and authorities which during the absence of the Governor-General he is competent to exercise under the provisions of the said act of the 39 & 40 Geo. 3, where no such president is appointed.

CAP. LXXXVIII.

An Act to extend certain Provisions for Admiralty Jurisdiction in the Colonies to Her Majesty's Territories in India. [13th August, 1860.]

Sect. 1. Provisions of the recited act to extend to India.

2. Provision for persons entitled to be tried by the Supreme Court of a Presidency.

Whereas an act was passed in the session holden in the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 98, "to provide for the prosecution and trial in her Majesty's colonies of offences committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty," and by such act it was provided, that for the purposes thereof the word "colony" should mean any island, plantation, colony, dominion, fort, or factory of her Majesty, except the United Kingdom, and the islands of Man, Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, and Sark, and the islands adjacent thereto respectively, and except also all such parts and places as were under the government of the East India Company: and whereas it is expedient that the provisions of the said act should extend to all parts and places heretofore under the government of the East India Company, in like manner as to other colonial and foreign possessions of her Majesty: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. So much of the said act as excepts the parts and places then under the government of the East India Company from the interpretation of the word "colony" shall be repealed, and, for the purposes of the said act, the word "colony" therein shall include and apply to every part and place heretofore under the government of the East India Company, or which may be under the government of her Majesty in India, and all the provisions of the said act shall be construed and take effect accordingly.

2. Provided always, that where any person within any place in India is charged with the commission of any offence in respect of which jurisdiction is given by the said act, or where any person charged with the commission of any such offence is brought for trial under the said act to any place in India, if at any time before his trial he make it appear to the court exercising criminal jurisdiction in the place where he is so charged or brought for trial, that in case the offence charged had been committed in such place he could have been tried only in the Supreme Court of one of the three Presidencies in India, and claim to be tried by such a Supreme Court accordingly, the said court exercising criminal jurisdiction as aforesaid shall certify the fact and claim to the governor of such place, or chief local authority thereof, and such governor or chief local authority thereupon shall order and cause the person charged to be sent in custody to such one of the Presidencies as such governor shall think fit, for trial before the Supreme Court of such Presidency, and the said Supreme Court, and all public officers and other persons in the Presidency, shall have the same jurisdiction and authorities, and proceed in the same manner in relation to the person charged with such offence, as if the same had been committed, or originally charged to have been committed, within the limits of the ordinary jurisdiction of such Supreme Court.

CAP. LXXXIX.

An Act to extend in certain Cases the Provisions of the Superannuation Act, 1859. [13th August, 1860.]

Sect. 1. Superannuation Act, 1859, to extend to cases of joint service in the office of Secretary of State for India and in the permanent civil service.

CAP. XC.

An Act to repeal the Duties on Game Certificates and Certificates to deal in Game, and to impose in lieu thereof Duties on Excise Licenses and Certificates for the like Purposes. [13th August, 1860.]

Sect. 1. After the passing of this act the duties in respect of certificates to kill and deal in game, as contained in the 52 Geo. 3, c. 93, Schedule (L.), the 56 Geo. 3, c. 56, and the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, repealed.

2. In lieu of duties repealed, the duties herein named to be levied.
3. Duties granted to be excise duties under the Commissioners of Inland Revenue.
4. License to be taken out for taking or killing game in Great Britain. Penalty for neglect.
5. Exceptions and exemptions.
6. Nothing herein to alter the 11 & 12 Vict. cc. 29, 30, except that "game certificate" in the said acts, and also in the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, shall be read as "license to kill game."
7. Licenses may be taken out on behalf of assessed servants acting as gamekeepers for persons having right to kill game, or under deputations from lords of manors.
8. On change of gamekeeper, or revocation of deputation, license may be continued to successor.
9. Such licenses not available for acts done out of limits of the manor for which the parties are appointed gamekeepers.
10. Persons doing any act requiring a license to kill game to produce the same on demand, or declare their names, places of residence, &c. Penalty for refusal.
11. Licenses to be void if party be convicted of any offence under the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, or the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 68.
12. Commissioners to publish lists of persons licensed to kill game.
13. Provisions of the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, and the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 35, relating to licenses to deal in game, to be in force throughout the United Kingdom.
14. Persons licensed by justices to deal in game to pay for and obtain a license under this act.
15. Licenses to deal in game under this act to be granted only to those who have obtained licenses from the justices. List of persons licensed to be kept for inspection.
16. By whom licenses shall be granted, and form thereof. Duration and expiration of licenses.
17. The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 81, relating to game certificates in Ireland, to continue in force.
18. Licenses and certificates to be available throughout the United Kingdom.
19. The 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 49, repealed.

Be it enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. From and after the passing of this act the respective duties of assessed taxes now payable under the several acts of Parliament in that behalf in respect of certificates to kill game in Great Britain, and to deal in game in England, and all the provisions, rules, and directions for assessing, charging, and collecting any of the said duties contained in Schedule (L.) of the act passed in the 52 Geo. 3, c. 93, and also the duties now payable in Ireland under the act passed in the 56 Geo. 3, c. 56, in respect of every certificate of having registered a deputation as a gamekeeper, and in respect of every certificate to authorise any person, not being a gamekeeper, to kill game in Ireland, and also the 18th and 20th sections of the act passed in the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, shall respectively cease and determine, and the same are hereby repealed, except as to any arrears of the said duties respectively, and as to any penalties incurred before the commencement of this act.

2. In lieu of the duties hereby repealed there shall be granted, charged, and paid for and upon the several licenses and certificates to take or kill game, and licenses to deal in game hereinafter mentioned, the respective duties or sums of money hereinafter expressed or denoted; that is to say—

For a license in Great Britain or a certificate in Ireland to be taken out by every person who shall use any dog, gun, net, or other engine for the purpose of taking or killing any game whatever, or any woodcock, snipe, quail, or landrail, or any coney, or any deer, or shall take or kill by any means whatever, or shall assist in any manner in the taking or killing by any means whatever, of any game, or any woodcock, snipe, quail, or landrail, or any coney, or any deer—

If such license or certificate shall be taken out after the 6th April, and before the 1st November,

To expire on the 5th April in the following year .. .. . £3 0 0

To expire on the 31st October in the same year in which the license or certificate shall be taken out .. 2 0 0

If such license or certificate shall be taken out on or after the 1st November,

To expire on the 5th April following .. 2 0 0

Provided always, that any person having the right to kill game on any lands in England or Scotland shall be entitled to take out a license to authorise any servant, for whom he shall be chargeable to the duty of assessed taxes as a gamekeeper, to kill game upon the same lands, upon payment of the duty of .. .. . 2 0 0

And for every license to deal in game in England, Scotland, or Ireland, to be granted under this act .. .. . 2 0 0

3. The duties by this act granted shall be under the management of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, and shall be deemed to be excise duties, and all the powers, provisions, clauses, regulations, and directions contained in any act relating to excise duties or to penalties under excise acts, and now or hereafter in force, shall respectively be of full force and effect with respect to the duties by this act granted, and to the penalties hereby imposed, so far as the same are or may be applicable, and shall be observed, applied, and enforced for and in the collecting, securing, and recovering of the said duties and penalties hereby granted and imposed respectively, and otherwise in relation thereto, so far as the same shall be consistent with and not superseded by the express provisions of this act, as fully and effectually as if the same had been herein repeated and specially enacted in this act with reference to the said last-mentioned duties and penalties respectively.

4. Every person, before he shall in Great Britain take, kill, or pursue, or aid or assist in any manner in the taking, killing, or pursuing, by any means whatever, or use any dog, gun, net, or other engine for the purpose of taking, killing, or pursuing any game, or any woodcock, snipe, quail, or landrail, or any coney, or any deer, shall take out a proper license to kill game under this act, and pay the duty hereby made payable thereon; and if any person shall do any such act as hereinbefore mentioned, in Great Britain, without having duly taken out and having in force such license as aforesaid, he shall forfeit the sum of 20l.

5. The following exceptions and exemptions from the duties and provisions of this act are hereby made and granted; that is to say—

Exceptions.

- (1). The taking of woodcocks and snipes with nets or springes in Great Britain.
- (2). The taking or destroying of conies in Great Britain by the proprietor of any warren or of any inclosed ground whatever, or by the tenant of lands, either by himself or by his direction or permission.
- (3). The pursuing and killing of hares respectively by coursing with greyhounds, or by hunting with beagles or other hounds.
- (4). The pursuing and killing of deer by hunting with hounds.
- (5). The taking and killing of deer in any inclosed lands by the owner or occupier of such lands, or by his direction or permission.

Exemptions.

- (1). Any of the royal family.
- (2). Any person appointed a gamekeeper on behalf of her Majesty by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods, Forests, and Land Revenues, under the authority of any act of Parliament relating to the land revenues of the Crown.

- (3). Any person aiding or assisting in the taking or killing of any game, or any woodcock, snipe, quail, landrail, or coney, or any deer, in the company or presence and for the use of another person who shall have duly obtained, according to the directions of this act, and in his own right, a license to kill game, and who shall by virtue of such license then and there use his own dog, gun, net, or other engine for the taking or killing of such game, woodcock, snipe, quail, landrail, coney, or deer, and who shall not act therein by virtue of any deputation or appointment.
- (4). And, as regards the killing of hares only, all persons who, under the provisions of the two several acts, the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 29 and c. 30, respectively, are authorised to kill hares in England and Scotland respectively, without obtaining an annual game certificate.

6. Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to repeal, alter, or affect any of the provisions of the said two several acts of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 29 and c. 30, further than that the term "game certificate" in the said acts respectively used shall be construed to mean a license to kill game under the provisions of this act, and shall be so read accordingly; and that the term "game certificate," used in the act of the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, shall be construed and read in like manner; and that wherever in the said last-mentioned act the duty of 5s. 13s. 6d. on a game certificate is mentioned the duty of 3l. on a license to kill game shall be read in lieu.

7. Any person having the right to kill game on any lands in England or Scotland, and being charged or liable to be charged to the assessed tax on servants in respect of any gamekeeper, by whomsoever deputed or appointed, and whether deputed or appointed or not, and any person granting a deputation or appointment in Great Britain to the servant of any other person who shall be duly charged to the assessed tax on servants in respect of such servant, whether as gamekeeper or in any other capacity, with power and authority to take or kill any game, shall respectively be at liberty to take out a license to kill game on behalf of any such servant, on payment of the duty of 2l., for the year ending the 6th April, and such license shall exempt the servant named therein during his continuance in the same capacity and service, and on his quitting such service shall also exempt any servant who shall succeed him in the same service and capacity, or who shall succeed to the deputation of the same manor, or royalty, or lands, within the year for which the license is granted, during the remainder of such year; and no such servant on whose behalf a license shall have been duly obtained as aforesaid shall be required to obtain a license for himself, or be liable to any penalty by reason of not obtaining a license in his own name.

8. Every such license to kill game taken out on behalf of any such servant as aforesaid shall, upon the revocation of any such deputation or appointment, or on his quitting the service of the master by whom such license shall have been taken out, be from thenceforth of no further effect as to the person named therein as such servant, or so deputed or appointed as aforesaid; but if within the year for which such license was granted the said master, on the quitting of such servant, shall employ another servant as gamekeeper in his stead, or the person by whom such deputation or appointment was made shall, on the revocation thereof, make a new deputation or appointment to any person in his service, or in the service of the same master by whom such license shall have been taken out, and who shall have been charged or be chargeable to the said assessed tax on servants as aforesaid, the officer by whom such license was granted, or the proper officer appointed by the commissioners in that behalf, shall renew such license for the remainder of that year, on behalf of the fresh servant or the person so newly appointed, as the case may be, without payment of any further duty, by indorsing on such license the name and place of abode of the said last-mentioned servant, or the person to whom such last-mentioned deputation or appointment shall have been granted, and declaring the same to be a renewed license free of duty.

9. Provided always, that no such license taken out for or on behalf of any person, being such servant or acting under a deputation or appointment as aforesaid, shall be available for such person in any suit or prosecution where proof shall be given of his doing or having done any act for which a license is required under this act on land on which his master had not a right to kill game.

10. If any person shall be discovered doing any act whatever in Great Britain, in respect whereof a license to kill game is required under this act, by any officer of Inland Revenue, or by any lord or gamekeeper of the manor, royalty, or lands wherein such person shall then be, or by any person having duly taken out a proper license to kill game under this act, or by the owner, landlord, lessee, or occupier of the land on which such person shall then be, it shall be lawful for such officer or other person aforesaid to demand and require from the person so acting the production of a license to kill game issued to him; and the person so acting is hereby required to produce such license to the person so demanding the production thereof, and to permit him to read the same, and (if he shall think fit) to take a copy thereof, or of any part thereof; or in case no such license shall be produced to the person demanding the same as aforesaid, then it shall be lawful for the person having made such demand to require the person so acting forthwith to declare to him his Christian and surname, and place of residence, and the place at which he shall have taken out such license; and if such person shall, after such demand made, wilfully refuse to produce and shew a license to kill game issued to him, or in default thereof as aforesaid to give to the person so demanding the same his Christian and surname, and place of residence, and the place at which he shall have taken out such license, or if he shall produce any false or fictitious license, or give any false or fictitious name or place, or if he shall refuse to permit any license which he may produce to be read, or a copy thereof, or of any part thereof, to be taken, he shall forfeit the sum of 20*l*.

11. If any person, having obtained a license to kill game under this act, shall be convicted of any offence under sect. 30 of the said act of the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, or under the act of the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 68, the said license shall thenceforth be null and void.

12. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue shall, when and as they shall see fit, cause lists of the names and residences of the several persons to or for whom licenses to kill game have been granted under this act to be inserted in such newspapers, or published in such other manner, as to them shall seem proper, distinguishing in such lists the persons acting under any deputation, appointment, or authority from others, and the manors, royalties, or lands for which deputations, appointments, or authorities have been granted, and also distinguishing the rate of duty paid for such licenses.

13. All the clauses and provisions of the two several acts passed respectively in the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, and the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 35, relating to the granting of licenses by justices of the peace to deal in game, and to the holding of special sessions by such justices in their respective divisions or districts for the purpose of granting such licenses, and also all the clauses, provisions, and penalties contained in the said acts, or either of them, relating to dealers in game, and to the selling of game, either by or to such dealers or others, shall, so far as the same are consistent with the express provisions of this act, and as the same are altered or amended by this act, extend to and be of full force and effect in and throughout the whole of the United Kingdom, and shall be observed, applied, and enforced as if the same, so altered or amended, and made consistent with the express provisions of this act, had been herein repeated and specially enacted: provided always, that no person shall be authorised to sell game to any licensed dealer unless he shall have taken out a St. license under this act.

14. Every person who shall have obtained any license to deal in game from the justices of the peace, under the provisions of the said two several acts in the preceding clause mentioned, shall annually, and during the continuance of such license, and before he shall be empowered to deal in game under such license, obtain a further license to deal in game under this act, on payment of the duty hereby charged thereon; and if any person, obtaining a license from the said justices as aforesaid, shall purchase or sell or otherwise deal in game before he shall obtain a license to deal in game under the provisions of this act, he shall forfeit the sum of 20*l*.

15. Provided always, that no license to deal in game shall be granted under the provisions of this act to any person, except upon the production of a license for the like purpose duly granted to him by the justices of the peace as aforesaid, and then in force; and every officer appointed or authorised to grant licenses to deal in game under this act shall in each year make out a list, to be kept in his possession, containing the name and place of abode of every person to whom he shall have granted or issued a license to deal in game under this act, and such officer shall at all seasonable hours produce such list to any person making application to inspect the same, and shall be entitled to demand and receive for such inspection the sum of 1*s*.

16. All licenses and certificates to kill game and to deal in game respectively, under the provisions of this act, shall be in such form as the Commissioners of Inland Revenue shall from time to time provide in that behalf, and shall denote the amount of duty charged thereon respectively, and shall be granted, signed, and issued at the chief office of Inland Revenue in London, Edinburgh, and Dublin respectively, and by the several supervisors of excise in their respective districts, or by such other officers of Inland Revenue, and at such places, as the said commissioners shall think fit to employ and appoint respectively in that behalf; and every such license shall contain the proper Christian and surname and place of residence of the person to whom the same shall be granted, with any other particulars which the Commissioners of Inland Revenue may direct to be inserted therein, and shall be dated on the day when the same was actually issued, and shall have effect and be in force upon the day of the issuing thereof, and shall expire on the day therein mentioned for the termination thereof.

17. All the clauses, powers, provisions, and regulations, pains, and penalties, contained in or imposed by the act passed in the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 81, relating to certificates to kill game in Ireland, shall be of full force and effect, and shall be applied in Ireland to the certificates to be granted under this act, and the duties hereby imposed thereon, as fully and effectually as if the same were herein repeated, and specially enacted in reference to such last-mentioned certificates and duties.

18. Every license and certificate to kill game taken out respectively in Great Britain and Ireland under this act, by or on behalf of any person in his own right, and not as a gamekeeper or servant, shall be available for the killing of game in any part of the United Kingdom.

19. The act passed in the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 49, intituled "An Act to exempt Persons who have procured Game Certificates in Great Britain from the Duty on Game Certificates in Ireland, and to authorise the Persons who have paid Duty on Game Certificates in Ireland to kill Game in Great Britain, upon paying the additional Duty only," shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

CAP. XCI.

An Act for removing Doubts respecting the Craven Scholarships in the University of Oxford, and for enabling the University to retain the Custody of certain Testamentary Documents.
[13th August, 1860.]

Sect. 1. Removing doubts as to scholarships founded by the will of Lord Craven.

2. Stat. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. University to retain the custody of certain testamentary documents, and transmit an index thereof to Court of Probate.

Whereas it is expedient to remove certain doubts respecting the Craven scholarships in the University of Oxford, and to enable the university to retain the custody of certain testamentary documents: be it enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. Whereas doubts have arisen whether the scholarships founded by the will of John Lord Craven, and commonly called "The Craven Scholarships," are included within the words "university or college emolument," in the act of the 17 & 18 Vict.: be it enacted, that the said Craven scholarships shall be deemed to be university emoluments within the meaning of the said act, and that all statutes or regulations which heretofore, and since the passing of the said act, have been made by the university, and approved by her Majesty in Council, conformably to the conditions and provisions of the said act, in relation to the said Craven scholarships, shall have the same force and effect as if the said scholarships had been expressly named and included in the said act as university emoluments; and in elections to the said scholarships no person shall be entitled to preference by reason of his being of the same or kindred of the founder: provided that nothing herein, or in the said act, or in such statutes or regulations contained shall preclude the High Court of Chancery from augmenting from time to time the number of scholars, whenever the increased income of the foundation shall permit.

2. And whereas, by the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, it was enacted that "the acting judge and registrar of every court, and other person now having jurisdiction to grant probate or administration, and every person having the custody of the documents and papers of or belonging to such court or person, shall, upon receiving a requisition for that purpose, under the seal of the Court of Probate, from a registrar, and at the time and in the manner mentioned in such requisition, transmit to the Court of Probate, or to such other place as in such requisition shall be specified, all records, wills, grants, probates, letters of administration, administration bonds, notes of administration, court books, calendars, deeds, processes, acts, proceedings, writs, documents, and every other instrument relating exclusively or principally to matters or causes testamentary, to be deposited and arranged in the registry of each district, or in the principal registry, as the case may require, so as to be easy of reference, under the control and direction of the court:" and whereas, in the case of the court of the chancellor of the University of Oxford, it has been found inconvenient to separate the testamentary records, instruments, and papers of or belonging to the said court from the other records, instruments, and papers thereof: be it further enacted, that the vice-chancellor of the said university shall, as soon as conveniently may be, cause to be made an index to such of the records and other instruments and papers whatsoever of or belonging to the said court as relate exclusively or principally to matters or causes testamentary, which shall be as accurate as the nature of the said records and other instruments and papers will permit, and shall transmit a copy of such index to the principal registrar of her Majesty's Court of Probate, and such transmission thereof shall be a sufficient compliance with the above-recited enactment of the said act, so far as regards the court of the chancellor of the said university; and it shall thereafter be lawful for the said university, notwithstanding the said act, to retain the custody of all the records, documents, and papers to which such index shall relate: provided that all the said records, instruments, and papers shall at all convenient times be liable to be inspected, and to have extracts or copies taken therefrom, by the authority of the principal registrar of her Majesty's Court of Probate, or of the district registrar of the same court at Oxford, on payment of the same fees as would have been payable if such records, instruments, and papers had been deposited in the principal registry, or in the registry of the Oxford district, as the case might have required, such fees to be paid to the same person or persons as would in that event have been entitled to receive the same; and that no officer of the said university, or of the said court of the chancellor thereof, shall be entitled to receive any fee from any person inspecting the said records, or taking extracts or copies therefrom by the authority aforesaid.

42. Formation of district within which extraordinary charge in respect of hop-grounds and market-gardens shall be payable.
43. Power to enter on land.
44. Recited acts and this act to be as one.

Whereas an act was passed in the session of Parliament held in the 6 & 7 Will. 4, [c. 71], intituled "An Act for the Commutation of Tithes in England and Wales," and the said act has been amended, and the provisions thereof have been extended, by acts passed in the sessions of Parliament held in the first year, the first and second years, the second and third years, the third year, the fifth and sixth years, the ninth and tenth years, and the tenth and eleventh years of the reign of her present Majesty: and whereas it is expedient that the said acts should be amended, and that the provisions thereof should be further extended in manner hereinafter mentioned: be it enacted &c. as follows:—

SECT. 1. Where corn-rents are payable by virtue of any local act of Parliament, in commutation of the whole or part of the tithes of any parish, and such corn-rents shall be subject to variation at certain periods under the provisions of the same act, the commissioners, upon the application in writing of the owners of lands liable to the payment of the major part in value of such corn-rents, or of the persons to whom a major part in value of such rents are payable, at any time at which the said corn-rents might be subjected to variation under such local act, or at any other time, upon the joint application in writing of the owners of lands liable to the payment of the major part in value of such corn-rents, and of the persons to whom a major part in value of such rents are payable, may, by an award under their hands and seal, convert the same into a rent-charge, to be thenceforth and for ever thereafter payable in like manner, and subject to the like incidents, as rent-charges awarded under the said recited acts are payable and subject to: provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to render any such rent-charge liable to parochial or other rates or taxes from which the corn-rents in respect of which such rent-charge shall have been awarded were free and exempt.

2. Wherever the local act provides that the average prices upon which any corn-rents shall be varied shall be taken from any county or from towns from which corn returns are made, the commissioners shall calculate the rent-charge to be awarded by them in lieu of such corn-rents upon the returns for such county or such towns; and where no corn returns are made from the towns so named, the commissioners shall select two towns in the same or any adjoining county from which there are returns, and give notice thereof in such manner as to them shall seem fit, and shall appoint a time (being not less than twenty-one days from the date of the notice) within which objections to such selection may be signified in writing to the commissioners by any person interested; and if there be any such objections, the commissioners shall consider the same, and shall either confirm the selection, or select some other towns, as they may think fit.

3. The commissioners shall calculate the rent-charge to be awarded in lieu of any such corn-rents upon the average prices for the number of years next preceding the date of the application to them, which shall be provided by such local act as the basis of variation, having due regard to the average prices upon which such corn-rents were ascertained; and such calculation, where practicable, shall be made with reference to the particular grain mentioned in the local act under which such corn-rents are payable; or, if there shall be no returns of such grain, upon the average prices of wheat, barley, and oats.

4. The commissioners shall apportion the rent-charge to be awarded by them in lieu of corn-rents upon and among the lands heretofore subject to such corn-rents, either by a general schedule or a schedule in detail of the same lands, to be annexed to and form part of their award, and with or without a map of the same lands, or any part thereof, but the commissioners shall not require a map unless the same shall in their opinion be rendered necessary for the identification of any such lands; and the commissioners shall deposit a draft of such award for inspection in the same manner as by the said recited acts is required in reference to an instrument of apportionment, and shall cause notice of such deposit to be given in such manner as to them shall seem fit, and shall by such notice specify the time (being not less than twenty-one days) within which objections in writing to such proposed award may be signified to the commissioners; and in case any notice of objection shall be given within the time limited as aforesaid, the commissioners shall appoint a time and place for hearing such objections, and shall by themselves or by an assistant commissioner take such objections into their consideration; and if there be no notice of objections, or when the said commissioners or assistant commissioner shall have heard and determined all such objections, the commissioners shall confirm such award, with or without amendments, as they shall see fit, and such award shall thenceforth be binding and conclusive on all persons whomsoever, subject to the provision hereinafter contained, and shall be conclusive evidence on every matter in the said award set forth and contained.

5. Any person dissatisfied with the said award, and who shall be desirous of appealing against the same, shall have the same power of appeal as is given by the said first-recited act in the case of a decision given under the 45th section of such act, notwithstanding that the yearly payment in dispute shall be less than 20*l.*; and the court is hereby empowered to amend such award, or to remit the same to the commissioners to be amended by them, in such manner as the said court shall direct, and the commissioners shall thereupon amend the same in conformity to such direction, and the award so amended shall be binding and conclusive on all persons whomsoever.

6. The commissioners shall have access to the books of the comptroller of corn returns for the time being, and shall be furnished by him with such information as they may require for the purposes of any award of rent-charge in lieu of corn-rents.

7. In making any such award, and any inquiries incident thereto, the commissioners shall have the same powers as to the attendance and examination of witnesses, the production of documents, and all other matters, as are given by the said recited acts in matters relating to the commutation of tithes; and all expenses of or incident to any such award, or any part thereof, shall be borne and paid by and amongst the owners of lands heretofore liable to such corn-rents, and the persons to whom the same were payable respectively, in such proportion and manner as the commissioners shall direct, and be recoverable in like manner as expenses under the said recited acts are recoverable.

8. The commissioners shall cause to be made two copies of every such award of rent-charge in lieu of corn-rents, which copies shall be sealed by them, and be deposited in like manner, and subject to all the like incidents, as provided by the said recited acts in reference to the sealed copies of an instrument of apportionment.

9. The payment of any rent-charge awarded in lieu of corn-rents which shall be in arrear may be enforced by the same ways and means as payment of rent-charge in arrear may be enforced under the provisions of the said recited acts, or may be enforced, at the option of the person to whom the same rent-charge is payable, by the same ways and means as are provided by the local act for the recovery of the corn-rents in lieu of which such rent-charge shall have been awarded.

10. In any case of altered apportionment, in which the consent of the whole of the landowners interested in such alteration shall not be signified thereto, the commissioners shall, in lieu of the service of notice required by the said acts, cause a draft of the proposed altered apportionment to be deposited for inspection, in the same manner as by the said first-recited act is required in reference to an instrument of apportionment, and shall cause notice to be given of such deposit in such manner as to them shall seem fit, and shall by such notice specify the time (being not less than twenty-one days) within which objections in writing to such proposed altered apportionment may be signified to the commissioners; and in case any notice of objection shall be given within the time limited as aforesaid, the commissioners shall appoint a time and place for hearing such objection, and shall, by themselves or by an assistant commissioner, take such objection into their consideration; and if there be no notice of objection, or when the said commissioners or assistant commissioner shall have heard and determined every such objection, the commissioners shall confirm such altered apportionment, with or without amendments, as they shall see fit.

11. With the consent of the owner or owners of any lands charged with rent-charge under any instrument of apportionment, whether payable to one or more owners of rent-charge, and without regard to the mode in which the same rent-charge is apportioned by the said instrument, the commissioners may by an altered apportionment re-apportion and re-distribute the same rent-charge over and amongst the said lands, or any part thereof, and to the exclusion of any of such lands; but no rent-charge shall be charged upon any land to the exclusion of other land of the same owner, unless the land so charged with rent-charge is held for an estate in fee-simple or fee-tail in possession, or unless the same and the land so excluded are settled to the same uses.

12. Where, through the removal or alteration of fences between land charged with rent-charge under any instrument of apportionment and land upon which no rent-charge is now charged or which is tithe-free, it becomes impossible or difficult to distinguish the limits of the land so charged with rent-charge, the commissioners may, with the consent of the owner of the said lands, include the whole of such lands in any instrument of altered apportionment to be made by the said commissioners, and may apportion the rent-charge as well on the said land not heretofore charged as on the said land heretofore liable to the payment thereof, or on any part thereof, provided that the whole of the lands on which such rent-charge is apportioned are held for an estate in fee-simple or fee-tail in possession, or are settled to the same uses.

13. No land shall be charged with rent-charge payable to a different owner than the rent-charge previously charged thereon was payable to, without the consent in writing of the owner of the rent-charge so proposed to be charged, except in cases of altered apportionment after inclosure.

14. It shall not be necessary to obtain the consent of any landowner to an altered apportionment whose lands are not charged with rent-charge by such altered apportionment.

15. Whenever it shall appear to the commissioners that any instrument of apportionment shall have been altered by successive instruments of altered apportionment, so as in the judgment of the commissioners to render the collection of the rent-charge upon the lands included in such apportionment and altered apportionments unreasonably inconvenient or difficult, the commissioners may, upon the application of the person or persons entitled to such rent-charge, or any part thereof, and without notice to or the consent of any owner of such lands, make a further instrument of altered apportionment as regards the whole of the said lands, or such portions thereof as to them shall seem fit, but without making any alteration in the amount charged on the lands of any particular owner; and the altered apportionment so made by the commissioners shall be taken to be an amendment of and in substitution for so much of the said original apportionment and altered apportionments as relates to the lands included in the said lastly made altered apportionment.

16. Whenever any new boundaries of parishes shall have been or shall be set out upon any inclosure or otherwise, and it shall appear to the commissioners that the apportionment of the rent-charge in such parishes is thereby rendered inconvenient, the commissioners may make and confirm an altered instrument of apportionment adapted to the altered distribution of the lands in such parishes or any of them, and to the new boundaries which shall have been so set out, or otherwise the commissioners may, by an order under their hands and seal, declare the lands which shall be affected by such alteration of boundaries, either with or without any other lands comprised in such inclosure, and whether such lands are situate in one or more parishes, to be a separate district for the purposes hereinafter mentioned, and may make and confirm an altered instrument of apportionment adapted to the altered distribution of such lands, with reference to the owners both of the lands and rent-charge in such district, and the commissioners may determine that the amount of rent-charge payable to each of the owners of rent-charge in such district shall be fixed and apportioned upon such particular lands as to them shall seem convenient, so that no lands are charged with more than their due proportion of rent-charge; and every such determination shall be binding and conclusive, and such altered apportionment, when confirmed, shall be annexed to the original apportionment for that parish from which the greatest amount of rent-charge is payable under the altered apportionment, and counterparts thereof shall be annexed to the original apportionment for each of the other parishes comprised in such district, and copies thereof shall be deposited in respect of each several parish comprised in the district, in conformity with the provisions of the said recited acts.

17. All the powers given by the said recited acts or by this act in relation to the alteration of instruments of apportionment shall extend to all altered apportionments, and to awards of rent-charge in lieu of corn-rents, and to awards under local acts by which any rent-charge is awarded in lieu of tithes, glebe, or commonable or other rights or easements.

18. In any case in which tithes have been commuted for a sum or rate per head, to be paid for each head of cattle or stock turned on land subject to common rights, or held or enjoyed in common, during the whole of the year, the commissioners may, upon the application in writing of any person entitled to receive such sum or rate per head, or of any person who may be liable to pay the same or any part thereof, by a supplemental award and apportionment, by way of supplement to the apportionment under which such rate per head shall be now payable, convert the same into a gross rent-charge, to be thereafter payable out of such land.

19. Where a gross rent-charge has been made payable in respect of the tithes of any gated or stinted pasture, and such gates or stints are rated to the relief of the poor, the commissioners may, by the instrument of apportionment to be made of such rent-charge, or by a supplemental award and apportionment, where an apportionment shall have been already made, upon the application in writing of the person entitled to such rent-charge, or of any owner of a gate or stint, apportion such gross rent-charge pro rata upon the gates or stints; and after such apportionment, or supplemental award and apportionment, the owner of such rent-charge shall have the same powers for the recovery of any arrears thereof, by distress on the goods and chattels of the person rated to the relief of the poor in respect of the gates or stints the rent-charge upon which is in arrear, as are given by the said recited acts for the recovery of rent-charge in arrear; and such powers of distress may be exercised upon the goods and chattels of such person, whether found upon the said pasture or elsewhere.

20. In every other case in which a gross rent-charge is charged upon any land subject to common rights, or held or enjoyed in common during the whole of the year, the commissioners shall, upon the application in writing of the person entitled to such rent-charge, or of any person liable to pay the same or any part thereof, convene a meeting of the owners of such land and persons liable to pay such rent-charge, of which twenty-one days' notice shall be given, in such manner as to the commissioners shall seem fit; and the majority in value of the persons attending such meeting may determine whether such rent-charge shall be commuted for an equivalent part of the land on which it is chargeable, or be redeemed for a sum equal to twenty-five times the amount of such rent-charge, to be paid by a time to be limited by the commissioners; and may further determine, if the rent-charge is to be redeemed, whether the redemption money shall be raised by rate on the persons liable to such rent-charge, or by sale of a portion of such land: provided always, that if no determination be come to at such meeting, the commissioners may proceed to commute the rent-charge for land as hereinafter provided.

21. If the rent-charge is to be commuted for land, the commissioners shall define and set out the land to be so given, and shall vest the same in the owner of the rent-charge, by an award to be made by them, in like manner as awards of exchange of glebe for other land are made under the said recited acts, and subject to all the like incidents.

22. If the rent-charge is to be redeemed for a sum to be raised by the sale of a portion of the land liable to such rent-charge, the commissioners may define and set out such part of the land as may be sufficient in value to meet the redemption money and the expenses of sale, and may sell and dispose of the same by public auction or private contract, as they may think expedient.

23. Upon every such sale the commissioners shall sign and deliver to each purchaser a receipt for his purchase money, which shall be a sufficient discharge for the same; and upon receipt of the whole purchase money for any of the lands which shall be sold as aforesaid, the commissioners shall convey such lands, and the fee-simple and inheritance thereof in possession, by conveyance under their hands and seal, to such uses and in such manner as such purchasers shall direct; and after such conveyance the premises conveyed shall be freehold of inheritance, and shall be held to the uses and in manner expressed in such conveyance; and any such conveyance may be to the effect set forth in the schedule to this act, and shall be evidence of the regularity of the sale in pursuance of which such conveyance shall be made.

24. Wherever a sum or rate per head shall be in arrear, the arrears shall be recoverable by distress and impounding of any cattle, stock, goods, or chattels belonging to the person in respect of whose cattle or stock such sum or rate per head is in arrear, wherever the same may be found.

25. Where any lands, in respect to the cattle or stock upon which any sum or rate per head shall be payable, shall be inclosed, divided, allotted, or exchanged, under the powers of any general or local act of inclosure or otherwise, the commissioners may, by the altered apportionment which may be made by them, adapted to the altered distribution of the said lands, charge a rent-charge, equivalent to the amount of the sum or rate per head which shall have been previously payable, upon the lands which shall have been allotted under the said inclosure in lieu of the rights in respect of which the said sum or rate per head was made payable, which rent-charge shall be thereafter payable out of the same lands, in such manner and proportion as the said altered apportionment shall direct.

26. Where, by reason of the size of the map annexed to any instrument of apportionment, or other circumstances, the commissioners shall be of opinion that it is expedient that such map should be detached and held separate from the said instrument, the commissioners may, by an order under their hands, direct that the said map shall be so detached, and they may make the like order upon the application of the incumbent and churchwardens of any parish, or either of them, or the registrar of any diocese, in reference to the sealed copy of any instrument of apportionment belonging to any such parish, or held in the custody of such registrar, and thereupon every map so detached shall have the same force and effect and be referred to as if the same were annexed to the said apportionment, or the sealed copies thereof.

27. In any case in which an instrument of apportionment or any part thereof shall have been damaged or defaced, the commissioners may, by an order under their hands, require the sealed copy thereof which shall be deposited in the parish or registry of the diocese to be delivered up to them, for a time to be limited by such order, for the purpose of enabling them to restore such portions of the said instrument as shall have been so damaged or defaced, or of making an entire copy of the said instrument, which instrument so restored, or entire copy so made by them, being certified under their hands and seal, shall be of the same force and have the same effect as the said confirmed instrument of apportionment.

28. Whenever any person, other than the persons legally entitled to the possession of the same, shall have possession of the sealed copy of any confirmed instrument of apportionment, it shall be lawful for any two justices of the peace for the county or other jurisdiction within which the lands mentioned in the said apportionment are situate, upon the application of any person interested in the lands or rent-charge, and upon fourteen days' notice in writing of such application to the person or persons in whose custody such copy shall be at the time of such application, to hear and determine such application; and upon hearing such application the said justices may order such copy to be removed from the custody of the person holding the same, and to be deposited in such other custody as the said justices, having reference to the security and due preservation of such copy, and to the convenience of the parties interested therein, may think fit, and may impose a fine, not exceeding 20s., for each day that any such copy shall be retained, contrary to the terms of such order, upon the person so retaining it, and may make such further order concerning the notice to be given of such removal and deposit, and concerning the costs of such application and the said fine, or of any opposition thereto, as they may think reasonable.

29. If a rent-charge shall at any time be in arrear and unpaid, and in order to enforce payment thereof it shall become necessary for the person entitled to the same to give notice of his intention to distrain upon the lands liable to the payment thereof for the arrears of the said rent-charge, according to the provisions of the said recited acts, the owner of the rent-charge shall in all cases be entitled to 2s. 6d. for and in respect of each notice which shall have been so issued, and such sum shall be deemed and taken to be part of the rent-charge which is in arrear and unpaid, and shall be recoverable accordingly, in like manner as the said arrears of rent-charge are recoverable.

30. Notice of intention to distrain may be given in the manner provided by the said recited acts, or by sending it by the post in a registered letter to the office or usual place of abode of the person to whom the same is addressed.

31. Where, under any agreement or award which has been or hereafter shall be confirmed by the commissioners, the amount of the rent-charge agreed or awarded to be paid instead of the tithes of any parish, and which shall not have been apportioned, shall not exceed the sum of 15*l.*, the commissioners may, if they shall see fit, (and without the consent of the owner or owners of the lands chargeable with the said rent-charge, or of the person or persons for the time being entitled to the receipt thereof), by an order under their hands and seal, direct that such rent-charge shall be redeemed by the payment by the owners of the lands chargeable therewith, within such time as the commissioners shall by such order direct and appoint, of a sum equal to twenty-five times the amount of such rent-charge.

32. Whenever lands charged with rent-charge under any instrument of apportionment or altered apportionment shall be divided, for building or other purposes, into numerous plots, and it shall appear to the commissioners that no further apportionment of the said rent-charge can conveniently be made, the commissioners may, if they shall see fit, upon the application of any one owner of the said lands, and without the consent of any other owner, or of the person for the time being entitled to the receipt of the said rent-charge, and without limitation as to the amount thereof, by an order under their hands and seal, direct that such rent-charge shall be redeemed by the payment by the owners of the lands chargeable therewith, within such time as the commissioners shall by such order direct and appoint, of a sum equal to twenty-five times the amount of such rent-charge.

33. Whenever it shall be shewn, to the satisfaction of the commissioners, that, by reason of error as to boundary or otherwise, any rent-charge or portion of rent-charge shall have been charged, by any confirmed instrument of appor-tioument, on lands not within the parish in respect of the tithes of which the aggregate rent-charge, the apportionment of which shall have been so confirmed, was agreed or awarded to be paid, the commissioners may, if they shall see fit, upon the application of the owner or owners of the said lands, and without the consent of any owner of land in the said parish, or of the person for the time being entitled to the receipt of the said rent-charge, by an order under their hands and seal, direct that such rent-charge or portion of rent-charge so charged on lands not within the parish shall be redeemed by the payment by the owners of lands charged with the residue of the said rent-charge by the said apportionment, or any of them, within such time as the said commissioners shall by such order direct and appoint, of a sum equal to twenty-five times the amount of such rent-charge; and if there shall be any question touching the situation or boundary of the lands which shall be alleged to have been erroneously included in the said apportionment, the commissioners shall have the same powers for hearing and determining the same as are given by the said first-recited act for hearing and determining any difference whereby the making of an award of rent-charge in lieu of tithes is hindered.

34. Where any land has been made chargeable with rent-charges in lieu of tithes for more than one parish, the commissioners, on being satisfied thereof, may determine in respect of which parish the rent-charge ought to have been charged, and may, by order, direct such rent-charge to be paid in respect of such parish only.

35. Before the commissioners shall order the compulsory redemption of any rent-charge, they shall cause notice to be given of their intention in such manner as to them shall seem fit, and shall by such notice specify the time (being not less than twenty-one days) within which objections in writing to such proposed order may be signified to them; and in case any notice of objections shall be given within the time limited as aforesaid, the commissioners shall, by themselves or an assistant commissioner, take such objections into their consideration.

36. If the person absolutely entitled to the redemption money refuses to receive the same, or if the rent-charge be subject to incumbrances, and the commissioners shall consider that the incumbrancers should be protected, such redemption money shall be dealt with as is provided in cases where the owner of the rent-charge is only entitled thereto for a limited estate.

37. Where the money to be paid for the redemption of any rent-charge does not exceed 200*l.*, and the person for the time being entitled to such rent-charge shall be a corporation not authorised to make an absolute sale of such rent-charge otherwise than under the provisions of the said recited acts, the redemption money may be paid into the hands of trustees to be nominated by the commissioners, by order under their hands and seal, and the money, when so paid, shall be applied by the trustees, with the consent of the commissioners, to the purposes to which money to be paid for the redemption of any rent-charge into the Bank of England in the name of the Accountant-General is by the said recited acts directed to be applied; and upon every vacancy in the office of such trustees some other person shall be appointed by the said commissioners in like manner.

38. The provisions of the said recited acts respecting the redemption of rent-charge (except as otherwise by this act is provided) shall be applicable to all cases of redemption of rent-charge effected under this act.

39. For the purposes of making any altered apportionment, supplemental award and apportionment, or award of rent-charge in lieu of corn-rents, or for the purpose of collecting any redemption money which may have been fixed as hereinbefore provided, and not paid by the time in that behalf limited, and of assessing the same redemption money, and all expenses of or incidental to any such altered apportionment, supplemental award and apportionment, or award, or of any such redemption, (including, if the commissioners shall see fit, the expense of the assistant commissioner's attendance at any meetings which may be necessary in the matter of any such altered apportionment, supplemental award and apportionment, or award, or of any such redemption), between the owners of the lands liable to the rent-charge to be re-apportioned or redeemed, or to the rent-charge awarded in lieu of corn-rents, or persons to whom the said corn-rents were payable, the commissioners or an assistant commissioner may employ such land surveyors and tithe valuers or other persons as to them shall seem fit, and all the powers and provisions of the said recited acts concerning the valuers appointed for the purposes of an original apportionment of rent-charge, and concerning the assessment and recovery of the expenses of an original award of rent-charge or apportionment, so far as in the discretion of the commissioners shall seem fit, shall be and the same are hereby made applicable to the land surveyors, tithe valuers, or other persons so employed, and to the assessment, collection, and recovery of any such redemption money, and of all expenses incidental to any such altered apportionment, supplemental award and apportionment, or award, or to any such redemption; but the commissioners shall, before they proceed to collect any such redemption money or expenses, cause a schedule, shewing the total amount thereof, and the share thereof to be borne by each person interested, to be deposited for inspection, in the same manner as by the said recited acts is required in reference to an instrument of apportionment, and shall cause notice to be given of such deposit in such manner as to them shall seem fit, and shall by such notice specify the time (being not less than twenty-one days) within which objections in writing to such proposed apportionment of the redemption money and expenses may be signified to the commissioners; and in case any notice of objections shall be given within the time limited as aforesaid, the commissioners shall, by themselves or by an assistant commissioner, take such objections into their consideration; and if there be no such objections, or when the said commissioners or assistant commissioner shall have heard and determined all such objections, the commissioners shall proceed to collect the said redemption money and expenses as hereinbefore provided.

40. Whenever land or money payments, or both, have been given to the titheowners of any parish, and are now holden by them, instead of tithes, or glebe, or commonable or other rights or easements, and it shall appear that such land or money payments, or both, shall have been so given by virtue of any act of Parliament, the provisions of which have not been fully carried out, or by virtue of any arrangement which is not of legal validity, the commissioners may, if it shall appear just and expedient, having regard to all the circumstances of or incidental to the case, by an award confirm the titheowner in possession of the said land or money, or both, and may confirm and render valid any such arrangement, and may also award a rent-charge, subject to the provisions of the said recited acts, when and in such cases as to them shall seem fit; and, subject to such confirmation and award, the commissioners may extinguish the right of the titheowners to the perception of the said tithes, or their title to the said glebe rights or easements, or to the receipt of any rent-charge instead thereof, other than the rent-charge, if any, awarded over and above the lands or money, or both, so confirmed to them.

41. So much of the said recited acts as provides that the land given to any spiritual person, in exchange for glebe of any benefice, shall be free from incumbrances, and shall not be of copyhold or customary tenure, subject to arbitrary fine or the render of heriots, shall be repealed, and all conditions, charges, incumbrances, and every other incident affecting the land so given, shall upon such an exchange be transferred to the said glebe taken in exchange for the same land; and the glebe land taken in exchange for any copyhold or customary land shall be held of the lord of the same manor, under the same rent, custom, and services as the said copyhold or customary land previously was or ought to have been held, and without any new admittance in respect thereof, but the consent of the lord of the same manor shall be necessary to any exchange in which any land of copyhold or customary tenure shall be included.

42. Whenever the commissioners are requested, in the manner provided by the said recited acts, to charge an additional rent-charge, by way of extraordinary charge, upon any hop-grounds or market-gardens, newly cultivated as such, beyond the limits of any district for which an extraordinary charge for hop-grounds or market-gardens respectively shall have been already distinguished, the commissioners may declare the lands in the parish in which such newly-cultivated hop-grounds or market-gardens are situate a district within which the extraordinary charge to be then fixed by them shall be thereafter payable.

43. For the purpose of ascertaining the extent of the land cultivated as hop-grounds or market-gardens, the person to whom any extraordinary charge upon such land is or would be payable, his agents or servants, at all reasonable times, may enter upon the said land, and make an admeasurement and plan of the same, without being subject to any action or molestation for so doing.

44. This act shall be taken and construed as part of the said first-recited act, as amended and extended by the several acts passed for the amendment thereof, and by this act.

19. Allowances for travelling expenses of officers attending courts-martial.
20. In case of invasion, or imminent danger thereof, her Majesty may raise the militia in Scotland to 15,000 men.
21. Militia of Ireland may be increased in like cases to 45,000.

Whereas it is expedient to amend the laws relating to the militia as hereinafter provided: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. It shall be lawful for her Majesty, by order signed by one of the Principal Secretaries of State, and in Ireland for the Lord Lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland, by order signed by his or their chief secretary or under secretary, from time to time to direct the respective lord lieutenants to unite such portions of the militia of two or more counties, ridings, divisions, or places in Great Britain as may be specified in such order, and to form such united portions into a corps of militia artillery, and to direct what number of officers, and of what respective ranks, shall be appointed to such united corps, and what shall constitute the staff thereof, and what officers shall be appointed by the several lord lieutenants respectively, and to direct in which of the several counties, ridings, divisions, or places, the arms, accoutrements, clothing, and other stores belonging to the united corps shall be kept, and by the same or any other order to determine (as regards England) the number of justices to be elected on behalf of each county, riding, division, or place, for forming a committee for providing and maintaining the storehouse in which such arms, accoutrements, clothing, and other stores are to be kept.

2. Where any such united corps of militia artillery is formed in England, the justices of every county, riding, division, or place from which such united corps is formed shall, at the general or quarter sessions next after the said order has been notified to them by the lord lieutenant, elect the number of justices mentioned in such order, to be, with the justices elected in like manner for every other such county, riding, division, or place, a committee for providing and maintaining such storehouse as aforesaid.

In case any member of any such committee die, resign, or become incapable to act, the justices for the county, riding, division, or place for which he was elected, at any general or quarter sessions for such county, riding, division, or place, shall elect some other justice in his place; but, notwithstanding any vacancy in any committee, the continuing members may act as if no such vacancy had occurred.

3. Every such committee shall, within one month after their election, assemble at some convenient place, to be named in a notice to be given by two or more of the members thereof to the several members so elected, such notice to be given to each member personally, or left at his place of abode, or transmitted through the Post-office seven days at least before the time appointed for such meeting; and the said committee may adjourn the said meeting from time to time and from place to place, and meet when and so often as they think necessary; and they shall at their first meeting elect one of their number to be their chairman, who shall preside at all meetings at which he is present; and in case of his absence from any meeting, the members present shall elect one of their number to be chairman for the meeting, who shall preside at the meeting.

To constitute a meeting of the committee there shall not be less than three members, except for adjournment, which may be made by less than three; and every question shall be determined by a majority of votes, the chairman (whether permanent or temporary) having a vote, and, in the event of equality of votes, having a second or casting vote.

4. The said committee, or any three of them, shall have all the powers for providing, repairing, enlarging, altering and improving such storehouse as aforesaid as are or may be, given to the justices of a county for providing, enlarging, altering, and improving any storehouse for keeping the arms and other stores belonging to any regiment of militia of their county; and all the provisions of such act auxiliary to any such powers, and in relation to any such storehouse, shall extend and apply to and in the case of the powers conferred by this enactment, and any storehouse to be provided, altered, enlarged, or improved thereunder; and any lands to be purchased for the purposes of this act shall be conveyed to such persons, being not less than five in number, and in such manner as the committee purchasing the same may direct, in trust for the purposes of this act, and any conveyance to be so made shall have the like force and effect as a conveyance made under sect. 81 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845.

5. When and so often as any land purchased under this act shall be vested in less than three trustees, or there shall not be any trustee thereof living, it shall be lawful for the said committee, or any three or more of them, by an instrument in writing under their hands, to appoint such number of new trustees of such land as may be thought fit, and such appointment shall be deposited and kept among the records of such one of the counties, ridings, divisions, or places interested therein as the committee may think fit, and all the estate and interest in such land which at the time of such appointment may be vested in any trustee or trustees in trust for the purposes aforesaid, or in any other person as heir or devisee, or otherwise subject to such trust, shall, by virtue of such appointment, vest in the trustees so appointed, either alone, or, if there be any continuing trustees or trustee, jointly with such continuing trustees or trustee, as the case may require, without any conveyance or assurance for that purpose.

6. The said committee shall from time to time certify to the treasurer of each county, riding, division, or place for the payment of the amount to be contributed by such county, riding, division, or place towards the expenses incurred by such committee, according to and in proportion to the number of men ordered to be contributed by such county, riding, division, or place to the united corps of artillery; and every treasurer to whom such amount is so certified shall raise such amount out of the same funds, and in the same manner, as sums required for the expenses of the storehouse for the militia of such county, riding, division, or place, and pay the same in manner directed by the certificate of the said committee; and every such certificate shall be signed by the said committee, or three or more of them.

7. Where any such united corps of militia artillery is formed in Scotland, the commissioners of supply of the county in which the stores thereof are directed to be kept shall forthwith, after the order shall have been notified to them by the lord lieutenant, provide a secure and suitable storehouse for keeping the arms, accoutrements, clothing, and other stores of the corps; and all the provisions and powers applicable to the providing a storehouse for the militia of such county, and the expenses incidental to the use and maintenance thereof, shall extend and be applicable to the providing a storehouse for such united corps, and the expenses incidental to the use and maintenance thereof; and the sums required as aforesaid shall be certified, contributed, and paid as now by law provided in the cases where several counties in Scotland contribute to the expenses of a place for the safe custody of the arms and stores belonging to a united corps of militia.

8. Where the militia of any county, riding, division, or place in England is united with the militia of any adjoining county, riding, division, or place, the enactments hereinbefore contained for providing for the keeping of the arms, accoutrements, clothing, and stores belonging to a united corps of militia artillery, and concerning the expenses of providing a storehouse for such united corps, and incidental to the use and maintenance thereof, shall be applicable in the case of the militia united as aforesaid, save that the expenses shall be defrayed in proportion to the quotas fixed for the respective counties, ridings, or places of which the militias are united.

9. Where any united corps of militia artillery is formed in Ireland, or where the militia of any county or county of a city in Ireland is united with the militia of any adjoining county or county of a city, the costs of providing, in such place as the Lord Lieutenant or chief governor or governors shall direct, the storehouses for keeping the arms, accoutrements, clothing, and other stores of the united corps of militia artillery, or of the militias united as aforesaid, shall be defrayed by the several counties, or counties of cities, from the militias of which the corps of militia artillery is formed, or of which the militias are united, (as the case may be), according to and in proportion to the number of men contributed by each county or county of a city to the united corps of artillery, or in proportion to the quotas fixed for each such county or county of a city of which the militias are united; and the necessary sums to be contributed by each county or county of a city for this purpose, including any arrears in respect of such costs before the transmission of the certificate thereof, shall be raised by the presentment of the grand jury of each such county, and as to the cities of Dublin, Cork, and Limerick, by the town councils of the boroughs of Dublin, Cork, and Limerick respectively, on a certificate of the sum required, signed and transmitted in like manner as provided in relation to the costs of providing any house or place for the keeping of the arms, accoutrements, clothing, or other stores of the militia in such county, or county of a city, by the act of the session holden in the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 107, and all the provisions of the said act applicable to and in respect of such costs shall be applicable to and in respect of the sums to be contributed and raised in Ireland under this act.

10. If the Lord Lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland shall deem it expedient that the whole or any number of the permanent staff of the militia of any county or county of a city, or of the united militia of any counties, or of any united artillery corps, should be provided with quarters in the storehouse of such militia, united militia, or united artillery corps, it shall be lawful for the grand jury of such county or counties, or for the town council of the borough of Dublin, Cork, or Limerick, as the case may be, to provide by presentment the cost of such quarters; and in every such case, and also where, in England, in any county, riding, division, or place, the justices in general or quarter sessions, or any committee appointed under this act, or in Scotland the commissioners of supply, add to the buildings provided or to be provided for keeping the arms and stores of the militia quarters for such number of the permanent staff as the Secretary of State shall deem expedient to be quartered as a guard for the arms and stores, it shall be lawful for the Secretary of State from time to time, out of monies to be provided by Parliament for this purpose, to cause to be paid to the treasurer of such county, riding, division, or place, or such commissioners of supply, such yearly sum as the Secretary of State may have agreed so to pay before such quarters are provided, to be applied in aid of the rates or assessments out of which, or of monies raised on the security of which, the expenses of providing such quarters have been defrayed; and where such expenses have been incurred on account of any united corps of militia or united militias, such sum shall be apportioned by the Secretary of State between or among the counties, ridings, divisions, or places which may have contributed to such expenses in proportion to its contribution thereto, and be paid to the treasurers of the respective counties, ridings, divisions, or places, or the commissioners of supply of the respective counties accordingly.

11. Where before the passing of this act any quarters shall have been provided for the permanent staff of the militia by any county, riding, or place, it shall be lawful for the Secretary of State, upon being satisfied of the sufficiency of such quarters, to approve thereof in the same manner as if the same had been erected with his sanction subsequent to the passing of this act, and it shall thereupon be lawful for the Secretary of State to cause to be paid to the treasurer of such county, riding, or place such yearly sum as he may think fit, in the same manner and to be applied for the same purposes as if under the provision hereinbefore contained such sum had been agreed to be paid by him before such quarters had been provided.

12. The treasurer of every county, riding, division, or place receiving any such payment from the Secretary of State shall be accountable in respect thereof to the treasurer of every borough which may have contributed to the expenses of providing the quarters in proportion to its contribution to such expenses.

13. The oath which under the act of the session holden in the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 50, is to be taken by every volunteer raised as in the said act mentioned, may be administered by any justice of the peace for any city or borough, county, riding, or place where such volunteer may happen to be.

14. It shall be lawful for her Majesty, by order or regulations signified by the Secretary of State, to direct that any militia volunteer, upon or at any time after his enrolment, be drilled, trained, or exercised, by way of preliminary instruction, at the head-quarters of the regiment, battalion, or corps in which he is enrolled, or at any other convenient place, for any time not exceeding twenty-eight days, although the regiment, battalion, or corps, or any part thereof, be not then called out for training and exercise; and during the period of preliminary instruction under this provision the volunteer shall be subject to the same articles of war, and to the same laws in all respects, as if he were a militiaman lawfully called out for training and exercise; but such period shall not be reckoned in lieu or in diminution of the time in the same year during which he might have been called out for training and exercise with all or any part of the same corps independently of this enactment.

15. And whereas, by sect. 12 of the act of the session holden in the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 38, after providing that every deserter from the militia, and every person who in respect of any offence against the militia laws is deemed a deserter, may be tried by a regimental court-martial, or may be tried summarily by any justice or justices of the peace as therein mentioned, it is enacted, that it shall be lawful for the Secretary at War to direct in which of the aforesaid modes any such deserter shall be tried: so much of the said section as provides that it shall be lawful for the Secretary at War to direct in which of the aforesaid modes any such deserter shall be tried shall be repealed; and every such deserter, and every such person who in respect of any offence against the militia laws is deemed a deserter, shall be tried summarily by any justice or justices of the peace having jurisdiction under the said section, unless it be shewn to such justice or justices that the Secretary at War has ordered such deserter or person to be tried by a regimental court-martial under the provision hereinafter contained; and it shall be lawful for such Secretary at War, by any general or special directions or regulations, to order any such deserter or person, or any class or description of such offenders, with reference to the time or circumstances of their being apprehended or otherwise, to be tried by regimental court-martial according to the provisions in the said section mentioned for such trial, and every such deserter or person to whom such desertion or regulation is applicable shall thereupon be tried and dealt with accordingly.

16. Every deserter from any regiment, battalion, or corps of militia of any part of the United Kingdom, which is embodied at the time of such desertion or afterwards, shall, whether he shall or shall not have been punished for his offence, be liable to serve for an additional period equal to the time which may have elapsed between the time of his desertion and the time when he is apprehended or voluntarily returns to his regiment, battalion, or corps; the period of such additional service to commence from the expiration of the period for which he was inrolled, or from the time of his apprehension or return, which may last happen.

17. It shall be lawful for the colonel or commanding officer of any regiment, battalion, or corps of militia, pursuant to any regulations or directions of the Secretary at War, to authorise any militia volunteer or volunteers belonging to such regiment, battalion, or corps to enlist in her Majesty's regular forces, and to give to any such volunteer a conditional discharge from the militia, to become absolute on his being enlisted into, attested, and finally approved for her Majesty's regular forces within a time limited by such colonel or commanding officer, in pursuance of such regulations or directions; and in case such volunteer be so enlisted, attested, and finally approved within the time so limited, his enlistment shall be valid, but otherwise such discharge shall be void.

18. Except as hereinbefore provided, any militiaman who enlists in her Majesty's regular forces, or her Majesty's Indian forces, or Royal Marine forces, or who enters her Majesty's navy, during the continuance of his engagement in the militia, shall, if retained to serve in the forces in which he has so enlisted, or in the navy, as the case may be, (in lieu of the stoppages, if any, to which he may now by law be liable), be subjected to a stoppage of 1d. a day of his pay for eighteen calendar months, to be applied as the Secretary of State shall direct; but no such militiaman so enlisting or entering shall be released from his engagement as a militiaman, or be relieved from any liability consequent on his wrongful enlistment or entry, save by or in pursuance of the order of the Secretary of State, and which order, when the said militiaman shall be within the United Kingdom, shall be given only with the consent of the commanding officer of the regiment, battalion, or corps to which such militiaman belongs, and his service under such wrongful enlistment or entry shall not be reckoned for pension until the day on which his engagement for the militia would have expired.

19. So much of the act of the 55 Geo. 3, c. 168, ss. 3, 4, and of the act of the session holden in the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 106, ss. 55, 56, as provides that officers attending to form courts-martial shall be entitled to 2s. for every mile for going to such court-martial, at the commencement thereof, and returning after the conclusion of the proceedings of the court, shall be repealed; and all officers attending to form such courts as in the said sections mentioned shall be entitled to such allowances for their travelling expenses in going to such court-martial and returning therefrom as the Secretary at War by regulations may from time to time direct.

20. It shall be lawful for her Majesty, in case of actual invasion, or imminent danger thereof, the reason being first communicated to Parliament if Parliament be then sitting, or declared in Council and notified by proclamation if Parliament be not sitting or in being, to order and direct by her royal proclamation, that, in addition to the number of private militiamen authorised to be raised and kept up for the militia in Scotland by the act passed in the session holden in the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 106, there shall be forthwith raised and inrolled for the militia in Scotland such number of men as to her Majesty may seem fit, so as the whole number of men for the time being raised for the militia in Scotland shall not exceed 15,000 private militiamen, and the lieutenants and deputy lieutenants of the several counties in Scotland shall forthwith proceed to raise and inrol such additional men, at such time or times as shall be specified for that purpose in such proclamation; and all the provisions applicable to the militia raised in Scotland shall extend and be applicable to and for the raising, inrolling, training, and exercising, and the drawing out and embodying of the additional men so ordered and directed to be raised and inrolled, and to the additional men so raised: provided always, that it shall be lawful for her Majesty, whenever she may deem it expedient so to do, to reduce the whole or any part of such additional number of men, and by royal proclamation to declare such reduction accordingly.

21. It shall be lawful for the Lord Lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland, in case of actual invasion, or imminent danger thereof, to be signified by proclamation from such Lord Lieutenant or chief governor or governors, to order and direct, by proclamation, that, in addition to the number of private militiamen authorised to be raised and kept up in Ireland by the act passed in the session holden in the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 107, there shall be forthwith raised and inrolled for the militia in Ireland such number of men as to such Lord Lieutenant or chief governor or governors may seem fit, so as the whole number of men for the time being raised for the militia in Ireland shall not exceed 45,000 private militiamen, and the lieutenants and deputy lieutenants of the several counties and places in Ireland shall forthwith proceed to raise and inrol such additional men, at such time or times as shall be specified for that purpose in such proclamation; and all the provisions applicable to the militia raised in Ireland shall extend and be applicable to and for the raising, inrolling, training, and exercising, and the drawing out and embodying of the additional men so ordered and directed to be raised and inrolled, and to the additional men so raised: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the Lord Lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland, whenever he or they may deem it expedient so to do, to reduce the whole or any part of such additional number of men, and by proclamation to declare such reduction accordingly.

CAP. CII.

An Act to provide for the Management of East India Stock, and of the Debts and Obligations of the Government of India, at and by the Bank of England.

[20th August, 1860.]

- Sect. 1. Arrangements for transfer of stock of the East India Company, and payment of dividends thereon at the Bank of England.
2. Secretary of State for India in council to pay to the East India Company the sum agreed to be paid to the Bank of England.
3. Powers of attorney existing previous to the 31st December, 1860; not to be defeated by the act; and the Bank of England authorised to act on any powers lodged with the East India Company.
4. Evidence of the title to stock may be required by the Bank.
5. Secretary of State for India in council to pay the dividends half-yearly to the Bank.
6. Secretary of State for India in council to make such arrangements as shall be deemed expedient with the Bank of England for payment of the debts and obligations of the Government of India, and the interest thereon.
7. Secretary of State for India in council to open accounts at the Bank of England for payment of current demands.

Whereas under their charter the East India Company are directed to cause an accountant to keep a book or books in the public office or place of meeting of the same company, and therein to enter the amount of the capital stock of the same company; and it is by the charter directed that the method of making assignments and transfers of the said stock shall be by an entry in the said book or books in forms prescribed by the said charter, and that the entry signed as therein prescribed, and no other way or method, shall be the manner and method used in the passing, assigning, or transferring the interest or share in the said stock and fund: and whereas, by the act of the 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 85, it is enacted, that out of the revenues of the British territories in India there shall be paid to or retained by the said company a yearly dividend of 10l. 10s. per centum on the capital stock of the said company: and whereas it is expedient to empower the directors of the said company to make arrangements with the Governor and Company of the Bank of England for the management of the said capital stock by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, and for the transfer thereof at the said Bank: and whereas it is expedient to enable the Secretary of State for India in council to defray the expenses incident to such arrangements: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. From and after the 31st August, 1860, the provisions contained in the said charter which require the East India Company to keep books in the public office or place of meeting of the company for the entry of the capital stock of the company, and which relate to the method and form of making assignments and transfers of the said stock in the said books, shall cease to be of force; and the directors of the East India Company are hereby empowered to make arrangements with the Governor and Company of the Bank of England for the management of the said capital stock by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, and for the transfer thereof, and the payment of the dividends thereon at the said Bank on and after the 1st September, 1860, or so soon afterwards as may be found convenient, in such manner and form, and upon such terms and conditions, and for such remuneration, as may appear to the said directors expedient and equitable, and be mutually agreed upon by them and the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, subject to the consent of the Secretary of State for India in council, so far as relates to the amount of such remuneration.

2. The Secretary of State for India in council shall half-yearly, at the same time that he shall pay to the East India Company the dividend on the capital stock of the said company due and payable to the said company under the act of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 85, pay also to the said company, out of the revenues of India, such further sum as may have been mutually agreed upon by the directors of the said company and the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, with such consent as aforesaid, as the remuneration to be paid by the said company for the expenses incurred and the duties undertaken by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England under this act.

3. In the event of such arrangements as aforesaid being made with the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, all powers of attorney for transfer of any share in the said capital stock, or for receipt of the dividends thereon, made or executed at any time before the 31st December, 1860, shall be as valid and effectual as if this act had not passed, and the Governor and Company of the Bank of England are hereby authorised and required to give effect thereto in the same way as the East India Company would have been authorised and compellable so to do if this act had not passed; and the said Governor and Company shall be and they are hereby indemnified from any act done by them in reliance on, or on the authority of, any such power, or of any power of attorney which may, previously to the taking effect of such arrangements, have been lodged at the office of the East India Company.

4. In the event of such arrangements as aforesaid being made, the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, before allowing any transfer of any part of the said stock, or the receipt of any dividends thereon, shall be at liberty to require evidence of the title of any proprietor to any of the said stock or the dividends thereof, and such evidence shall be the declaration of competent persons, to be made in pursuance of the act of the 6 Will. 4, c. 62, or of such other nature as the Governor and Company of the Bank of England shall require.

5. In the event of such arrangements as aforesaid being made, the Secretary of State for India in council shall, in the month of December, 1860, and in every subsequent year, so long as the dividends on the said capital stock shall continue to be payable, fifteen days at the least before each of the half-yearly days on which a dividend on the said capital stock becomes payable, out of such monies as may be applicable to the payment of the dividends, cause to be paid to the chief cashier for the time being of the Bank of England, to the credit of the East India Company, the amount of the dividend payable to the said company under the act 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 85.

6. The Secretary of State for India in council shall be and he is hereby authorised from time to time to make such arrangements with the Governor and Company of the Bank of England as shall be deemed expedient for the payment at the Bank of England of the debts and obligations contracted by or on behalf of the East India Company, and by or on behalf of the Secretary of State for India in council, both in India and Great Britain, and of the interest to accrue thereon, and for the creation and registration, and for the transfer of, and the payment of interest on, any stock into which any such obligations may be convertible, and for the appointment of one or more person or persons for the purpose of drawing bills, on behalf of the Secretary of State in council of India, upon the Governor-General, and the governors of the several presidencies of India respectively, and otherwise in relation to the management of such debts and obligations.

7. It shall be lawful for the Secretary of State for India in council from time to time to open at the Bank of England such account or accounts for the payment of current demands as he may deem expedient, such account or accounts to be kept in such name or names, and drawn upon by such person or persons, and in such manner, as may from time to time be directed by the said Secretary of State in council, which accounts shall be deemed public accounts.

6. Certain clauses in the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, extended to purchases of land, &c. for public purposes.
7. Power to Secretary for War to use the powers given to promoters of undertakings by the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18.
8. This act and the 8 & 9 Vict. cc. 18 and 19, to be construed together.

Whereas it is expedient to extend the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts, 1845, in regard to sales of land, or compensation for damages, in consideration of an annual rent-charge, annual feu duty, or ground annual, and to enable her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the War Department to avail himself of the powers and provisions contained in the same act for the purchase of lands wanted for the service of the War Department, or for the defence of the realm: be it enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. So much of the 10th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, as provides that, save in the case of lands of which any person is seised in fee, or entitled to dispose absolutely for his own benefit, the consideration to be paid for any lands, or for any damage done thereto, shall be in a gross sum, is hereby repealed.

2. The power to sell and convey lands in consideration of an annual rent-charge provided by the 10th section of the said act, and the power to recover such rent-charge provided by the 11th section of the said act, are hereby extended to all cases of sale and purchase or compensation under the said act, where the parties interested in such sale, or entitled to such compensation, are under any disability or incapacity, and have no power to sell or convey such lands, or to receive such compensation, except under the provisions of the said act.

3. The power to sell and convey lands in consideration of an annual feu duty or ground annual, under the 10th section of the Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, and the power to recover such annual feu duty or ground annual, are hereby extended to all cases of sale or purchase, or compensation, under the said act, where the parties interested in such sale are under any disability or incapacity, and have no power to sell or convey such lands, or to receive such compensation, except under the provisions of the said act.

4. In every case of such sale or compensation by any parties other than parties seised in fee or entitled to dispose absolutely of the lands so sold or damaged, the amount of such rent-charge, annual feu duty, or ground annual, hereinbefore mentioned, shall be settled in the manner directed in the 9th section of each of the said acts respectively: provided that the amount of such annual rent-charge, annual feu duty, or ground annual shall in no case be less than one-fourth part greater than the net annual rent received by the parties beneficially interested in such lands, upon an average of the last seven years; and that a charge of 5l. per cent. on the gross sum estimated or fixed as aforesaid, by way of compensation for any damage that may be done to the said lands, shall in all such cases be added to and shall form a part of the said rent-charge, annual feu duty, or ground annual; and that no fine, foregift, grassum, premium, or other consideration in the nature thereof, shall be paid or taken in respect of the lands so sold or damaged, other than the annual rent-charge, annual feu duty, or ground annual made payable for such lands: provided also, that such rent-charge shall be and remain upon and for the same uses, trusts, and purposes as those upon which the rents and profits of the land so conveyed stood settled or assured at or immediately before the conveyance thereof, and shall be a first charge on the tolls and rates, if any, payable under the special act.

5. In case the promoters of the undertaking shall be empowered, by any act or acts relating thereto, to be passed after the passing of this act, to borrow money to an amount not exceeding a prescribed sum, then in the event of the promoters of the undertaking agreeing, at any time after the passing of this act, with any person, under the powers of this act, and of either of the acts hereinbefore mentioned, or of either of the said acts, only, for the purchase of any lands in consideration of the payment of a rent-charge, annual feu duty, or ground annual, the powers of the promoters of the undertaking for borrowing money shall be reduced by an amount equal to twenty years' purchase of any rent-charge, annual feu duty, or ground annual so for the time being payable.

6. The clauses contained in the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, relating to the purchase of lands by agreement, and to agreements for sale, and conveyances, sales, and releases of any lands or hereditaments, or any estate or interest therein, by parties under disability, shall extend and be applicable to all purchases of land and hereditaments for public purposes which shall be hereafter made by the council of any city or borough, with the sanction of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, under the powers for that purpose contained in the Municipal Corporation Mortgages, &c. Act, 1860.

7. For the purchase or acquisition of any messuages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments wanted for the service of the Admiralty or of the War Department, or for the defence of the realm, it shall be lawful for her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the War Department for the time being to use all or any of the powers and provisions by the Lands

Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and by the Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, given to promoters of the undertaking, as therein mentioned, and for such purposes the said Principal Secretary shall be deemed and taken to be the promoters of an undertaking within the meaning of the said act; and all the powers and provisions thereof shall, if used by her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the War Department, be treated as if they were contained in the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 94, for the purpose of being used and made available by the principal officers of her Majesty's Ordnance, and had been transferred to the said Principal Secretary for the time being by the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 117, for the purposes aforesaid: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall authorise any purchase otherwise than by agreement of any land, except according to the provisions of the 23rd section of the said act of the 5 & 6 Vict., or prejudice or affect the powers and authorities of the said Principal Secretary for the time being under the said last-mentioned statutes, or either of them.

8. This act shall be read and construed as part of the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, or of the Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, in all matters in which it relates to the said acts respectively; and in citing this act in other acts of Parliament, and in legal instruments, it shall be sufficient to use the expression of "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts Amendment Act, 1860."

In respect of other goods .. ..	0 10 0

Charges on Goods exported.

There shall be charged (irrespective of any duties of customs or other rates or charges payable by law) upon every customs bill of lading, on the exportation of any goods from Great Britain and Ireland, as required by the provisions of the Customs Tariff Amendment Act, 1860, and under and subject thereto .. .. 0 1 6

2. So much of the Customs Consolidation Act, 1853, as prohibits the importation of malt into the United Kingdom, is hereby repealed.

3. Extracts and essences of malt and of hops, and other concentrations thereof respectively, which are or may be applicable to the same purposes, are hereby prohibited to be imported into Great Britain and Ireland.

4. Upon the entry of any goods liable to duties of customs, the same shall be described in the entry thereof according to the denominations, weight, measure, number, quantity, or value, as the case may be, set forth in this act, or in such other manner as the Lords of the Treasury or the Commissioners of Customs may at any time or from time to time direct.

5. If the rates of 1d. per unit of entry, made payable, under sect. 19 of the Customs Tariff Amendment Act, 1860, by stamps, shall amount to more than 10s. upon any entry or entries, or other document or documents to which the Commissioners of Customs are authorised to direct the same to be affixed, the same may, at the option of the person liable thereto, with the sanction of the said commissioners, and under such regulations as they may see fit, be paid in cash.

6. When any act required by the said last-mentioned act to be done by the master of any ship, or his agent, at or after the final clearance of the ship, shall not have been so done before the departure of the ship, his agent shall do and perform the same, under and subject to the penalties imposed by the said act for non-performance thereof; and in order to the identity of such agent for that purpose, such agent shall countersign the content of the ship at or before the clearance thereof by himself or the clerk acting for him in the clearance of such ship; and any agent either of the master of any ship or of the exporter of any goods who shall withhold any customs bill of lading, specification, or other instrument required by the said act to be delivered to the proper officer of customs, by the master of any ship or his agent, or by the exporter of any goods or his agent, shall be subject and liable to the penalties thereby imposed by the said act on the master of any ship, or the exporter of any goods, for default in the delivery of such customs bill of lading, specifications, or other instrument within the time prescribed for the delivery thereof respectively.

7. This act shall come into operation on the day of the passing thereof, except as otherwise provided herein; and in citing it in other acts of Parliament, and in legal instruments, it shall be sufficient to use the expression "The Customs Duties Consolidation Act, 1860."

21. Commissioners of Inland Revenue may remit penalties under the said acts.

22. Persons in the service of the Post-office may sell postage stamps, &c. without license.

23. The 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, probates and administrations, England. The 20 & 21 Vict. c. 79, Ireland. If Treasury direct district registrars to be paid by salary, they may also direct the fees to be collected &c. by means of stamps.

Sect. 1. From and after the day of the passing of this act there shall be granted, raised, levied, and paid in and throughout the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for the use of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, for and in respect of the several instruments, matters, and things described or mentioned in the said schedule, or for or in respect of the vellum, parchment, or paper upon which any of them respectively shall be written, the several stamp duties or sums of money set down in figures against the same respectively, or otherwise specified and set forth in the said schedule, which said schedule, and the several provisions, regulations, and directions therein contained with respect to the said duties, and the instruments, matters, and things charged therewith, shall be deemed and taken to be part of this act; and shall be applied and put in execution accordingly: provided that nothing herein contained shall in any way alter or affect the act passed in the 12 & 13 Vict., intitled "An Act to confer certain Powers on the Railway Passengers Assurance Company," or the duties thereby imposed.

2. The stamp duties now payable for and in respect of the several instruments, matters, and things mentioned or described in the schedule to this act annexed, whereon other duties are by this act granted, shall respectively from and after the day of the passing of this act cease and determine, and the same are hereby repealed: provided that the stamp duties now chargeable on any of the said instruments, matters, and things, and not the said other new duties, shall be payable in respect of such of them as shall be made, signed, or dated at any time before or upon the day of the passing of this act.

3. From and after the 31st December, 1860, the allowances granted respectively by the 18th section of the act passed in the 12 & 14 Vict. c. 97, in respect of stamps for receipts, and by the 24th section of the act passed in the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 83, in respect of stamps for drafts, bills, and notes, and any allowance granted by or payable under any other act in respect of any of the stamps hereinafter mentioned, shall cease; and in lieu thereof there shall be granted and allowed to every person who at one and the same time shall produce at the office of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue in London or Dublin paper to be stamped with stamps for denoting any rate of duty not exceeding 1s. on bills of exchange, drafts, or orders, or promissory notes, or stamps for denoting the duty of 1d. on any instrument or document whatever, (except postage stamps and customs stamps), to the amount of 2l. or upwards in the whole of all or any of such stamps as aforesaid, and to every person who at one and the same time shall purchase any such stamps as aforesaid at the office of the said commissioners in London, Edinburgh, or Dublin, to the amount aforesaid, or of any distributor or sub-distributor of stamps at any place not within the distance of ten miles from the said offices respectively, to the amount of 1l. or upwards, an allowance of 10d. for every 20s. of the amount of the duties denoted by such stamps.

4. All the powers, provisions, clauses, regulations, directions, allowances, and exemptions, fines, forfeitures, pains, and penalties contained in or imposed by any act or acts, or any schedule thereto, relating to any duties of the same kind or description heretofore payable in the United Kingdom, and in force at the time of the passing of this act, shall respectively be of full force and effect with respect to the duties by this act granted, and to the vellum, parchment, paper, instruments, matters, and things charged and chargeable therewith; and to the persons liable to the payment of the said duties, so far as the same are or shall be applicable in all cases not hereby expressly provided for; and shall be observed, applied, allowed, enforced, and put in execution for and in the raising, levying, collecting, and securing of the said duties hereby granted, and otherwise in relation thereto, so far as the same shall not be superseded by, and shall be consistent with, the express provisions of this act, as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as if the same had been herein repeated and specially enacted; mutatis mutandis, with reference to the duties by this act granted.

5. The duties by this act granted on promissory notes made, or purporting to be made, out of the United Kingdom, shall be denoted by adhesive stamps, to be provided by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue for the purpose, or by any stamps of sufficient amount which shall have been provided for denoting the duties on bills of exchange made out of the United Kingdom; and the proper adhesive stamp for denoting the duty on any such note shall be affixed thereon, and be cancelled at the same time and times, and in like manner, as is provided by the 5th section of an act passed in the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 83, and the 12th section of an act passed in the present session, cap. 15, in the case of bills of exchange therein respectively mentioned; and under the like penalties respectively for any neglect thereof; and the said respective sections shall be read as if the same were inserted in this act expressly in reference to the promissory notes aforesaid, and the duties by this act granted thereon, as well as to the bills of exchange therein respectively mentioned.

6. The term "contract note," wherever the same is used in this act, shall mean any note or memorandum mentioned or referred to under the head "contract note" in the schedule to this act; and the term "insurance" shall mean also and shall include the term "assurance."

7. The stamp duty on contract notes may be denoted either by impressed or adhesive stamps, and the said commissioners shall provide stamps of both descriptions; and in any case where a contract note is made, and the same is not written on an impressed stamp, there shall be affixed thereon a proper adhesive stamp; and every person who shall make or sign a contract note to which an adhesive stamp shall be affixed shall effectually cancel and obliterate the stamp by writing upon or across it his name, or the name of his firm, or the initials thereof respectively, and by adding thereto the date of such cancelling, and so and in such manner that the said stamp cannot be used upon or for any other document or writing; and if any person shall make or sign any contract note by this act chargeable with stamp duty without the same being duly stamped to denote the said duty, or shall refuse or neglect to cancel and obliterate as aforesaid any adhesive stamp affixed thereon, he shall forfeit the sum of 20l.; and no charge for brokerage, commission, agency, or otherwise, made or to be made by any broker, agent, or other person in or about the sale or purchase mentioned or referred to in any contract note made or signed by him, shall be lawful unless such contract note shall be duly stamped, and the stamp thereon, if adhesive, properly cancelled.

8. Where any insurance in respect of which a policy or agreement is chargeable with stamp duty under this act shall be renewed or continued on the payment of further premium or consideration; whether in pursuance of any stipulation in the policy or agreement or otherwise, a receipt for each further premium or consideration shall be given by the person who shall receive the same, and such receipt shall, for the purposes of this act, be and be deemed the policy or agreement for such renewed or continued insurance, and be chargeable with the duty by this act granted; and if any person shall receive any money for premium or consideration for any such insurance, and shall not within a month make out, and, if required, deliver, a duly stamped policy or agreement in respect thereof, or, in the case of a renewal or continuance of such insurance, shall not thereupon give such receipt as aforesaid duly stamped, or if any such person shall deliver or cause to be delivered any policy or agreement, or give or cause to be given any receipt, not duly stamped, he shall forfeit the sum of 20l.; and where the insurance shall be made, renewed, or continued by or for any society or company, the person who shall be a managing director, or the secretary or other principal officer thereof, at the time of the payment of any such premium or consideration, and of any such default or unlawful act being done or suffered as aforesaid, shall be held and deemed to be a person doing or suffering the default or unlawful act, and shall, as well as the society or company, and the members thereof who may by law be chargeable therewith, be subject and liable to the said penalty in respect thereof.

9. The duties hereby granted on instruments of insurance may be denoted by any adhesive stamps that the Commissioners of Inland Revenue may provide for the purpose, and in the meanwhile by any adhesive stamps provided by them not appropriated by name to any other instrument, as well as by impressed stamps, or by a combination of both impressed and adhesive stamps; and in any case where an adhesive stamp is issued, it shall be cancelled by writing upon the stamp the name of the person, or the society or company making the insurance, or the initials thereof; and the date of writing the same, and also any particulars relating to the insurance for which the stamp may be adapted and in default thereof such person or society or company, and also the managing director, secretary, or other principal officer as aforesaid of any such society or company, shall forfeit the sum of 10*l*.

10. Whereas it is expedient to reduce the stamp duty now chargeable on policies of insurance upon lives for small sums: be it enacted, in lieu of the stamp duty of 6*d*. now payable upon or for or in respect of any policy of insurance or other instrument, by whatever name the same shall be called, whereby any insurance shall be made upon any life or lives, or upon any event or contingency relating to or depending upon a life or lives, where the sum insured shall not exceed 25*l*., there shall be charged and payable the stamp duty of 3*d*.

11. No insurance from loss or damage by fire in any sum not exceeding 20*l*., made, renewed, or continued at the instance or for the benefit of any working mechanic, artificer, handicraftsman, or labourer, on the tools or implements of work or labour used by any such person in his work or employment, shall be chargeable with any stamp duty; provided that such insurance be effected by a separate policy, or that a distinct sum be assured on such tools or instruments.

12. The stamp duty of 6*d*. by the act of the present session of Parliament, cap. 15, charged on an agreement under hand only, may be denoted by an adhesive stamp in any case where the same is capable of being used under the terms and restrictions hereinafter mentioned; and the Commissioners of Inland Revenue shall provide stamps for the purpose; and whenever any such adhesive stamp shall be used, every party to the agreement who shall sign the same shall also, at the time of so signing, write upon or across the stamp his name and the date of the day and year of writing the same, so that the stamp may be appropriated to the instrument, and effectually cancelled and rendered incapable of being used for any other; and in default thereof the stamp shall be of no avail; and proof of the said writing upon or across the stamp, as hereby required, shall be a necessary part of the evidence of the agreement in any case where such agreement is not stamped with an impressed stamp.

13. Every writing or document entitling or intended to entitle any person to the delivery of any goods, wares, or merchandise lying in any dock, port, or warehouse, or upon any wharf, as in the said act of the present session is mentioned, shall be deemed to be made and given upon a sale or transfer of the property in such goods, wares, or merchandise, unless the contrary shall be expressly stated therein by the person making or giving the same; and if any person shall untruly state, or by any word or words signify, or cause or permit to be untruly stated or signified, in any such writing or document, that the same is not made or given upon a sale or transfer, or if any person shall himself, or by his servant or other person, procure or require the delivery of any of the goods, wares, or merchandise therein mentioned, knowing that the same contains any such untrue statement, every such person shall forfeit, over and above any other penalty to which he may be liable, the sum of 20*l*.; but any such writing or document shall not, by reason of the same not being stamped, be invalid in the hands of the person having the custody of the goods, wares, and merchandise, and delivering out the same, unless such person shall be party or privy to the fraud thereby committed.

14. The stamp duty of 1*d*. payable on any such writing or document as in the last preceding clause is mentioned shall, in the absence of any special agreement between the parties relating to it, be paid by the person requiring the writing or document; and it shall be lawful, in any such case, for the person of whom the writing or document is required to refuse to give the same until the amount of the stamp duty thereon be paid to him.

15. Whereas a practice prevails, in relation to certain descriptions of goods, wares, and merchandise lying in docks and warehouses, and upon wharfs, for the company or person in whose custody the same may be to deliver to the owner thereof, in addition to a warrant evidencing the title to the property, a certain other document termed a weight-note, such document being intended to be delivered by or on behalf of the owner to the purchaser of the goods mentioned in the warrant upon any sale thereof before the completion of the contract for sale, but which other document, as well as the warrant, is chargeable with the duty of 3*d*. under the head "dock warrant" in the schedule to the said act of the present session, and it is expedient that the same should be exempted from the said duty: be it therefore enacted, in any case where a document designated a warrant, chargeable with and duly stamped for denoting the payment of the said duty of 3*d*., and also a document termed a weight-note, or any other document of the like character or description relating only to the same goods, wares, or merchandise as are specified in the warrant, shall be issued by the company or person in whose custody the said goods, wares, or merchandise shall be, to the owner thereof, or his broker or agent, the weight-note or other document aforesaid shall be exempt from the said duty of 3*d*.

16. The stamp duty of 1*d*. by the said act of the present session charged upon a certified copy or extract of or from any register of births, baptisms, marriages, deaths, or burials shall not be deemed to have been or to be payable upon any such copy or extract which is or shall be furnished by any clergyman, registrar, or other official person, pursuant to and for the purposes of any act of Parliament, or to any general or superintending registrar under any general regulation, nor in any case where the person giving the copy or extract is not entitled to any fee or reward for the same.

17. No draft, or order, writing, or document for the payment, or for entitling any person to the payment, by or through any banker or person acting as a banker, of any sum of money, such draft, order, writing, or document being sent or delivered by the person making or giving the same to the banker or person acting as a banker by or through whom the payment is to be made, and not to the person to whom such payment is to be made, or to any person on his behalf, shall be chargeable or be deemed to have been chargeable with any higher stamp duty than 1*d*., notwithstanding the said payment shall be or have been thereby directed to be made at any time after the date thereof, which duty of 1*d*. may be denoted by an adhesive stamp, to be cancelled as in the case of a draft or order on demand.

18. Where any draft or order for the payment of money by any banker or person acting as a banker, chargeable with the stamp duty of 1*d*., shall come to the hands of such person unstamped, it shall be lawful for him to affix thereto the necessary adhesive stamp, and to cancel the same in manner by law required, and upon so doing to make the payment thereby directed, and to charge the duty in account against the person who ought to have paid the same, or to deduct such duty from the sum so directed to be paid; and such draft or order shall, so far as relates to the stamp duty chargeable thereon, be good and valid; but this shall not relieve any person from the liability to the penalty he may have incurred by issuing the said draft or order unstamped.

19. Whereas, by the 18th section of the act passed in the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, the issuing of promissory notes payable to bearer on demand, with printed dates therein, is prohibited, and such prohibition is an unnecessary restriction: be it enacted, that the said section of the said last-mentioned act shall be and is hereby repealed: provided always, that notwithstanding anything in any act of Parliament contained to the contrary, it shall be lawful for any person to draw upon his banker, who shall bonâ fide hold money to or for his use, any draft or order for the payment to the bearer, or to order on demand, of any sum of money less than 20*l*.

20. Whereas, by an act passed in the 50 Geo. 3, c. 41, every hawker, pedlar, and petty chapman, and other trading person going from town to town or to other men's houses, in England, Wales, or Berwick-upon-Tweed, is required to take out a license as therein mentioned, and by an act passed in the 55 Geo. 3, c. 71, such trading persons in Scotland are also required to take out a license: be it enacted, that a license taken out under either of the said acts shall be sufficient to authorise the trading, according to the tenor of it, in any part of Great Britain, and shall be read as a license granted under both of the said acts.

21. If any person be convicted of an offence under either of the said two last-mentioned acts, it shall be lawful for the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, and they are hereby authorised, in case they shall see fit so to do, to remit the whole or any part of the penalty imposed by law for such offence, notwithstanding the same or some portion thereof may be payable to some party other than the Crown.

22. It shall be lawful for any person in the service or employment of the Post-office, without any license or any authority other than this act, to carry about for sale, and to sell, at any place or places within the United Kingdom, postage stamps and printed forms of any kind issued from or used at the General Post-office, and any other matters and things relating to the business of the Post-office which are or may be authorised or permitted to be sold at any post-office; and such person shall not be subject or liable to any penalty or forfeiture for so doing, anything in any act or acts to the contrary notwithstanding.

23. Whereas, by the act passed in the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, for amending the law relating to probates and letters of administration in England, it is enacted that none of the fees payable to the officers of the Court of Probate, or of any county court, in respect of business under the act, except the fees of district registrars, (which were to be taken as their remuneration, and for their own use), should be received in money, but that every such fee should be collected and received by a stamp denoting the amount of the fee which otherwise would be payable, and provisions were therein made for the proper collection of such fees; and it was also enacted, that it should be lawful for the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury at any time to order that the district registrars, or any of them, should be paid by salaries instead of fees, and that thereupon all fees payable to them should be accounted for and paid into the Exchequer as the said last-mentioned commissioners should direct; and by an act passed in the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 79, for amending the law relating to probates and letters of administration in Ireland, similar enactments are contained; and it may be considered expedient, in cases where the said last-mentioned commissioners shall have directed, or shall at any time direct, the district registrars in England or Ireland to be paid by salaries instead of fees, that such fees should also be collected and received by means of stamps: be it therefore enacted as follows:—In any case where the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury have ordered, or shall at any time hereafter order, that any district registrar, under either of the said acts, shall be paid by salary, it shall be lawful for them at any time to order also that the fees or any of the fees authorised to be taken by such district registrar shall be collected and received by means of stamps; and thereupon, from and after the time to be fixed for that purpose by any such last-mentioned order, every such fee shall be collected and received by a stamp denoting the amount of the fee which otherwise would be payable, in the same manner, and under and subject to the same provisions, clauses, regulations, and directions in that behalf as are contained in the said acts respectively in relation to the fees thereby directed to be collected and received by means of stamps, and to the documents which ought to be stamped to denote such fees, as if such fees had not been excepted as aforesaid, but had been expressly directed by the said respective acts to be collected and received by means of stamps, as other fees are thereby respectively directed to be collected and received.

CAP. CXIII.

An Act to grant Duties of Excise on Chicory, and on Licenses to Dealers in Sweets or Made Wines; also to reduce the Excise Duty on Hops and the Period of Credit allowed for Payment of the Duty on Malt and Hops respectively; to repeal the Exemption from License Duty of Persons dealing in Foreign Wine and Spirits in Bond; and to amend the Laws relating to the Excise. [28th August, 1860.]

Sect. 1. After commencement of act the duties hereafter named to be levied. On chicory and other vegetable matter applicable to the uses of chicory or coffee. On licenses to dealers in sweets or made wines.

2. Period of credit for payment of excise duty on malt reduced.

3. Excise duty on hops reduced.

4. Duty on hops, when to be payable.

5. Exemption from license duty of persons dealing in wine and spirits in bond repealed.

6. Powers and provisions of Excise Acts to apply to the duties granted by this act.

7. Dealers in sweets or made wines to take out license annually.

8. Dryers and roasters of chicory, &c., and dealers therein, to make entry of their premises. No person other than a dryer or roaster who has made entry shall have dried chicory, &c. in his possession.

9. Dryer to provide warehouse for storing dried chicory, &c.

10. Dryer to give notice of his intention to dry chicory, &c.

11. Dryer to give six hours' notice of his intention to remove chicory, &c. from kiln. Officer to attend, and chicory, &c. to be weighed and removed into warehouse in his presence. Penalty on dryer not removing chicory, &c. pursuant to his notice.

12. Dryer not to have any dried chicory, &c. on his premises elsewhere than in the warehouse or in the kiln, on pain of forfeiture.

13. Chicory, &c. not to be sent out of warehouse unless in presence of an officer. Not less than 1 cwt. to be delivered out. Warehouse not to be opened for delivery between six P.M. and six A.M.

14. Officer to keep a stock account of chicory, &c. received into and delivered out of the warehouse; and if there be any deficiency, dryer to be charged with the duty thereon, and liable to penalty. No penalty incurred unless the deficiency of stock exceed 2 per cent.

15. Officer of excise shall make periodical returns of the duty charged on dryers of chicory, &c. When and to whom duty to be paid.

16. Dryer of chicory, &c. to provide scales and weights, and assist the officers of excise in using the same.

17. No dryer to have in his possession dried chicory, &c. other than such as shall have been dried on his own kiln.

18. Businesses of a dryer of chicory, &c. and a roaster thereof, or of coffee, not to be carried on on the same or on adjoining and communicating premises.

19. Certain acts may be lawfully done by dryers and roasters of chicory under the regulations of the commissioners.

20. Dryers of chicory to provide accommodation for the officers of excise.

21. Construction of terms used in this act in relation to sweets or made wines and chicory.

3. From and after the 31st December, 1860, so much of any act as provides for the remuneration of county coroners by fees, mileage, and allowances, shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

4. On and after the 1st January, 1861, there shall be paid to every county coroner, in lieu of the fees, mileage, and allowances which if this act had not been passed he would have been entitled to receive, such an annual salary as shall be agreed upon between him and the justices in general or quarter sessions assembled for the county for which, or for some portion of which, such coroner shall act, such salary, in the case of any person holding the office of county coroner at the time of the passing of this act, not being less than the average amount of the fees, mileage, and allowances actually received by such coroner and his predecessors, if any, for the five years immediately preceding the 31st December, 1860; and such salary shall be paid quarterly to such coroner by the treasurer of the county out of the county rate; and whenever, from death, removal, or any other cause whatever, any county coroner shall not be entitled to a salary for the whole of a quarter, a proportionate part of the salary shall be paid to him, or, in case of his death, to his personal representatives: provided always, that in case any such justices and any such county coroner as aforesaid shall be unable to agree as to the amount of the salary to be paid to such coroner, it shall be lawful for her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department, and he is required, upon the application of such coroner, to fix and determine the amount of such salary, having regard to such average as aforesaid, also the average number of inquests held by any such coroner in the preceding five years as aforesaid, and also to the special circumstances of each case, and the general scale of salaries of county coroners: provided also, that after the lapse of every successive period of five years, it shall be lawful for any such justices and such coroner as aforesaid to revise, and thereby increase or diminish, any such salary, having regard to the average number of inquests held by any such coroner in the five years immediately preceding, and subject, in case of their disagreement, to such appeal to the Home Secretary as before mentioned: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall in any manner take away, alter, or deprive any such coroner of the right to be repaid out of the county rate the expenses and disbursements which may have been paid or made by him on the holding of any inquest as provided by the act of the 1 Vict. c. 68.

5. If any coroner shall refuse or neglect to hold an inquest in any case when such inquest ought to be held, it shall be lawful for her Majesty's Attorney-General to apply to the Court of Queen's Bench, or, during vacation, to a judge of any one of her Majesty's superior courts of law at Westminster, for a rule calling on such coroner to shew cause why he should not hold such inquest; and if, after due service of such rule, good cause shall not be shewn against it, it shall be lawful for the judge to make such rule absolute, with or without payment of costs, as to such judge shall seem meet; and the coroner, upon being served with such rule absolute, shall obey the same, and hold such inquest, upon pain of being liable to an attachment in case of refusal or neglect.

6. It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, if he shall think fit, to remove, for inability or misbehaviour in his office, any such coroner already elected or appointed, or hereafter to be elected or appointed.

7. From and after the passing of this act, so much of the public general act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 92, as exempts the county of Chester from the provisions of that act, and also the local and personal act, 3 Vict. c. lxxxvii, authorising the appointment of additional coroners for the county palatine of Chester, (except the 21st section of that act, so far as regards the head coroners now in office for the three divisions into which that county is now divided), and also so much of the act of the 33 Hen. 8, c. 13, as relates to coroners for the shire of Chester, are hereby repealed, and all the provisions of this act, and of the public general act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 92, (except the said exemption), and all other public general acts, laws, statutes, and usages relating to coroners for counties, from time to time in force, shall, from and after the passing of this act, extend and apply to the county of Chester and the coroners for the divisions into which that county is now or hereafter may be divided: provided always, that, notwithstanding such repeal, the present divisions of the county of Chester under the powers of the said local and personal act, 3 Vict. c. lxxxvii, shall continue, unless and until that county shall be divided into other districts under the powers of the said public general act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 92, and the said present divisions shall be deemed to have been made under the last-mentioned act, without prejudice to the provisions contained in the 21st section of the said local and personal act, so far as regards the present head coroners of the said county: provided also, that such repeal shall not invalidate or affect the election of the present head coroners for the said county, but (subject to any future alteration or division of their respective divisions or districts under the public general act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 92) they shall continue in office as if such repeal had not taken place.

8. The word "county," in and throughout this act, shall be deemed and taken to include all counties, ridings, divisions, hundreds, wards, liberties, and other places, the coroners whereof are paid out of the county rates.

9. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to abridge or affect the royal prerogative, or any right vested in any person or persons, to appoint, by patent or by election, or otherwise, any coroner for any city, borough, liberty, franchise, manor, or place, or the authority of the Lord Chancellor, or to issue a writ de coronatore eligendo.

10. The said act of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 92, (as varied by this act), and this act, shall extend only to that part of the United Kingdom called England and Wales.

2. Orders of Council as to jurisdiction of supreme courts in certain possessions abroad.

- Sect. 1. The provisions of the said act shall extend to all possessions of her Majesty not having been acquired by cession or conquest, nor (except in virtue of this act) being within the jurisdiction of the legislative authority of any of her Majesty's possessions abroad.
2. It shall be lawful for her Majesty, by any Order or Orders in Council, to authorise and require the supreme or other principal court of judicature in any of her possessions, to be specified in such Order, (subject always to such conditions and limitations as in the said Order or Orders shall be mentioned), to take cognisance of all or any suits, actions, or prosecutions for treason or felony, which may arise in respect of any act or matter occurring within any possession of her Majesty to which this or the said hereinbefore recited act shall extend, and by such Order or Orders to make regulations respecting the attendance of witnesses in any such suit, action, or prosecution, and the mode of enforcing such attendance, and respecting the custody and conveyance of any person charged with the commission of any such crime within such last-mentioned possessions, and respecting such other matters as may be requisite for the due trial of such person by such court as aforesaid; and every such Order shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament as soon as conveniently may be after the making thereof.

CAP. CXXII.

An Act to enable the Legislatures of Her Majesty's Possessions abroad to make Enactments similar to the Enactment of the Act 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 8. [28th August, 1860.]

Whereas, by an act passed in the 9 Geo. 4, [c. 31], intituled "An Act for consolidating and amending the Statutes in England relating to Offences against the Person," it was enacted, (amongst other things), that where any person, being feloniously stricken, poisoned, or otherwise hurt at any place in England, should die of such stroke, poisoning, or hurt, upon the sea, or at any place out of England, every offence committed in respect of any such case, whether the same shall amount to the offence of murder or of manslaughter, or of being accessory before the fact to murder, or after the fact to murder or manslaughter, might be dealt with, inquired for, tried, determined, and punished in the country or place in England in which such stroke, poisoning, or hurt should happen, in the same manner in all respects as if such offence had been wholly committed in that country or place: and whereas it may be desirable that provisions similar or analogous to the above-recited provisions should be made with respect to offences committed within her Majesty's possessions abroad: and whereas doubts are entertained whether it is competent to the Legislature of any such possession to make such provision: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. It shall be lawful for the Legislature of any of her Majesty's possessions abroad to enact, by any law or ordinance, to be by them made in the usual manner, that where any person, being feloniously stricken, poisoned, or otherwise hurt at any place within the limits of such possession, shall die of such stroke, poisoning, or hurt, upon the sea, or at any place out of the limits of such possession, every offence committed in respect of any such case, whether the same shall amount to the offence of murder or of manslaughter, or of being accessory before the fact to murder, or after the fact to murder or manslaughter, may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined, and punished in the possession within the limits of which such stroke, poisoning, or hurt shall happen, in the same manner in all respects as if such offence had been wholly committed within the limits of such possession, or such Legislature may enact, by any such law or ordinance to be made as aforesaid, to the like effect.

Sect. 1. Sect. 17 of the act of the session holden in the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 94, directing the mode of securing the annual income of archbishops and bishops, shall, as respects every archbishop and bishop who shall succeed to a see after the passing of this act, be repealed.

2. Upon the first avoidance of the see of any archbishop or bishop in England after the passing of this act, all the lands, hereditaments, and emoluments of or belonging to such see (except all rights of patronage or presentation, and the residences of the archbishop or bishop, and such lands necessary for the enjoyment of such residences as shall be attached thereto by any scheme sanctioned by Order in Council) shall become vested absolutely in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England, for the purposes and subject to the provisions applicable to other hereditaments vested in the said commissioners.

3. After the lands of a see have become vested in the commissioners as aforesaid, an arrangement shall be made as soon as conveniently may be, and with all reasonable dispatch, for assigning to the archbishop or bishop of such see and his successors, as an endowment for the see, such of the lands and hereditaments then vested in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England as in the judgment of the estates committee of the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and subject to the approbation of such archbishop or bishop, may be deemed convenient to be held as such endowment, and will secure, as nearly as may be, after deducting costs of management, a net annual income equal to that named for the archbishop or bishop of the see by any act of Parliament or Order in Council then in force, and no more; and in the meantime, until such endowment is so assigned, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners shall pay to the archbishop or bishop of the see the annual income named for him as aforesaid, at the times at which the same would have been payable if this act had not been passed.

4. In case any archbishop or bishop who may have succeeded on an avoidance happening before the passing of this act, and having an income named as aforesaid, signify his willingness to accept an endowment for his see in lands and hereditaments, in lieu of his income, it shall be lawful to make the like arrangement for that purpose as might have been made if the lands of the see had become vested in the commissioners as aforesaid; and upon such arrangement being made, all the lands, hereditaments, and emoluments of or belonging to the see, except such as may be assigned under such arrangement, and such rights of patronage or presentation, and residences as aforesaid, shall become vested absolutely in the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

5. On the avoidance from time to time of any see, after the assignment of an endowment for the same, the estates committee of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners may, if they shall think fit, revise the arrangement in force in relation to such endowment, and for that purpose inquire into the state and productiveness of such endowment; and if such endowment, in the judgment of the committee, will secure a net annual income exceeding that named for the archbishop or bishop as aforesaid, or will not secure the full amount of such annual income, such committee may report thereon to the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and the said commissioners shall, if they think fit, make an arrangement by vesting part of the lands and hereditaments constituting such endowment in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, or by assigning lands and hereditaments by way of addition to such endowment, or by means of annual or other payments to or by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, as the case may require, which may secure, in the judgment of the said committee, to the archbishop or bishop who may succeed upon that avoidance, the net annual income so named, or as near thereto as circumstances will allow: provided always, that if a difference of opinion as to the value or sufficiency of the estates which such committee may propose to leave or to assign to any see shall arise between the archbishop or bishop thereof and the said committee, such difference shall be settled by arbitration before such arrangement as is last mentioned shall be made.

6. When the arrangement is completed under this act for the endowment of a see, the lands and hereditaments thereby assigned shall be the endowment of the see, and shall be taken in lieu of the income intended to be secured thereby.

7. All arrangements for the purposes of this act shall be made by the authority and in the manner by and in which arrangements for carrying into effect the recommendations recited in the act of the session holden in the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 77, may now be made.

8. No lands assigned or secured as the endowment of any see under this act shall be granted by the archbishop or bishop otherwise than from year to year, or for a term of years in possession not exceeding twenty-one years, at the best annual rent that can be reasonably gotten without fine, the lessee not to be made punishable for waste, or exempted from liability in respect of waste; and so that in every such lease such or the like covenants, conditions, and reservations be entered into, reserved, or contained, with or for the benefit of the archbishop or bishop and his successors, as under sect. 1 of the act passed in the session holden in the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 27, (for better enabling the incumbents of ecclesiastical benefices to demise the lands belonging to their benefices on farming leases), are to be entered into, reserved, or contained in a lease granted under that enactment to or for the benefit of the incumbent and his successors, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will permit; but where, under the said section of the last-mentioned act, any consents are provided for or required, the consent only of the archbishop or bishop for the time being shall be requisite: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the archbishop or bishop, with the approval of the estates committee of the

Ecclesiastical Commissioners, testified under the common seal of the said commissioners, which the said committee are hereby empowered to affix to any lease for this purpose, from time to time to grant mining or building or other leases of any such lands, for such periods, for such considerations, upon such terms, and generally in such manner as such committee under the circumstances of each case may think fit, and it shall be lawful for such committee to require that any portion of the rent reserved on any such lease shall be payable to the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

9. The estates committee shall cause the property assigned as an endowment for any see as aforesaid to be inspected so often as they think fit, and shall cause notice in writing of all dilapidations or want of repair found on such inspection, and of the repairs or works necessary for remedying the same, to be given to the archbishop or bishop of such see, and such archbishop or bishop shall forthwith do or cause to be done, at his or their own expense, or at the expense of his or their lessees or tenants, (as the case may require), the repairs or works mentioned in such notice; and if any difference arise between such archbishop or bishop and the estates committee with regard to the condition of such property, or the repairs or works required by the estates committee, the matter in difference shall be referred to arbitration as hereinafter provided.

10. It shall be lawful for the estates committee, upon the application of any archbishop or bishop, to undertake or authorise any works of permanent improvement which such committee may think advisable, on any lands assigned by way of endowment to such archbishop or bishop; and the Ecclesiastical Commissioners may advance out of the common fund the money which may be required for the purpose of such works, and the money so advanced shall be repaid, with such interest, and at such times, and until repaid shall be charged on such of the said lands, as may be agreed upon by the said committee and the said archbishop or bishop, and his or their tenants interested in such improvements.

11. The estates committee shall, when required by any archbishop or bishop to whom lands may have been assigned as an endowment under this act, undertake the management of such lands, and receive the rents and profits thereof during the incumbency of the archbishop or bishop; and in every such case as aforesaid the estates committee, during their management, may grant all such leases as might have been granted by such archbishop or bishop if the lands had continued under his or their management, and may, with the approval of such archbishop or bishop, grant such other leases as might have been granted by him or them, with the approval of the estates committee; and the commissioners shall, during the time such lands are under the management of the said estates committee, pay to such archbishop or bishop the annual income to secure which the lands may have been assigned.

12. And whereas, by the act of the session holden in the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 113, s. 67, it is provided, that, by payments or investments made out of the common fund of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, or by means of an actual conveyance and assignment of lands, tithes, or other hereditaments, vested or to be vested in them as therein mentioned, or of a portion thereof, additional provision shall be made by the authority therein provided for the cure of souls in parishes where such assistance is most required: provided always, that in making any such additional provision out of any tithes, or any lands or other hereditaments allotted or assigned in lieu of tithes, so vested or to be vested in the said commissioners, or out of the rents and profits thereof, due consideration shall be had of the wants and circumstances of the places in which such tithes arise or have heretofore arisen: in making additional provision for the cure of souls, under the recited enactment, out of any lands or hereditaments whatsoever now vested or hereafter to be vested in the said commissioners, (except lands or hereditaments which may have been or may hereafter be bought or taken in exchange by the commissioners, or any estate or interest in lands or hereditaments so bought or taken in exchange during the continuance of such estate or interest), or out of the rent and profits thereof, (except as aforesaid), due consideration shall be had of the wants and circumstances of the places in which such lands or hereditaments may be situate or arise; and the same rule shall also be applicable, in case the commissioners shall see fit, in favour of places in which lands or hereditaments now vested or heretofore vested in the commissioners are situated, from which the commissioners have heretofore derived any income.

13. Where any ecclesiastical corporation sole is in the receipt of an income fixed by act of Parliament, and the estates of such corporation yield an annual income greater than the income so fixed, it shall be incumbent on the Ecclesiastical Commissioners to make, out of any tithes, lands, or hereditaments whatsoever from which such annual income arises, or out of the rents and profits thereof, such provision as may seem to them needful for the cure of souls in the parish or place in which such tithes, lands, or hereditaments are situate or arise, in the same manner and to the same extent in and to which such provision might be made if the said tithes, lands, or hereditaments were actually vested in the commissioners.

14. In making additional provision for the cure of souls, under sect. 67 of the said act of the 3 & 4 Vict., preference may be given, if the said commissioners see fit, to those places in respect of which contributions from other sources are made in aid of grants out of the common fund, but this enactment shall not prejudice the proviso at the end of the said section, or the last two preceding sections of this act.

15. In districts in which large masses of population are collected for the purpose of working mines, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners, by resolution of a general meeting, from time to time to make grants to meet benefactions for the purpose of making temporary provision for the cure of souls.

16. Where it appears to the Church Estates Commissioners that inconvenience is occasioned in the negotiations between any ecclesiastical corporation, sole or aggregate, and its lessees, (in relation to property which it is now authorised to dispose of), by reason of its disability to sell or exchange intermixed or other lands held by such corporation in possession, or for some other estate which it is not now authorised to dispose of, it shall be lawful for such ecclesiastical corporation, with the approval in writing of the said Church Estates Commissioners, to sell any such lands (whether of freehold or copyhold or customary tenure), or to exchange any such lands for other lands, or any estate or interest therein; and all the provisions of the act of the session holden in the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 104, as amended by the act of the session holden in the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 116, and this act, authorising the receiving or paying of money by way of equality of exchange, and concerning the payment, application, and investment of any money payable to or for the benefit of any such corporation on any such sale, exchange, or enfranchisement as is mentioned in the said act of the 14 & 15 Vict., and all other the provisions of the said acts in anywise applicable for effectuating any such sale, exchange, or enfranchisement, or in consequence thereof, shall, so far as the nature of the case may require, extend and be applicable to and in consequence of any sale or exchange authorised by this act.

17. Where it appears to the Church Estates Commissioners that any such ecclesiastical corporation has been accustomed to renew, without payment of any fine, or for a nominal fine, the lease of any lands used for the purposes of a school, or the support or maintenance thereof, it shall be lawful for such corporation, with the approval in writing of the Church Estates Commissioners, or where the lands have become vested in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, for such commissioners, to convey to the trustees or other persons to whom a renewal of such lease might have been granted, in trust for the purposes of such school, all or any part of such lands, for the whole estate of such corporation therein, without requiring the payment of any consideration for the same; and every conveyance in pursuance of this provision shall be made and confirmed as provided by sect. 5 of the 14 & 15 Vict. with reference to such conveyances as therein mentioned.

18. When any ecclesiastical corporation, previous to the passing of this act, has been accustomed to grant or renew, without payment of any fine, or for a nominal fine, the lease of any lands, tenements, tithe rent-charges, or other hereditaments, for the endowment, either in whole or part, of the incumbent of any parish or chapel, the whole estate of such ecclesiastical corporation in such lands, tenements, tithe rent-charges, or other hereditaments, heretofore held by such lease, may, with the consent of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, under their common seal, be lawfully conveyed by such corporation to the incumbent, to whom a renewal of such lease might have been granted, without such corporation requiring the payment of any valuable consideration for such conveyance.

19. When any ecclesiastical corporation, previous to the passing of this act, has been accustomed to reserve any annual rent or other payments, in any lease granted or renewed by them, for the endowment, either in whole or part, of the incumbent of any parish or chapel, the whole estate of such ecclesiastical corporation in such annual rents or other payments heretofore granted and reserved as aforesaid may, with the consent of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, under their common seal, be lawfully conveyed to the incumbent for whom they are at present reserved, without such corporation requiring any valuable consideration for the conveyance of such estate.

20. In any case in which any estate or interest, under any lease or grant made by any such ecclesiastical corporation, may be vested in any person or persons as a trustee or trustees, whether expressly or by implication of law, with power to raise money for the purpose of procuring a renewal of such lease or grant, and in every other case in which a power is vested in any person or persons for that purpose, it shall be lawful for such person or persons to raise money for the purpose of purchasing the reversion of or otherwise enfranchising the property comprised in such lease or grant, and to apply the same accordingly, in the same manner, and subject to the same conditions, mutatis mutandis, so far as the same may be applicable to the case, as such person or persons might, by virtue of such power, have raised money for the purpose of renewing such lease or grant, and have applied the same accordingly.

21. In estimating, for the purposes of any sale, purchase, or exchange under the said acts of the 14 & 15 Vict. and 17 & 18 Vict., and this act, or any of them, the value of the estate or interest of any lessee of any lands holden of any archbishop or bishop, or of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, under any lease granted for a term of twenty-one years, an extension of the unexpired term to the 11th October, 1884, at the accustomed rate of fine, shall, as a rule, be allowed, and a like extension, at the accustomed rate of fine, shall, for the purposes of sale, purchase, or exchange, be allowed in the case of any lease for lives, the extent and value of which shall be computed by arbitrators, in default of an agreement between the parties, to be less than the extent and value of a term ending on the said 11th October, 1884.

22. The said Ecclesiastical Commissioners, or an ecclesiastical corporation, aggregate or sole, in carrying out the powers of leasing mines and minerals vested in them, shall, in the granting to the lessees of mines and minerals holden of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, or any ecclesiastical corporation, aggregate or sole, whether for years or for lives, an extended term or estate therein, and fixing the terms of such grant, have regard to the value of the estate and interest of the lessees of all such mines and minerals under any lease or leases heretofore ordinarily renewable on the payment of a fine, and shall, as a rule, in computing such value, estimate and include an extension of the existing unexpired term or estate of the lessees to the 11th October, 1884, at the accustomed rate of fine; and in the case of such of the said leases for lives as, according to the expectancy of human life, according to the life tables which are appended to the twelfth annual report of the registrar-general of births, deaths, and marriages in England, would not determine until after the said 11th October, 1884, shall have regard to the actual value of the estate and interest of the lessees.

23. In case any such lessees shall require any extended term in such mines and minerals to be granted to them, and any difference shall arise between the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners or other ecclesiastical corporation and such lessees thereupon, or as to the value so to be estimated, or as to the rents to be reserved, or the term of years to be granted, or other the terms and conditions on which such lease for any extended term or estate shall be granted, it shall be lawful for either party to require the other party to join in referring to arbitration the matter or matters so in difference, and the same shall be referred to arbitration.

24. In any case where a treaty shall have been or shall be entered into under the said acts of the 14 & 15 Vict. and the 17 & 18 Vict., and this act, or any of them, for any sale, exchange, or purchase, it shall be lawful for either party to require the other party to join in referring to arbitration the finding of the annual value of the property comprised in the lease or grant, and of the value of the fee-simple; and when such values have been found, it shall be binding on both parties, if either party require to proceed to such sale, exchange, or purchase, on terms to be computed according to such finding: provided always, that whenever the Ecclesiastical Commissioners shall decline to enter into a treaty with a lessee for either the sale of the reversion or the purchase of the term of or in the lands held by such lessee, it shall nevertheless be lawful for such lessee, at any time within two years after the said commissioners shall have so declined to treat, to require that his estate and interest therein shall be purchased by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners so declining to treat as aforesaid, and that the value of such estate and interest shall be ascertained by such methods, and with such extension of the unexpired term on his said lease, as are by this act provided in respect of other leaseholds.

25. Provided always, that under any arbitration under the said act of the 17 & 18 Vict., or this act, where any lease shall relate to lands, (except building ground or houses), the beneficial interest of the lessee shall be valued at the same rate of interest at which the value of the fee-simple has been determined; and where such lease shall relate to houses or to building ground, it shall be lawful for the arbitrator or arbitrators or umpire, as the case may be, simply to find the gross sum to be paid for such sale or enfranchisement, in such manner as he or they may deem just: provided also, that regard shall be had to any consideration given to the lessee by this act on account of the long-continued practice of renewal: provided further, that in the case of houses the umpire shall, notwithstanding anything in the last-mentioned act or this act contained, be appointed by her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department.

26. Where persons holding under-leases under the lessee of any ecclesiastical corporation may, either before or after the passing of this act, be under obligation to pay or contribute to the fines and expenses of renewal, and such lessee is unable to obtain a renewal of his lease, but the under-lessees are, by reason of the purchase of the reversion or other arrangement made by such lessee with the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, secured in the enjoyment of the full terms which might have been secured to them by means of such renewal, or shall be otherwise sufficiently indemnified from all loss which might be occasioned by want of such renewal, the persons holding such under-leases shall pay to such lessee such gross sums of money, or such additional yearly rents during the unexpired residues of such terms, as may be a just equivalent for the exemption from the expenses of such renewal; and where any such under-lessee has under-leased, and his under-lessees are under like obligation to contribute to the expenses of such renewal, they shall pay to their under-lessor such gross sums of money, or such additional yearly rents during the unexpired residue of their terms, as may be a just equivalent for such exemption as aforesaid; and the payments to be made in each case, and the nature and sufficiency of the indemnity (if any) to be given, shall, in case the parties differ about the same, be referred to arbitration.

27. And whereas considerable portions of the lands and houses holden by lessees of ecclesiastical corporations, which may be dealt with under the provisions of this act, are by such lessees granted to under-lessees, with the right of renewal in case of the renewal of the original lease, and again sub-demised by such under-lessees to persons holding under them with a similar right of renewal: that all such under-lessees, and persons having such right of renewal, shall have and enjoy, according to their respective estates and interest in such lands and houses, the benefit of the provisions contained in this act for the protection of the lessees.

28. The powers and provisions contained in sect. 2 of the said act of the 14 & 15 Vict. [c. 104], and sect. 2 of the said act of the 17 & 18 Vict. [c. 116], shall extend to authorise the apportionment of fines certain and heriots, and also to authorise the substitution of money payments in lieu of heriots, and the apportionment of such money payments, and shall be applicable as well to cases under those acts as to cases under this act; and the powers and provisions so extended shall apply to all cases of the surrender, conveyance, or assignment to or in trust for the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners of the estate or interest in a part only of the lands comprised in any lease, grant, or copy, the reversionary or freehold estate in which is or shall be vested in the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and also to all cases of the sale, exchange, or enfranchisement, by the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners, of a part only of the lands comprised in any such lease, grant, or copy; and the enfranchisement or surrender under the said acts, or either of them, or this act, of a part only of any copyhold or customary lands held under a grant or copy, shall not affect, in other respects than the apportionment of the rents, fines, and heriots, any custom by or under which the remainder of the land comprised in such grant or copy is held, or the demisable quality of the remainder of such land.

29. In every case in which, under any contract by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners or any such corporation with any lessee or grantee holding land under the Ecclesiastical Commissioners or such corporation by any lease for lives or years, or copyhold or customary grant, for the purchase or receiving in exchange or partition by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners or such corporation of any land comprised in such lease or grant, any sum of money is agreed to be paid by the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners or such corporation, and in which the lessee or grantee shall fail, or declare himself unable to make a marketable title to, or an effectual assurance of, such land to the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners or such corporation, such sum of money may, with the consent of such lessee or grantee, be paid into the Bank of England, in the name and with the privity of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, to an account in the matter of "An Act," [title of this act], to the credit of the parties interested in such land, and be disposed of in like manner as is directed by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, with respect to purchase monies in the case of parties neglecting or failing to make out satisfactory titles; and upon the execution of an assignment, surrender, or other assurance by the person for the time being the party in possession or receipt of the rents and profits of the land so agreed to be sold or conveyed in exchange unto or in trust for the Ecclesiastical Commissioners or such corporation, all the estate and interest in such land in respect whereof such money shall have been paid shall vest absolutely in the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners or corporation, or other person to whom the same shall be expressed to be assured.

30. It shall be lawful for the commissioners, if they shall think fit, to release any rent-charge granted or transferred to them by way of endowment of any church or chapel, in consideration of the transfer into their names of a sum in the 3l. per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities, producing dividends equal in amount to such rent-charge; and also, if they shall think fit, to release any part or parts of the lands out of which any such rent-charge is issuing from the payment thereof, without any consideration, provided the residue of such lands shall, in their judgment, be sufficient security for such rent-charge; and in such case the rent-charge shall be wholly chargeable on and issuing out of such residue of the lands.

31. Where any estate now or heretofore of any ecclesiastical corporation is subject to any special act of Parliament providing for the perpetual renewal of the lease or leases thereof, or for the leasing or the management of such estate, or creating or imposing any rights, remedies, or obligations with reference to such estate, the rights of renewal, and other the rights and obligations under such special act, shall not be affected by this act, or by the transfer of such estate to the commissioners; but such special act, and any leases, contracts, under-leases, enfranchisements, and instruments already or hereafter to be made, entered into, or executed thereunder, shall be construed so that, by virtue of the act of Parliament or other authority under which the estate shall have been transferred to or vested in the commissioners, the same leases, contracts, under-leases, enfranchisements, and instruments may operate and have effect as if the commissioners, as to such part of the estate as for the time being shall be vested in them, and their respective assigns, as to each such several part thereof as shall be vested in them respectively, were therein substituted for the ecclesiastical corporation whose estate has been or shall be so transferred, or have become so vested; and such special act, leases, contracts, under-leases, enfranchisements, and instruments shall be construed as if such commissioners, or their respective assigns, as regards the portion of the estate vested in them respectively, were named or referred to therein instead of the corporation named or referred to therein; and the seal of such commissioners shall be in every case as regards the estate or part of an estate for the time being vested in them, and the sealing and delivery by any assignee shall be in every case as regards the estate or part of an estate for the time being vested in him, as effectual as the signature or seal, or signature and seal, as the case may be, of the corporation whose estate has been or shall be so transferred or become so vested.

32. Whenever any property shall be vested in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners jointly or in common with any other person, or subject to any estate or interest vested in any other person, either under any special act of Parliament or any lease or grant, and such person shall be a trustee of the estate or interest vested in him or them, it shall be lawful for such trustee, in every case in which he shall expressly or by implication of law have a power of sale, with such consents only (if any) as may be requisite to such sale, to concur with the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and also to and for the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners, under an arrangement to be made in manner herein provided, to concur with such trustee as aforesaid, in making partition of such property so as to vest in the said commissioners in severalty in fee, discharged from all rights, titles, and trusts affecting the estate or interest of such trustee, such portion of the said property as shall, under all the circumstances of the case, be a just and fair equivalent for the interest of the said commissioners in the whole of such estate, and in any payments or reservations payable to them thereout, and so as to vest in such trustee in severalty in fee such remaining portion of such estate as shall in like manner be a just and fair equivalent for the interest in the whole estate of all other parties besides the said commissioners; and the portions of such estate to be vested in the said commissioners and trustee respectively in severalty as aforesaid shall be ascertained by arbitration as herein provided.

33. Every exchange or partition which shall be made under the provisions of the said acts of the 14 & 15 Vict. and the 17 & 18 Vict., and of this act, or any of them, shall be valid and effectual in the law to all intents and purposes whatsoever, and shall be in nowise liable to be impeached by reason of any infirmity of estate or defect of title of any of the parties to such exchange or partition; and the land expressed to be conveyed to or vested in any corporation or person under such exchange or partition shall henceforth be subject only to the same uses, limitations, charges, and equities as previously affected the land in lieu or in respect of which the same was conveyed or vested by way of substitution, or as near thereto as regard being had to the different natures or tenures of the interests acquired under such exchange or partition, and the relative rights and equities of parties, and the circumstances of the case, will admit or may require.

34. When the reversion in fee in the lands and hereditaments at Paddington, in the county of Middlesex, part of the possessions of the see of London, (commonly called "the Paddington estate"), now vested in the Bishop of London, subject to the provisions of a private act of Parliament passed in the 6 Geo. 4, c. xlv, and the several acts therein recited, shall be vested in the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners, either under the provisions of this act or of any of the acts relating to the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners, the same shall become vested in them subject to the several powers and obligations created by the said private act and the acts therein recited, which powers and obligations shall be exercisable by and binding upon the said commissioners while the said reversion shall remain vested in them, in the same manner as if the said commissioners were named in the said acts instead of the said bishop, and as if the common seal of the said commissioners had been thereby required or referred to instead of the hand or signature of the said bishop; and the said reversion shall continue to be so vested in the said commissioners until a special scheme, to be prepared by the said commissioners, for the purpose of transferring, disposing of, or managing the same, shall be approved of by her Majesty in Council, notice of which scheme shall be inserted and published in the London Gazette one calendar month at least previously to the same being so approved; and in such scheme there shall be inserted such provisions as shall be deemed proper for the preservation and future exercise and fulfilment of the said powers and obligations, with such alter-rations or modifications (if any) as, having regard to the change of circumstances, may be deemed necessary; and such scheme, when so approved, shall have the force of an act of Parliament.

35. And whereas in some cases leases or grants made by ecclesiastical corporations are in settlement, or held in trust, without power to raise money for renewals, or the manner prescribed for raising money for renewals may not be applicable for raising the money required for purchase or enfranchisement; it shall be lawful for any person or persons being a trustee or trustees, expressly or by implication of law, of any such lease or grant, or any person being under any will or other settlement in the actual possession or receipt of the rents and profits of the lands comprised in such lease or grant, upon purchasing the reversion or otherwise procuring the enfranchisement of such lands, to charge such lands (or where the whole thereof is settled to the same uses, trusts, or purposes, any part thereof, exclusively of the residue thereof) with the payment to any person advancing any money paid for such purchase or enfranchisement, and for the expenses incident to such purchase or enfranchisement, or, for either of those purposes, of the money so advanced, with interest thereon at a rate not exceeding 5l. per centum per annum, and to convey or cause to be conveyed such lands by way of mortgage for securing such payment accordingly; and such charge shall be effectual, as well on the subsisting term or estate under such lease or grant as on the reversion or interest acquired by such purchase or enfranchisement, and not only against the person making the same, and all persons claiming through him or for whom he may be a trustee, but also against all persons claiming any estate or interest in the same lands through or under the same will or settlement, but so as not to prejudice any prior charge or incumbrance, under lease, or tenancy affecting such lands; and, subject and without prejudice to such charge and mortgage so made as aforesaid, the interest acquired by such purchase or enfranchisement shall be subject in equity as is provided by sect. 3 of the said act of the 14 & 15 Vict., concerning the interest in land acquired by any lessee under that act.

36. Wherever the estate and interest under any such lease or grant may be vested in any trustee or trustees, either expressly or by implication of law, and any monies, stocks, funds, or securities for money are vested in the same trustee or trustee, upon the same or like trusts, it shall be lawful for such trustees or trustee, with the consent of the person or persons entitled for the time being to the beneficial receipt of the dividends or annual proceeds of such monies, stocks, funds, or securities, if such person or persons shall be capable of giving consent, or if there shall be no person capable of giving consent, or if such consent shall be withheld, and the trustee or trustees shall consider such a course essential to the interest of the parties entitled under the settlement, then with the sanction and approbation of the Court of Chancery, to be obtained on petition to the said court, to raise out of such monies, or by sale of such stocks, funds, or securities, a sufficient sum for the purpose of purchasing the reversion of, or otherwise enfranchising, the property comprised in such lease or grant, and of procuring, if necessary for the purpose of enfranchisement, the renewal of such lease or grant, and to pay and apply the same accordingly, and all payments and applications of monies, or of the proceeds of the sale of such stocks, funds, or securities, so made as aforesaid, shall be valid and binding on all persons interested under the trust, will, or settlement under or by which such monies, stocks, funds, or securities for money may be held in trust or settled as aforesaid.

37. Where any such lease or grant may be vested in any person or persons as a trustee or trustees, whether expressly or by implication of law, and other lands, whether freehold, copyhold, or leasehold, are vested in the same trustees or trustee upon the same or like trusts, or are settled to the same uses or purposes, or as near thereto as the different tenures of the lands admit, or where any person is, under any will or settlement, in the actual possession or receipt of the rents and profits of the lands comprised in such lease or grant, and of other lands settled to like trusts or uses as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for such trustees or trustee, or such person as aforesaid, with the sanction and approbation of the Court of Chancery, to be obtained on petition to the said court, to raise money, either by sale or mortgage of all or any part of the property comprised in the lease or grant, and the other lands, whether freehold, copyhold, or leasehold, vested in such trustee or trustees, or settled as aforesaid, as the said court shall direct, for the purpose of purchasing the reversion of or otherwise enfranchising the property comprised in such lease or grant, in such manner, and subject to such provisions for protecting or adjusting the equities arising under such purchase or enfranchisement and such mortgage or sale as aforesaid, as the court shall think fit; and all sales and mortgages effected for the purposes aforesaid shall be valid and binding on all persons interested under the trust, will, or settlement under which such lands may be held in trust or settled as aforesaid.

38. In any case in which the estate and interest under any lease or grant made by any ecclesiastical corporation may be vested in any trustee or trustees, and such trustee or trustees shall not have power to sell, it shall be lawful for such trustee or trustees, with the consent in writing of the person or persons entitled for the time being to the beneficial receipt of the rent or annual proceeds thereof, if such person or persons shall be capable of giving consent, or if there shall be no person capable of giving consent, or if such consent shall be withheld, and the trustee or trustees shall consider a sale essential to the interests of parties entitled under the settlement, then with the sanction and approbation of the Court of Chancery, to be obtained on petition to the said court, to sell and dispose of all or any part of such property; and in every such case the purchase money shall be paid to such trustee or trustees, whose receipt shall be a good discharge for the same; and the money so paid to such trustee or trustees shall be invested and be held by him or them upon the same trusts, as far as the circumstances of the case will admit, as the leasehold property, if not sold, would have been subject to; and such investment may, with the sanction and approbation of the Court of Chancery, be made in the purchase of other leasehold estates, whether held under any ecclesiastical corporation or not.

39. Any person authorised, under this act or otherwise, to raise any money for the purchase of the reversion of any lease or grant, may exchange with the corporation by which such lease or grant was made, or with the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, any part of the lands comprised in such lease or grant, for the reversion, estate, or interest of such corporation or the Ecclesiastical Commissioners in any other part of the lands comprised therein, or may exchange such lands, or any part thereof, for the reversion, estate, or interest of the corporation by which any lease or grant was made in any lands comprised in any other lease or grant held under the same trusts, or settled to the same uses, trusts, or purposes.

40. And whereas certain officers of ecclesiastical corporations will be injured by the restriction hereinbefore contained on the power of granting leases, whereby such officers will be deprived of the profits arising from the preparation of such leases and other instruments connected therewith: it shall be lawful for the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and they are hereby required, to award and pay to such officers such sum of money or annuity as may be deemed by the said commissioners a sufficient compensation for the loss such officers will from time to time sustain by reason of the restriction aforesaid: provided nevertheless, that such officers have personally discharged their own duties.

41. Where by this act it is provided that any matter in difference shall be referred to arbitration, or where any difference shall arise between the commissioners and any body or person touching the annual or other sums of money to be paid to any archbishop or bishop as herein directed, or touching the value or nature of the estates proposed to be assigned as endowment for any archbishop or bishop, the matter in difference shall be referred to two arbitrators, one to be appointed by each party, and all the provisions of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, applicable in the case of such an arbitration, shall apply accordingly; and for the purpose of the application of the said act this act shall be deemed the "document" authorising the reference to arbitration; and where any matter is so referred, the award of the arbitrators or umpire shall be final.

42. It shall be lawful for any person, within the meaning of the term "person," as the same is interpreted by the act 16 & 17 Vict. c. 50, to exchange, under the provisions of the same act, any advowson or ecclesiastical patronage belonging to such person for any advowson or ecclesiastical patronage belonging to any ecclesiastical corporation aggregate or sole, or any other person.

43. Every receipt or acknowledgment of payment already given or to be given by the treasurers for the time being of the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners shall fully discharge the person or corporation to whom the same shall be given from all responsibility in respect of the amount in such receipt or acknowledgment expressed to have been received or paid, and from all liability in respect of the application or misapplication thereof.

44. Nothing in this act contained, except sects. 18, 19, and 42, shall in any manner affect or apply to the Cathedral Church of Christ in Oxford, nor shall anything in this act contained affect or apply to the Cathedral or Collegiate Church of Manchester, or to the Parish of Manchester Division Act, 1850.

Whereas the following gas companies, that is to say, the Gas-light and Coke Company, the City of London Gas-light and Coke Company, the Commercial Gas-light and Coke Company, the Equitable Gas-light Company, the Great Central Gas Consumers Company, the Independent Gas-light and Coke Company, the London Gas-light Company, the Phoenix Gas-light and Coke Company, the Ratcliff Gas-light and Coke Company, the Surrey Consumers Gas Company, the South Metropolitan Gas-light and Coke Company, the Western Gas-light Company, Limited, the Imperial Gas-light and Coke Company, or some of them, are respectively incorporated, under the authority of Parliament, for the purpose of supplying several districts of the metropolis with gas; and the said companies, instead of supplying gas by several mains in the same district, have agreed, as far as possible, each one to confine its supply to a separate district, in order to economise capital and avoid the too frequent opening of the public streets; and, subject to the provisions and restrictions of this act, it is expedient that such districting should receive the sanction of Parliament: and whereas the regulations to which those companies are subject are not uniform: and whereas it is expedient that provision be made for the due regulation of all companies and persons supplying gas within the metropolis: be it enacted &c. as follows; that is to say—

Sect. 1. This act may for all purposes be cited as "The Metropolitan Gas Act, 1860."

2. The Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, (except so far as the provisions thereof are inconsistent with this act), is incorporated with and forms part of this act, and shall apply to the several companies before named or referred to, as fully as if the gasworks of the several companies were authorised by this act; and the expression "undertakers" in the recited act shall be held to apply to every gas company affected by this act; but it shall not be lawful for any gas company, by the application of any of their profits or funds, to make up to the prescribed rate, or the rate of 10*l.* per cent. per annum where no such rate shall be prescribed, any dividend which shall have been payable more than six years previously; provided that the powers vested in the justices by the said act shall be exercised by a magistrate.

3. This act applies to the several gas companies, and to all persons already or hereafter supplying gas within the metropolis, except as hereinafter excepted.

4. In the construction of this act the following words and expressions have the following meanings, unless excluded by the subject or context; that is to say—

The expression "gas company" or "gas companies" means and includes any and every company, and any person or persons, supplying gas within the limits of this act:

The expression "local authority" includes the Metropolitan Board of Works, vestries, and district boards appointed under an act of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, for the local management of the metropolis:

The word "inspector" or "inspectors" shall mean any metropolitan gas inspector or inspectors to be appointed under this act:

The word "consumer" means a person receiving, or entitled, in accordance with this act, to receive, a supply of gas from any gas company:

The words "the metropolis" have the same meaning as in the said act of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120:

The word "district" means, with respect to every gas company supplying gas wholly or in part within the metropolis, the district, so far as it is within the metropolis, within which the gas company are from time to time authorised to supply gas; and means, with respect to any person or persons not being a gas company, but supplying gas wholly or in part within the metropolis, the district within the metropolis within which he or they shall from time to time, as a trade or business, supply gas:

The word "street" includes square, court, alley, highway, lane, road, thoroughfare, and public passage or place:

The word "premises" includes public and private messuages and other buildings, lands, and tenements whatsoever:

The words "the gasworks" mean the works of the respective gas companies, and the works connected therewith:

The words "rate" include all rents and other payments for a supply of gas:

The words "meter rent" include all rents and other payments for the use of gas meters:

The word "magistrate" means any police or stipendiary magistrate acting in and for the district of the metropolis in which the matter referred to him arises, and in the city of London and the liberties thereof shall mean any justice of the peace for the city of London and the liberties thereof:

The words "common gas" shall mean gas of an illuminating power, hereinafter defined, of not less than twelve candles:

The words "cannel gas" shall mean gas of an illuminating power, hereinafter defined, of not less than twenty candles.

5. The limits of this act shall be the metropolis: provided always, that this act, and the several clauses and provisions thereof, shall not extend or apply, or be construed to extend or apply, to the several gas companies set forth and enumerated in the schedule annexed to this act: provided also, that the districts severally specified and described in the acts and instrument of incorporation respectively mentioned in the said schedule, or within which the said companies, or any of them, are now supplying gas, (notwithstanding the said districts, or any portions thereof, are or may be within the limits of the metropolis as defined by this act), shall not be included or deemed to be included in the expression "the metropolis," or any extension thereof which may hereafter be made, under the provisions of the hereinbefore-mentioned act of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120: provided also, that if the said companies, or any of them, shall supply gas in parts of the metropolis other than those within their respective districts as defined in the said schedule, then the provisions of this act shall be held to apply to such companies respectively so far only as regards such extended limits as may be within the metropolis.

6. The limits of each of the said companies shall be the respective districts supplied with gas by such companies, as the same are defined upon four duplicate maps, signed by the Right Hon. Thomas Henry Sutton Sotherton Escount, and which maps have been severally deposited with the respective clerks of the peace for the counties of Middlesex, London, Surrey, and Kent; provided that at the expiration of three years next after the passing of this act, and of every three years thereafter, her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department for the time being may, either upon the application and with the consent of any two or more of the said gas companies whose districts adjoin one another, make any alteration in the boundaries of such districts, or upon the application of any local authority, or upon the requisition of not less than twenty gas consumers within any district or districts proposed to be affected, and upon proof to his satisfaction being given that any of the said gas companies are not in a condition adequately to supply with gas their respective districts, or have substantially failed to fulfil the obligations imposed by this act, may make such alterations in the boundaries of such districts, or admit any new company respectively, as he thinks proper; and all such alterations shall be certified on one or more maps, to be signed by the said Secretary of State, and deposited with one or more of the said clerks of the peace; and such last-mentioned map or maps shall be binding on all parties, and the provisions of this act shall be held to apply to the several districts when so altered, and to the several companies affected thereby, as fully and effectually as if no alteration in such districts had been made; and no other company or person than the company to whom such limits are for the time being assigned, or shall hereafter be assigned, shall supply gas for sale within the said limits, unless authorised by Parliament so to do; provided that before proceeding to consider the necessity for altering any of the said districts the said Secretary of State shall cause at least one month's notice to be given of such application to all parties interested therein or affected thereby, and such notice shall state the day and hour when, and the place where, such application will be considered; and notices to be given to any gas company shall be left with the secretary or some other principal officer of the company, and notices to be given to any local authority shall be left with the clerk or some other principal officer of the said local authority.

7. If at any time complaints as to the quantity or quality of the gas supplied by any company be made to the said Secretary of State by memorial in writing from the Metropolitan Board of Works, or any vestry or district board of works, signed by their clerks respectively, or not less than twenty inhabitant householders paying rates for and supplied with gas by any such company, it shall be lawful for the said secretary, at any time within one month after the receipt of such complaint, to appoint a competent person as inspector to inquire into and concerning the grounds of such complaint, and to report to the said secretary thereon.

8. The inspector so appointed as aforesaid shall give notice of his appointment in writing to the company, and at any time after twenty-four hours from the time of his giving such notice as aforesaid he shall have power to inspect and examine the gasworks of the company, and to inquire into and concerning the grounds of such complaint, and the company and their officers shall afford all reasonable facilities for such inspection, examination, and inquiry.

9. Any person obstructing such inspector in the due prosecution of such inspection, examination, or inquiry shall forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 10*l*.

10. If after receipt of such report it shall appear to the said secretary that the said complaint is well founded, the said secretary shall give notice thereof in writing to the company.

11. After the receipt of such notice the company shall, and they are hereby required, within a reasonable time, to remove the grounds of such complaint.

12. Every gas company shall in all things obey the orders of the said secretary made in pursuance of this act, and in default of their so doing they shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 50*l*. for each offence.

13. All the costs, charges, and expenses of and incident to any inquiry and decision of the said Secretary of State under this act shall from time to time be borne and paid by such parties as the said Secretary of State shall direct, and such decision may, upon an ex parte application, be made a rule of any of her Majesty's superior courts of law at Westminster.

14. Every gas company from time to time supplying gas within any district shall, as to any premises or street within such district not already supplied with gas, and which shall lie within fifty yards of any existing mains, at their own expense, on being required by the owner or occupier of any premises within the district, or in part within the district, who shall contract for not less than two years to pay gas rates in respect of such supply to an amount equal to 20*l*. per cent. upon the outlay, provide and lay all proper and sufficient communication, service, and other pipes up to the premises of such owner or occupier, to communicate with the gas company's mains, and shall, if so required by the owner, occupier, or local authority, furnish him or them, at the rate prescribed by this act, with a supply of gas for the purpose of being used in or on the premises, or for lighting the street, and, if so required by the owner or occupier, furnish him with one or more meters for ascertaining the quantity of gas consumed: provided, that the gas company shall not be bound to supply more than one meter for each consumer occupying a separate dwelling or apartment, nor any meter exceeding a five-light meter: provided also, that the meter rent which the said company shall be entitled to claim for such meter shall not exceed 10*l*. per cent. on the net cost of such meter: provided, that it shall not be lawful for any company not charging a meter rent on the 1st January, 1860, to charge such rent within their district until after the 1st January, 1862.

15. Provided, that the owner or occupier, if so required in writing by the gas company or any of their officers, shall, before he is entitled to have the pipes provided and laid, or to have a supply of gas or of meters furnished, give to the gas company such security for the payment of the rate for the gas to be supplied to him, and of the meter rent for every meter to be supplied to him, as he and the gas company agree on.

16. Provided, that if the owner or occupier and the gas company cannot agree thereon, the security to be given shall be determined by a magistrate; and any single magistrate shall, on the application of the owner or occupier and the gas company, or either of them, determine the nature and amount of the security to be given; and the security may, as the magistrate thinks fit, be the deposit with the gas company, or with any person approved by the magistrate, or the prepayment to the gas company, of a sum of money or any other security which the magistrate thinks sufficient and reasonable; and the determination of the magistrate shall be binding on all parties, and final: provided, that if the security be the deposit with the gas company of a sum of money, the gas company shall pay interest thereon to the consumer at such rate as the magistrate shall determine.

17. If the gas company, not being entitled to require, or not having required, any security, wilfully fail for seven days after being thereunto required in writing by the consumer, or, where the security agreed on or determined by the magistrate is given, shall wilfully fail for fourteen days thereafter to provide and lay all proper and sufficient communication, service, and other pipes, or to furnish a supply of gas, or to furnish any meter, pursuant to the provisions of this act, then and in every such case the gas company shall, on a summary conviction before a magistrate, forfeit and pay to the consumer not exceeding 40*l*. for every day after the expiration of seven or fourteen days respectively during which the failure continues.

18. Provided, that every private consumer shall, if so required in writing by the gas company, consume the gas by meter; but any consumer may, if he thinks fit, provide his own meter.

19. Subject to the provisions of this act, every gas company from time to time may enter into any contract with any owner, occupier, or local authority, for all or any of the following purposes; that is to say, for supplying him or them with gas, and with pipes, burners, meters, lamps, lamp posts, and other apparatus, and for the repair and cleansing, and for the lighting and extinguishing thereof, in such manner and on such terms and conditions as the parties agree.

20. Provided, that notwithstanding its being required by any act of Parliament or otherwise that the gas company's contracts shall be under seal, every contract of the gas company entered into in accordance with this act shall, without seal, be binding on them, if the contract be signed by at least two of their directors, or by their secretary or other officer by the authority of at least two of their directors.

21. Provided, that no contract for any of those purposes shall contain any term or condition contrary to any of the provisions of this act, or for giving, in case of difference, the sole arbitration thereon to the gas company, or any officer or person who is or has been employed by them, or who may have a pecuniary interest in such company, or for requiring any notice by a consumer discontinuing his supply of gas or meter which shall make him liable to pay more than one month's rate or meter rent after the time of the service of the notice, or which shall entitle the gas company, except for breach of any of the provisions of this act, to discontinue any supply of gas by less than one month's notice in writing to the consumer, unless the rate due for gas shall be in arrear, in which case three days' notice in writing to the consumer shall be sufficient.

22. The gas company shall well and effectually light all public lamps in all streets which they are required by the local authority to light, and shall, according to the terms of their contract, supply to the local authority so much gas as they require for their public lamps: provided, that the gas company shall not be compelled to light any street with lamps at a greater distance from each other than seventy-five yards.

23. The local authority may provide and keep in repair their own public lamp posts and lamps, and apparatus connected therewith, and, in case of their electing to burn by meter, light and extinguish the lamps, and defray the expenses thereof.

24. Every gas company shall, unless prevented by necessary repairs or unavoidable accident, at all times keep all their branch or service pipes fully charged with gas, and the stop-cocks so turned as not to prevent the branch or service pipes from being at all times filled with gas.

25. The quality of the common gas supplied by any gas company shall be, with respect to its illuminating power at a distance as near as may be of 1000 yards from the works, such as to produce from an argand burner having fifteen holes and a seven-inch chimney, consuming five cubic feet of gas an hour, a light equal in intensity to the light produced by not less than twelve sperm candles of six to the pound, each burning one hundred and twenty grains an hour; and the quality of cannel gas supplied by any gas company shall, with respect to its illuminating power at the distance aforesaid, be such as to produce from a batwing or fishtail burner, consuming five feet of gas per hour, a light equal in intensity to twenty such sperm candles; and each such gas shall, with respect to its purity, be so far free from ammonia and sulphuretted hydrogen that it shall not discolour either turmeric paper or paper imbued with acetate or carbonate of lead, when those tests are exposed to a current of gas issuing for one minute under a pressure of five-tenths of an inch of water, and shall not contain more than twenty grains of sulphur in any form in one hundred cubic feet of gas: provided, that any gas company, and the local authorities of the district supplied by such company, shall be at liberty to agree upon any other or different test by which to ascertain the purity of the gas, or to vary the amounts of ammonia or sulphur in any form hereinbefore allowed; and thereupon the company shall be thenceforth liable to have the purity of their gas tested in the manner so prescribed.

26. If the gas supplied by the gas company be at any time of less illuminating power or of less purity than according to this act it ought to be, the gas company shall for every such offence, on a summary conviction before a police magistrate, forfeit a sum not exceeding 50*l.*, and also, in addition to that penalty, and whether that penalty be recovered or not, a further sum of 10*l.* for every day after notice in writing from the local authority during which the offence continues: provided, that such police magistrate shall not convict under this section if it shall be proved to his satisfaction that such defect of gas was occasioned by any unavoidable cause or accident.

27. Every local authority taking any supply of gas according to this act shall provide all proper and sufficient apparatus, machinery, and instruments for testing the illuminating power and purity of the gas, and from time to time shall appoint, and out of any funds applicable by them for their local purposes may pay, a chemical examiner or gas engineer, or other competent person, to be an examiner for the purposes of this act; and every gas company shall, within six months after the passing of this act, cause to be erected in some convenient place, as near as may be to 1000 yards from their works, (such place, in case of dispute between the company and the local authority, to be fixed by a police magistrate upon the application of either party, after hearing the parties thereon), an experimental meter, furnished with a suitable burner, capable of consuming five cubic feet of gas per hour, with other necessary apparatus for testing the illuminating power of the gas.

28. The examiner shall, on giving three hours' notice to the secretary or engineer of the company, have access at all times to such experimental meter, and when and so often as is necessary, or as he is so directed by the local authority appointing him, shall examine the illuminating power, and the purity of the gas supplied, and shall present to the local authority, so often as they require, a report stating the number of examinations on which the report is founded, and the maximum, minimum, and average illuminating power and purity, or the illuminating power and purity from day to day, or at longer intervals, of the gas supplied during the whole period to which the report relates, with such other information and remarks thereon as may be deemed necessary.

29. Provided, that two or more local authorities, if they think fit, may join in providing the apparatus, machinery, and instruments, and in appointing and paying the examiner, and he shall make his reports to every local authority so joining in appointing and paying him.

30. The examiner, on payment to him of a fee of 10*s.* 6*d.* by any consumer, shall, at his request, examine and report to him on the illuminating power and the purity of the gas supplied as hereinbefore mentioned; and any consumer may make complaint to any magistrate with respect to the illuminating power or purity of the gas supplied to the complainant, and the magistrate may entertain and hear the complaint, and proceed thereon according to the provisions of this act.

31. Any magistrate may direct that notice be given to the complainant and the gas company to appear and be heard on the complaint at such time as he appoints, and each party shall thereupon appear and may be heard before a magistrate, by themselves, their counsel, attorneys, or agents.

32. Where, on the hearing, and whether or not the gas company have appeared, it appears to the magistrate that the complaint, or any part thereof, is well founded, he shall make an order declaring that the same is well founded, and ordering the gas company to pay any penalty or penalties thereby incurred, and to remove within a reasonable time the grounds of complaint, and he may by the order direct that any specific acts shall be done by the gas company for removing the grounds of complaint, and may make any order as to costs; and all orders so made shall be final and binding on all parties.

33. Where the gas company are served with any order so made, they shall, within the time limited by the order, remove the grounds of complaint thereby declared to be well founded, and pay the penalty or penalties, and the damages (if any) and costs (if any) thereby ordered to be paid by them.

34. The gas company, and their officers, agents, and servants, and where there is any complaint made, the complainant, shall afford to the examiner appointed by the local authority all reasonable facilities for the respective inspection, examination, and inquiry; and every person obstructing any such examiner so appointed in the exercise of his duties under this act shall for every such offence forfeit not exceeding 10*l.*

35. After the 31st December, 1860, no gas company shall, except under existing contracts, demand or take for any gas or five-light meter supplied by them any sum of money exceeding the rate or meter rent by this act authorised.

36. All contracts made or existing before the 1st January, 1860, between any of the gas companies included in this act and any local authority, for or relating to the supply of gas, shall terminate on the 1st February, 1862, and thereafter the provisions of this act in all particulars shall apply to such company: provided, that from the time of the passing of this act until the said 1st February, 1862, the provisions of this act relating to price, purity, and illuminating power of gas shall not apply to any such company unless such company shall elect to adopt them.

37. The gas company shall not charge a higher price by the 1000 cubic feet for gas supplied to any local authority than the lowest rate by the 1000 cubic feet from time to time charged by them to any private consumers, otherwise than by special contract in writing, in the district supplied by the gas company.

38. If any difference arise between the local authority and the gas company with respect to any alteration in the test, or to the rate to be charged for gas supplied or for lighting any public lamp, the difference shall be referred to, and be determined by, arbitration in the manner prescribed by the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, with respect to the settlement of disputes by arbitration.

39. In case any consumer leave the premises where gas was supplied to him without paying to the gas company the rate or meter rent due from him, the gas company shall not require from the next tenant of the premises payment of the arrears so left unpaid, unless the incoming tenant agreed with the defaulting consumer to pay the arrears; but the gas company shall, notwithstanding any such arrears, in the absence of collusion between the outgoing and incoming tenant, supply gas to the incoming tenant, as required by this act, on being required by him so to do.

40. No company shall advance the price of gas above the rate taken by such company on the 1st January, 1860, whenever such rate is at or above 4s. 6d. per 1000 cubic feet, unless there has been such increase in the cost of gas, or any other circumstances affecting the company, as will warrant such advance: provided always, that before raising the gas rate in any district the gas company supplying such district shall give notice of their intention to the local authorities of the district, and in some newspaper circulating within the district for two consecutive weeks at least, one month before such alteration in the gas rate shall be made; and in case any local authority shall, within such month, dissent from such alteration, it shall be determined by arbitration, in the manner hereinbefore mentioned, whether such alteration shall be allowed: provided always, that no gas company shall charge for common gas supplied by them any sum exceeding 5s. 6d. for every 1000 cubic feet, or for canal gas any sum exceeding 7s. 6d. for every 1000 cubic feet: provided also, that any company shall be at liberty to change the kind of gas from time to time supplied by such company, whether common or canal gas, on giving three months' notice of their intention so to do; and upon the expiration of such notice the company shall thenceforth supply gas pursuant thereto, under the provisions of this act, until any like notice shall be given for a further change; and when the company shall change the supply from canal gas to common gas, the rate shall be reduced so as not to exceed 4s. 6d. per 1000 cubic feet, except under the circumstances and in the manner hereinbefore set forth.

41. The said Secretary of State may at any time issue a form of accounts to be filled up by each of the said gas companies, and such accounts shall state precisely the amounts of the capital of each company, and the acts of Parliament or other authority under which the same is raised, and such other information as the said secretary may require, in order to enable him to ascertain the actual state and condition of the concerns of such company; and every gas company shall, after receiving notice in writing, signed by the said secretary, of the form so required by him to be filled up, within two months after the general meeting of the company fill up and forward to the said secretary an annual statement of accounts in the form so prescribed, and any company which shall fail to furnish such account shall be liable, on conviction before a magistrate, to forfeit any sum not exceeding 50l.; and such statement shall be laid by the Secretary of State before both Houses of Parliament every year.

42. Every gas company shall, within one year after the passing of this act, cause a map to be made of the district within which their mains or district mains then lie, on a scale not less than six inches to a mile, and shall cause to be marked thereon the line of all their then existing mains and district mains, and shall once in every year correct such map, and make such additions thereto as will shew the line of all their then mains and district mains as aforesaid.

43. Every map, or a copy thereof, so made by or for each company, with the date expressed thereon of the last time when it was so corrected, shall be deposited, certified by their secretary or clerk by writing under his hand to be a true copy thereof, with the respective clerks of the peace for the counties in which such mains lie, and who are hereby required to receive and keep in safe custody the same; and such maps so deposited shall at all reasonable times be open to the inspection of all local authorities and consumers, and their respective agents, and they respectively may take copies of or extracts from the same; and every gas company wilfully failing to comply with any of the requirements of this act with respect to maps, and every person having charge of such maps who shall refuse to allow any person to inspect and take copies of or extracts from such maps, shall for every such offence forfeit a sum not exceeding 10l.

44. Every clerk of the peace with whom any map shall be deposited under the provisions of this act may charge and take the sum of 1s. for every inspection of such map, and the further sum of 2s. 6d. for every extract from or copy taken of such map.

45. If and whenever it appears to the Secretary of State that any of the provisions of this act have been violated or not complied with on the part of any gas company, or that the gas company are acting in a manner unauthorised by law, and if it appear to him that it would be for the public advantage that the gas company should be restrained from so acting, or compelled to do any act for remedying the wrongful act done by them, the Secretary of State may certify the same in writing to her Majesty's Attorney-General, and thereupon he, if he be so advised, shall proceed by information, bill, or action, or other such proceeding at law or in equity as the case requires, to restrain the wrongful acting, or to compel the doing of the acts for remedying the wrongful acts; provided always, that the Secretary of State shall not give the certificate at a period exceeding one year after the committing of the offence specified in the certificate.

46. Every penalty imposed by this act, the recovery and application of which is not otherwise specially provided for by this act, shall be recovered on summary conviction before a magistrate, and be enforced, accounted for, and paid to the receiver of the metropolitan police district, and shall be apportioned in the same manner as penalties or fines, other than fines upon drunken persons, or upon constables for misconduct, or for assaults upon police constables, are by the act of the 3 Vict., for regulating police courts in the metropolis, directed to be recovered, enforced, accounted for, paid, and applied; and every order or conviction of any magistrate in respect of any such penalty shall be subject to the like appeal, and upon the same terms, as is by that act provided in respect of any order or conviction of any magistrate; and every magistrate by whom any order of conviction is made under this act shall have the same power of binding over the witnesses examined, and the witnesses shall be entitled to the same allowance of expenses as they would be entitled to in case the order, conviction, and appeal were made under that act.

47. Every magistrate shall, for the purposes of this act, have full jurisdiction and full powers and authorities over the parties respectively, and with respect to making orders on the parties respectively and otherwise, and as to costs, and may issue every such summons, warrant, and other process, and may take such other proceedings, as he thinks requisite; and the service of any summons, notice, order, or other process in the matter on such person, or in such manner as a magistrate directs, shall be good service thereof; and every magistrate may proceed singly in the execution of this act in such manner as he thinks proper.

48. Nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to authorise or empower any gas company to interfere with or abridge any of the rights or privileges of any company established for the supply of water to the inhabitants of any parish or place within the metropolis; and every gas company shall be answerable for any damage, spoil, injury, or mischief which shall be done to any of the pipes, works, or property of any such water company, or which shall or may be sustained by such water company by reason or in consequence of any act, matter, or thing to be done or executed by such gas company, or any of their servants, agents, or workmen.

49. Whenever any gas company, or their servants, agents, or workmen, shall dig or sink any trench for laying any new mains or pipes, other than service pipes, for the conveyance of gas or other apparatus near to which any pipe belonging to any water company for conveying water, or any branch or service pipe for the supply of water to any dwelling-house or buildings, shall be laid, such gas company, their servants, agents, or workmen, shall give four hours' previous notice thereof in writing to the manager or chief clerk, or secretary, or engineer of such water company, such notice to be delivered at the principal office of the company between the hours of ten in the morning and four in the afternoon, and shall, under the inspection of the manager or chief clerk, secretary, or engineer for the time being of such water company, protect and secure every such water pipe from any injury, and shall also repair any damage that shall be done to such pipe; and in default of repairing such damage the gas company shall for each such default forfeit and pay to the secretary for the time being of such water company, for the use of the said water company, any sum not exceeding 5*l.*, and also the costs and expenses which shall have been incurred by the said water company in protecting and securing any such water pipe, or in repairing or making good any injury that may have been done thereto by the means aforesaid, such costs and expenses to be ascertained by any justice, and to be recovered in the same manner as any expenses or penalty under this act may be recovered.

50. All pipes hereafter to be laid by any gas company for the conveyance of gas shall be laid at the greatest practicable distance from the nearest part of any pipe then laid down by, or by order of, any water company for the conveyance of water, and, wherever the width of the carriageway or footpath will allow thereof, shall be laid at the distance of four feet at least from the nearest part of any such water pipe, unless in cases where it shall be unavoidably necessary to lay the gas pipe across or nearer to any water pipe, in which case the said gas pipe shall, wherever practicable, be laid over and above the said water pipe, at the greatest practicable distance therefrom, and shall form therewith a right angle, or as near thereto as the situation will admit; and in every such case the said gas pipe so crossing the said water pipe shall be at least nine feet in length, so that no joint of any gas pipe shall be nearer to any water pipe than four feet at the least, where the width of the road, street, square, market-place, lane, alley, passage, court, or other place will admit; and every such gas pipe so crossing the water pipe shall for the whole length thereof be sufficiently bedded in with good sound clay or other fit materials of a proper consistence, and well worked and rammed into the trench all round the said gas pipe; and in laying down any such gas pipe the gas company shall use such joints as are for the time being of the most improved description, for preventing the leakage of gas, and shall in no case join two or more gas pipes together previous to their being laid in the trench, but shall lay each pipe as near as may be in its place in the trench, and shall in such trench properly form the jointing with the other pipes to be added thereto with proper and sufficient materials; and shall also, wherever practicable, lay and well and sufficiently bed each joint of the main gas pipes, and also the joints or screws of the branch or service gas pipes connecting with the main gas pipes, and also the joints of the service or branch pipes for conveying the gas from the main gas pipes to the houses and other buildings, and all other joints, inlets, apertures, or openings which are or shall or may be made in any of the main gas pipes belonging to the gas company, in such manner and of such materials as shall, as far as reasonably practicable, prevent leakage.

51. Whenever the water which shall be supplied by any water company shall be contaminated or affected in any way whatsoever by the gas of any gas company, such gas company shall, within twenty-four hours next after notice thereof in writing, signed by any one of the directors or by the secretary for the time being of such water company, or by any person using the water of such water company, and left at the office of such gas company, cause measures to be taken effectually to prevent such gas from contaminating or affecting the water of such water company; and in case such gas company shall not, within forty-eight hours next after any such notice so left as aforesaid, use all reasonable means to effectually remove the cause of such complaint, and prevent all such contamination whereof notice shall be given as aforesaid, then and in every such case such gas company shall, on each complaint whereof notice shall be given as aforesaid, forfeit and pay to the secretary of such water company, for the use of such water company, the sum not exceeding 10*l.* for each day during which the water supplied by such water company shall remain contaminated or affected by the gas of such gas company; and every such penalty or forfeiture may be recovered for the use of such water company in the same manner as any other penalty or forfeiture imposed by this act may be levied and recovered.

52. And whereas it may become a question, upon such complaint as aforesaid, whether or not the water supplied by any water company within the metropolis be contaminated or affected by the gas of the gas company: be it enacted, that in every such case it shall be lawful for any such water company to dig to and about and to search and examine the mains, pipes, conduits, and apparatus of the gas company adjacent to the pipes of such water company, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not such contamination proceed or be occasioned by the gas of such gas company, giving twenty-four hours' previous notice in writing, signed by one of the directors or by the secretary for the time being of such water company, and left at the head office of such gas company, of the intention of such water company so to dig, search, and examine as aforesaid, and of the time and place or places when and where such digging, search, and examination is intended to be made; and if it shall appear that the said water has been contaminated, and that there has been any escape of gas whereby such contamination has been produced, then and in every such case the costs and expenses of the said digging, search, and examination, and of the repair of the street, road, or place which shall be taken up or disturbed, shall be borne and paid by such gas company, which costs and expenses shall be ascertained and determined, if necessary, by any justice, and may be levied and recovered in the same manner as any penalty or forfeiture imposed by this act may be levied and recovered: provided always, that if upon such examination it shall appear that such contamination has not arisen from any escape of gas from any of the mains, pipes, or conduits of the gas company to which such notice shall have been given, then and in every such case the water company by whom or on whose behalf such examination and search shall have been made shall bear and pay all the costs, charges, and expenses of and incident to such examination and search, and shall also make good to such gas company any damage which may be occasioned to their mains, pipes, conduits, or apparatus by such search, and also any injury or damage which may be done in or about any of the streets, roads, or places which shall be broken up or disturbed in such search, the amount of such damage to be ascertained and determined, if necessary, by any justice, and to be levied and recovered in the same manner as any penalty or forfeiture under this act may be levied and recovered.

53. All penalties or sums of money ordered and adjudged, within the city of London and the liberties thereof, to be paid under this act, and not otherwise appropriated, shall be payable to the chamberlain of the city of London, in aid of the expenses of the police of the said city.

54. Nothing in this act contained shall avoid, prejudice, or impair any of the powers now exercised by or vested in the Metropolitan Board of Works, or in the commissioners of sewers of the city of London and the liberties thereof, or any powers now vested in any local authority within the metropolis, or any powers now exercised or possessed in respect of the manufacture or supply of gas within the metropolis by any railway company, or by any other person or persons making or supplying gas for his or their own use, and not making or supplying gas to the public as a trade or business: provided, that if the said local authority shall refuse or delay their consent to any company to lay down mains or pipes in accordance with the provisions of this act, it shall be lawful for the said Secretary of State, under his hand, to authorise the same to be laid down without such consent; and after the date of the application by such company to the said Secretary of State for such consent no penalty shall be incurred by any default of such company, so far as it is occasioned by such refusal only.

55. Provided, that no special remedy or provision for giving relief to any person given by this act shall prejudice or diminish the general jurisdiction of any of her Majesty's superior courts of law or equity over or with respect to the acts or defaults in respect of which the special remedies or provisions are so given.

56. The costs, charges, and expenses of and incident to the passing of this act, and preliminary thereto, shall be paid by the Metropolitan Board of Works out of such funds as may be and shall be levied by their authority from the several vestries and district boards, in proportion to their annual rateable value, and such amount shall be included in the precept of the Metropolitan Board under the authority of the act of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, for the local management of the metropolis.

57. All the expenditure from time to time made or incurred by any local authority under the authority of this act may and shall be defrayed by the local authority out of any rate raised under the provisions of the act of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, for the local management of the metropolis.

Sect. 1. In the construction of this act, unless there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction, the word "attorney" shall mean attorney of one or more of the superior courts of law at Westminster, or of the Court of Common Pleas of the county palatine of Lancaster, or of the Court of Pleas of the county palatine of Durham; the word "solicitor" shall mean solicitor of the High Court of Chancery; the word "registrar" shall mean registrar of attornies and solicitors; the expression "the roll of attornies and solicitors kept by the registrar" shall mean the roll or book, rolls or books of attornies and solicitors, which, by the first hereinbefore-mentioned act, the registrar is required to keep; and the expression "the Incorporated Law Society" shall mean the Incorporated Society of Attornies, Solicitors, Proctors, and others, not being Barristers practising in the courts of law and equity of the United Kingdom.

2. Sect. 7 of the first hereinbefore-mentioned act shall be repealed, and any person having taken the degree of Bachelor of Arts or Bachelor of Laws in the University of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, Durham, or London, or in the Queen's University in Ireland, or the degree of Bachelor of Arts, Master of Arts, Bachelor of Laws, or Doctor of Laws in any of the universities of Scotland, none of such degrees being honorary degrees, and who at any time after having taken such degree, and either before or after the passing of this act, has been bound by and has duly served under articles of clerkship to a practising attorney or solicitor for the term of three years, and has been examined and sworn in manner directed by the first hereinbefore-mentioned act and by this act, may be admitted and inrolled as an attorney or solicitor, and service for any part of the said term not exceeding one year with the London agent of such attorney or solicitor in the business, practice, or employment of an attorney or solicitor, either by virtue of any stipulation in such articles, or with the permission of such attorney or solicitor, shall be and be deemed to have been good service under such articles for such part of the said term; and where any person has before the passing of this act, and at any time after having taken such degree, been bound as aforesaid for five years, he may, after having duly served three years of such term in such manner as would have been required if he had been bound for three years only, and having been examined and sworn as aforesaid, and with the consent in writing (indorsed on his articles of clerkship) of the attorney or solicitor to whom he may be bound, to the immediate determination of his articles of clerkship, be admitted and inrolled as an attorney or solicitor; and where such consent is given as aforesaid, and acted upon under this provision by the person hereby made eligible to be admitted and inrolled as aforesaid, the articles of clerkship shall be deemed to have determined as if they had determined by effluxion of time.

3. Every person who has been called to the degree of utter barrister in England, and who, before becoming such barrister, has been bound by contract in writing to serve as a clerk for the term of five years, or who, after ceasing to be a barrister, has been bound by contract in writing to serve as a clerk, for the term of three years, to a practising attorney or solicitor, and has in either of the said cases continued in such service for the term of three years, and during the whole of such three years served in such manner as is hereinbefore required in the case of persons who have taken degrees in the said universities, and having been examined and sworn as aforesaid, after the expiration of such term of three years, (the examination and swearing taking place, in the first-mentioned case, after the person has ceased to be a barrister), may be admitted and inrolled as an attorney or solicitor: provided always, that in the case of any such person as aforesaid who has been bound for five years, it shall be necessary for such term to be determined with consent, as hereinbefore provided in the case of persons having taken degrees, who may have been bound for five years before the passing of this act.

4. Any person who, either before or after the passing of this act, shall for the term of ten years have been a bonâ fide clerk to an attorney, solicitor, or proctor, or attorneys, solicitors, or proctors, and during that term shall have been bonâ fide engaged in the transaction and performance, under the direction and superintendence of such attorney, solicitor, or proctor, or attorneys, solicitors, or proctors, of such matters of business as are usually transacted and performed by attorneys, solicitors, and proctors, and who shall produce to the examiners satisfactory evidence that he has faithfully, honestly, and diligently served as such clerk, and who after the expiration of the said term of ten years has been bound by, and has duly served under, articles of clerkship to a practising attorney, solicitor, or proctor for the term of three years, and has been examined and sworn in manner directed by the first hereinbefore-mentioned act and by this act, may be admitted and inrolled as an attorney and solicitor or proctor, and service for any part of the said term not exceeding one year with the London agent of such attorney, or solicitor, or proctor, in the proper business, practice, or employment of an attorney, solicitor, or proctor, either by virtue of any stipulation in such articles, or with the permission of such attorney, solicitor, or proctor, shall be and be deemed to have been good service under such articles for such part of the said term; and where any such person has, before the passing of this act, been bound for five years, he may, after having duly served three years of such term in such manner as would have been required if he had been bound for three years only, and having been examined and sworn as aforesaid, and with the consent in writing (indorsed on his articles of clerkship) of the attorney, solicitor, or proctor to whom he may be bound, to the immediate determination of his articles of clerkship, be admitted and inrolled as an attorney and solicitor; and where such consent is given as aforesaid, and acted upon under this provision by the person hereby made eligible to be admitted and inrolled as aforesaid, the articles of clerkship shall be deemed to have determined as if they had determined by effluxion of time.

5. The Lords Chief Justices of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, and the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, jointly with the Master of the Rolls, may, if they think fit, from time to time, by regulations to be made by them, direct that any person having successfully passed any examination now or hereafter to be established in any of the universities hereinbefore mentioned, and to be specified in such regulations, may be admitted and inrolled as an attorney or solicitor, after having been subsequently bound by, and having duly served under, articles of clerkship to a practising attorney or solicitor for the term of four years, and been examined and sworn as aforesaid; and the said judges may from time to time revoke or alter such regulations as they think fit, but not so as to allow a less term of service than four years.

6. Sect. 6 of the first hereinbefore-mentioned act shall apply as well to any person bound as therein mentioned as a clerk to a practising attorney or solicitor for the term of four years only, where under the said regulations that term is sufficient, as to any person so bound for the term of five years, and shall be read and construed accordingly.

7. The contract or articles whereby any person shall be bound to serve as a clerk to any attorney or solicitor, and also any assignment thereof, shall, within three months after the same has or have been respectively inrolled and registered pursuant to the first hereinbefore-mentioned act, be produced to the registrar, who shall enter the names of the parties to and the date of such contract or articles, and also of such assignment, if any, and the term of service, in a book to be kept for that purpose; and the registrar shall mark such contract or articles, and such assignment, if any, as having been so produced and entered, with the date thereof, and shall be entitled to receive a fee of 5s. for the entry of such contract or articles, and the like fee for such assignment, if any; and such book shall be open to public inspection during office hours, without fee or reward; and in case such contract or articles, and such assignment, if any, be not so produced to and entered by the registrar as aforesaid within such three months as aforesaid, the service of the clerk shall be reckoned to commence from the date of such production and entry, unless upon an application, of which notice shall be given to the registrar, one of the superior courts of law at Westminster, or a judge thereof, or a judge of the Court of Chancery, shall otherwise order.

8. The Lords Chief Justices of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, and the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, jointly with the Master of the Rolls, may from time to time make regulations for the examination in such branches of general knowledge as they may deem proper of all persons (not having taken degrees, or successfully passed such university examinations as aforesaid) hereafter becoming bound under articles of clerkship to attorneys or solicitors; and the said judges, by such regulations, may require such examination to be passed either before persons so become bound, or at any time before their admission as attorneys or solicitors, as to the said judges may seem fit, and the said judges may from time to time revoke or alter any such regulations as they may think fit, and may from time to time appoint examiners for conducting such examination as aforesaid; and no person required to pass such examination shall be capable of being bound as aforesaid where such examination is required to be passed before being bound, or of being admitted as an attorney or solicitor where such examination is permitted to be passed at any time before admission, unless, before being bound or before being admitted, (as the case may require), he obtain from the examiners a certificate of having satisfactorily passed such examination: provided always, that the said judges, or any one or more of them, may, where, under special circumstances, they or he see fit so to do, dispense with compliance with such regulations entirely or partially, or subject to any such conditions as to them or him may seem fit.

9. The Lords Chief Justices of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, and the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, jointly with the Master of the Rolls, may from time to time, if they see fit, make regulations for the examination of persons hereafter becoming bound under articles of clerkship as aforesaid, at such times or periods of their service under such articles as the said judges may think fit and direct, in order to ascertain the progress made by such persons in acquiring the knowledge necessary for rendering them fit and capable to act as attorneys or solicitors; and such examination shall be conducted by the examiners appointed under the first herein-mentioned act, or such other examiners as the said judges may from time to time appoint in this behalf; and the said judges may, by such regulations, in the case of persons who fail to pass such examination to the satisfaction of the examiners, postpone, either for a definite time or such time as the said examiners may in each case think proper, and either conditionally or otherwise, the examination required to be passed at the expiration of the term of service under articles, and before admission.

10. No person hereafter bound by articles of clerkship to any attorney or solicitor shall, during the term of service mentioned in such articles, hold any office or engage in any employment whatsoever other than the employment of clerk to such attorney or solicitor, and his partner or partners, if any, in the business, practice, or employment of an attorney or solicitor, save as by the first hereinbefore-mentioned act or this act otherwise provided; and every person bound as aforesaid shall, before being admitted an attorney or solicitor, prove, by the affidavit required under sect. 14 of the first hereinbefore-mentioned act, that he has not held any office, or engaged in any employment, contrary to this enactment; and the form of such affidavit as aforesaid shall be varied by such addition thereto as may be necessary for this purpose.

11. The examination which, under the first hereinbefore-mentioned act or this act, is authorised and required touching the fitness and capacity of a person to act as an attorney or as a solicitor, as the case may be, after the expiration of the term of his service under articles, and before his admission as an attorney or solicitor, shall be deemed to include such examination, touching his fitness and capacity to act in matters of business usually transacted or performed by attorneys or solicitors, as the examiners for the time being deem proper, subject nevertheless to any rules, orders, or regulations for conducting the said examination to be from time to time made in manner provided by the first hereinbefore-mentioned act.

12. Whenever any of the periods of three years, four years, and five years, mentioned in this act or in the first hereinbefore-mentioned act, (whether the same period shall have commenced before or after the passing of this act), shall expire in any vacation, then and in such case any person whose period of clerkship shall so expire shall be at liberty to pass his examination in the term immediately preceding the said vacation; and at any time in or after such vacation, and after the said period of clerkship shall have expired, the Master of the Rolls, as to the Court of Chancery, and any one of the judges, as to the courts of common law at Westminster, on being satisfied, by affidavit or otherwise, that the period of clerkship of such person has expired, may proceed to administer to him the oath mentioned in the first hereinbefore-mentioned act and the oath of allegiance, and may do all other acts necessary for or towards the admission and enrolment of such person as an attorney and solicitor, as provided in the said last-mentioned act.

13. No person hereafter bound by articles of clerkship to any attorney of the Court of Common Pleas of the county palatine of Lancaster, or of the Court of Pleas of the county palatine of Durham, shall be capable of being admitted and enrolled as an attorney of such respective court, unless, after the expiration of his term of service, he have been examined touching his articles and service, and his fitness and capacity to act as an attorney of her Majesty's superior courts of law at Westminster, or a solicitor of the High Court of Chancery, in like manner as is required before admission as an attorney of the said courts of law, or one of them, or a solicitor of the Court of Chancery, and the judge or judges of such respective court of the county palatine of Lancaster or Durham be satisfied by such examination, or the certificate of the examiners, of his being qualified to act as an attorney or solicitor: provided always, that the enactments contained in the 12th section of this act shall extend and apply, mutatis mutandis, to persons hereafter bound by articles of clerkship to attorneys of the Court of Common Pleas of the county palatine of Lancaster and the Court of Pleas of the county palatine of Durham respectively, and to the judges of those courts respectively.

14. All persons who, previously to the passing of this act, shall have been duly admitted and enrolled attorneys or solicitors of the courts of the counties palatine of Lancaster and Durham, or either of them, shall and may be admitted and enrolled attorneys and solicitors of the High Court of Chancery, and in her Majesty's superior courts of law at Westminster, in pursuance of the provisions of this act, without further examination, upon payment of such fees and duty as by law required: provided always, that such admission and enrolment be perfected on or before the first day of Trinity Term, 1861.

15. Every person who has been admitted and enrolled as a writer to the signet, or as a solicitor in the supreme courts of Scotland, or as a procurator before any of the sheriff courts of Scotland, and who, after being so admitted and enrolled, has been bound by, and has duly served under, articles of clerkship in England or Wales to a practising attorney or solicitor for the term of three years, and has been examined and sworn in manner directed by the first hereinbefore-mentioned act, and by this act, may be admitted and enrolled as an attorney and solicitor; and service for any part of the said term, not exceeding one year, with the London agent of such attorney or solicitor, in the proper business, practice, or employment of an attorney or solicitor, either by virtue of any stipulation, or with the permission of such attorney or solicitor, shall be and be deemed to have been good service under such articles for such part of the said term.

16. In every case where, by statutory provision or by custom, the qualification of a solicitor or attorney to hold any office is his having been admitted and enrolled as an attorney or solicitor a prescribed period, every person who either before the passing of this act has been, or hereafter shall be, called to the degree of utter barrister in England, and who, having been subsequently disbarred, has been admitted and enrolled as an attorney or solicitor, shall, in lieu of such qualification as aforesaid, be qualified to hold any such office on the completion of the prescribed period, to be reckoned from the date of such person being called to the degree of an utter barrister in England.

17. The Masters or other officers having respectively the custody of the rolls or books kept for the enrolment of attorneys or solicitors in the superior courts of law at Westminster, the Court of Chancery, the court of the duchy chamber of Lancaster at Westminster, and the courts of the counties palatine of Lancaster and Durham, shall, within seven days after the end of every term, transmit to the registrar, at the expense of such registrar, a copy, under the hands of such Masters or officers respectively, or under the seals of their respective courts, of such rolls or books, so far as the same relate to attorneys or solicitors enrolled within such term.

18. From and after the 15th November next after the passing of this act, instead of separate annual stamped certificates for attorneys and solicitors to be issued by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, as now required by law, the stamp duties chargeable on such certificates shall be denoted upon the registrar's certificates; and upon any such certificate being stamped accordingly, and the date of the payment of the duty certified by the proper officer, by writing under his hand, or by other sufficient means, the same shall be and be deemed the proper stamped certificate required by law to be taken out by the attorney or solicitor named therein.

19. For determining the rate of stamp duty payable on the certificate, the place or places where the attorney or solicitor shall carry on his business shall be deemed to be the place or places of his residence within the meaning of the acts relating to the stamp duties on certificates; and after the said 15th November the declaration required to be delivered to the registrar for the purpose of obtaining his certificate, and also the certificate to be granted thereon, shall accordingly specify the place or places where the attorney or solicitor by or for whom the certificate is required so carries on his business, and shall respectively be in the forms (A.) and (B.) contained in the schedule to this act.

20. The declaration required to be made for the purpose of obtaining the registrar's certificate shall be made out and signed in duplicate, and one of such duplicates shall be delivered to and left with the registrar, and the other produced to him, and the duplicate so produced, together with the certificate granted on such declaration, shall be left with the commissioners, or their proper officer, on applying to have the certificate stamped, and shall be and be deemed the note in writing required by law to be delivered to the commissioners, or their officer, to entitle the attorney or solicitor to a stamped certificate; and for every such certificate issued by the registrar, and the previous requisite search and inquiry, there shall be paid to him the sum of 5s., and the registrar shall yearly render an account of all sums of money received in respect thereof, and of the application of the same, to the Lords Chief Justices of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, and the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, jointly with the Master of the Rolls, who may from time to time, by order under their hands, diminish such sum as they think fit; and the said Lords Chief Justices and Lord Chief Baron, jointly with the Master of the Rolls, by order under their hands, may also fix and regulate the fees to be taken for the several examinations by this act authorised to be instituted, and may increase or diminish such fees from time to time: provided always, that a copy of such account so rendered as aforesaid shall be open to the inspection of any attorney or solicitor at the hall of the Incorporated Law Society.

21. For enabling the registrar to enter upon the roll of attorneys and solicitors kept by him a note or minute of the time of stamping every certificate, the commissioners shall, whenever the same shall be required, after the 15th February in every year, furnish to the registrar an account of the certificates issued between the 15th November and the 2nd January preceeding for which during the same period the stamp duties have been paid, specifying the names and places of business of the parties respectively to or for whom the same have been issued, and the dates of payment of the stamp duties; or, in lieu of such account, the commissioners, at their option, shall return to the registrar the aforesaid duplicate declarations to which such certificates relate, with a note or memorandum on each of them specifying the date of payment of the stamp duty for the certificate; and the registrar shall, upon such account being furnished, or such duplicate declarations being returned to him as aforesaid, enter such note or minute as aforesaid; and in order to such entry being made in respect of certificates stamped at any other time, every such last-mentioned certificate shall, within a month of the payment of the duty, be produced to the registrar, who shall thereupon make such entry, and signify the same by a note or memorandum upon the certificate; and every such last-mentioned certificate which shall not be so produced within the said period shall have effect only as a qualification to practise from the time when it shall be produced: provided, that it shall be lawful for the Master of the Rolls in the case of a solicitor, or one of the superior courts of law at Westminster, or one of the judges thereof, in the case of an attorney, at any time to make an order directing that any certificate not so produced shall have effect upon and from the time of stamping the same, or any subsequent period.

22. Every certificate issued by the registrar between the 15th November and the 16th December in any year shall bear date on the 16th November, and shall take effect on that day for all purposes, provided it be stamped before the 16th December; and in every such case the 16th November shall, for the purpose of this act, be deemed to be the date of the payment of the duty; but if such certificate be not so stamped, it shall take effect, as regards the qualification to practise, on the day on which it is stamped; and every certificate issued at any other time shall bear date on the day on which it is issued, and subject to the provision herein contained relating to certificates stamped after the 1st January in any year, and not produced within a month to be entered by the registrar, shall take effect, as regards such qualification, on the day on which it is stamped; and every certificate shall be and continue in force from the day on which it shall take effect as aforesaid until the 15th November next following, inclusive, and no longer: and any list of attorneys, solicitors, and conveyancers, purporting to be published by the authority of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, and to contain the names of attorneys, solicitors, and conveyancers who have obtained stamped certificates for the current year on or before the 1st January in the same year, shall, until the contrary be made to appear, be evidence in all courts, and before all justices of the peace and others, that the persons named therein as attorneys, solicitors, or conveyancers, holding such certificates as aforesaid for the current year, are attorneys, solicitors, or conveyancers holding such certificates; and the absence of the name of any person from such list shall, until the contrary be made to appear, be evidence as aforesaid that such person is not qualified to practise as an attorney, solicitor, or conveyancer under a certificate for the current year; but in the case of any person, being an attorney or solicitor, whose name does not appear in such list, an extract from the roll of attorneys and solicitors kept by the registrar, certified under the hand of the secretary of the Incorporated Law Society, (while such society performs the duties of registrar), or of the registrar for the time being, shall be evidence as aforesaid of the facts appearing in such extract; and in the case of any person, being a conveyancer, whose name does not appear on such list, the fact of his being so shall be proved in the way in which it is now by law required to be proved.

23. If any attorney or solicitor, after having at any time taken out a stamped certificate, shall, for the space of a whole year from and after the expiration thereof, have neglected to renew the same for the following year, the registrar shall not afterwards grant a certificate to such attorney or solicitor, except under an order of the Master of the Rolls in the case of a solicitor, or of one of the superior courts of law at Westminster, or of one of the judges thereof, in the case of an attorney; and it shall be lawful for the Master of the Rolls, or such court or judge, to direct the registrar to issue a certificate to such person upon such terms and conditions as he or they shall think fit.

24. Where the name of any attorney or solicitor is ordered to be struck off the roll of attorneys or solicitors of any court, on his own application, or on the application of any other person, the rule or order for that purpose shall forthwith, and before the same is acted upon, be produced to the registrar, and the registrar shall enter a note or minute of such rule or order in connexion with the name of such attorney or solicitor on the roll of attorneys and solicitors kept by the registrar, and shall strike such name off such roll, and shall mark such rule or order as having been entered.

25. The name of every person hereafter struck off the roll of attorneys of any of the superior courts of law at Westminster by the rule of any of such courts, or off the roll of solicitors of the Court of Chancery by order of any judge of that court, shall, upon production of an office copy of such rule or order, and an affidavit of the identity of the person named therein, to the proper officer of every or any other of the said courts of which such person is an attorney or solicitor, be struck off the roll of such court; and in case any such person be at any time thereafter restored to the roll by the rule of the court, or order of any judge of the court, by the rule of which or the order of a judge of which his name was struck off such roll, he shall, upon production of an office copy of the rule or order so restoring him, with an affidavit of the identity of the person named therein, to the proper officer of every or any such other court, be restored to the roll thereof without payment of any fee or fine whatsoever.

26. Every person who acts as an attorney or solicitor contrary to the enactment in sect. 2 of the first hereinbefore-mentioned act, or who in his own name, or in the name of any other person, in anywise acts as a proctor in or with respect to any proceeding in the Court of Probate or the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, without being duly qualified so to act, shall be deemed guilty of a contempt of the court in which the action, suit, cause, matter, or proceeding in relation to which he so acts is brought, had, or taken, and may be punished accordingly, and shall be incapable of maintaining any action or suit for any fee or reward for or in respect of anything done or any disbursement made by him in the course of so acting, and shall, in addition to any other penalty or forfeiture and to any disability to which he may be subject, forfeit and pay for every such offence the sum of 50*l.*, to be recovered, with full costs of suit, by action brought, with the sanction of her Majesty's Attorney-General, in the name of the Incorporated Law Society, in any of the superior courts of law at Westminster, or in any county court, and such penalty shall be applied in like manner as fines imposed for practising without a stamped certificate are now by law applicable.

27. Whenever a decree or order is made by the Court of Chancery, in which the payment of any costs previously taxed, either in the suit or proceeding in which such decree or order is made, or in any other suit or proceeding, is ordered, and whether the certificate of such previous taxation have been made before the passing of this act, or be made thereafter, it shall be lawful for the court or judge making such decree or order to order and direct the amount of such costs, as taxed, including the costs of taxation as ascertained by the said certificate, to be paid, with interest thereon at the rate of 4*l.* per cent. per annum from the date of the certificate, the amount of such interest to be verified by affidavit, and to be payable and recoverable out of the same fund or in the same manner as the amount of such costs.

28. In every case in which an attorney or solicitor shall be employed to prosecute or defend any suit, matter, or proceeding in any court of justice, it shall be lawful for the court or judge before whom any such suit, matter, or proceeding has been heard, or shall be depending, to declare such attorney or solicitor entitled to a charge upon the property recovered or preserved, and upon such declaration being made, such attorney or solicitor shall have a charge upon and against, and a right to payment out of, the property, of whatsoever nature, tenure, or kind the same may be, which shall have been recovered or preserved through the instrumentality of any such attorney or solicitor, for the taxed costs, charges, and expenses of or in reference to such suit, matter, or proceeding; and it shall be lawful for such court or judge to make such order or orders for taxation of and for raising and payment of such costs, charges, and expenses out of the said property as to such court or judge shall appear just and proper; and all conveyances and acts done to defeat, or which shall operate to defeat, such charge or right, shall, unless made to a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, be absolutely void and of no effect as against such charge or right: provided always, that no such order shall be made by any such court or judge in any case in which the right to recover payment of such costs, charges, and expenses is barred by any Statute of Limitations.

29. In every case in which an attorney or solicitor has been or shall be employed to prosecute or oppose any inquiry whether a person is a lunatic, idiot, or of unsound mind, and incapable of managing himself or his affairs, or in or about any proceedings consequent upon such inquiry, and the costs of such attorney or solicitor have not been paid in the lifetime of such person, it shall be lawful for the Lord High Chancellor or the Lords Justices, or other the person or persons intrusted by her Majesty with the care and commitment of the custody of the persons and estates of persons found idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind, to make such and the like orders, and to exercise the like power and authority for taxation of, and for raising and payment of, such costs, after the death of such person, as could or might have been exercised or made in his lifetime; and such orders and proceedings shall be as valid and effective to all intents and purposes as if made in the lifetime of the lunatic: provided always, that it shall not be lawful for the court or judge to make any such order but within six years next after the right to recover such costs, charges, and expenses shall have accrued.

30. Every authority granted after the passing of this act to any attorney to administer oaths and take declarations and affirmations in matters depending in any of the superior courts of law at Westminster, or in the court of the duchy chamber of Lancaster at Westminster, or in any of the courts of the counties palatine of Lancaster and Durham, and every authority granted after the passing of this act to any solicitor to administer oaths and take declarations, affirmations, and attestations of honour in Chancery, and whether any such authority as aforesaid be to act in England or to act out of England, and every appointment, made after the passing of this act, of any attorney or solicitor under sect. 81 of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, "for the abolition of fines and recoveries, and for the substitution of more simple modes of assurance," to be a perpetual commissioner for taking acknowledgments of married women under that act, shall, before any such authority or appointment is acted upon, be brought to the registrar by the person to whom the same is granted, or some person on his behalf, and the registrar shall, in books to be kept for that purpose, enter the particulars of every such authority or appointment, and for the entry of every such authority or appointment the registrar shall be paid, by or on behalf of the person having such authority or appointment, the sum of 1s., and the registrar shall mark such authority or appointment as having been entered, and with the date of the entry, and such books shall at all times be open to public inspection during office hours without fee or reward.

31. For enabling the registrar to form a complete register of all such authorities and appointments as aforesaid, as well those granted or made before the passing of this act as those granted or made thereafter, the principal secretary of the Lord Chancellor, or other the officer having the care and custody of the lists of authorities now in force for the purposes aforesaid, so far as they relate to the Court of Chancery, and the clerks of the Lords Chief Justices of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, and of the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, or other the officers having the care and custody of the lists of authorities now in force for the purposes aforesaid, so far as they relate to such courts respectively, and the officers of the court of the duchy chamber of Lancaster at Westminster, and the courts of the counties palatine of Lancaster and Durham, having the care and custody of the lists of authorities now in force for the purposes aforesaid, so far as they relate to such courts respectively, and the officer of the Court of Common Pleas with whom the certificates of the said acknowledgments of married women are lodged, so far as regards all appointments now in force for taking the said acknowledgments, shall severally, at the expense of the registrar, prepare and transmit to such registrar, with all convenient speed after the passing of this act, a list of the persons having such authorities and appointments as aforesaid, with the particulars thereof, and the places of business of such persons, and the registrar shall enter the particulars of all such authorities and appointments now in force in books to be kept for that purpose, which shall be open to inspection as aforesaid.

32. All regulations and acts authorised by this act to be made or done by the Chief Justices of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, and the Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, jointly with the Master of the Rolls, may be made or done by any two of them, the said Chief Justices and Chief Baron, jointly with the Master of the Rolls.

33. Nothing in this act shall extend to repeal, prejudice, or affect any provision in any act of Parliament in anywise enabling any person other than an attorney or solicitor to conduct, defend, or otherwise act in relation to any suit, matter, or proceeding.

34. From and after the 31st October next after the passing of this act it shall not be lawful for the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, or any of their officers, to grant or issue in any year to any person any such stamped certificate as is required to be taken out by every person who after the passing of this act shall become a member of one of the four Inns of court in England, practising under the bar as a conveyancer, unless and until he have left with the said commissioners or their proper officer an order of the benchers of the Inn of court of which the applicant is a member, granting him permission for that year to take out such certificate or a copy of such order certified under the hand of their treasurer, sub-treasurer, or steward: provided always, that this clause shall not extend or apply to any person who, at the time of the passing of this act, shall be lawfully practising as a certificated conveyancer.

35. This act shall only extend to England and Wales, save as herein otherwise expressly provided.

36. The first hereinbefore-mentioned act and this act shall be construed together as one act.

Relief against Forfeiture.

Sect. 1. In the case of any ejectment for a forfeiture brought for non-payment of rent, the court or a judge shall have power, upon rule or summons, to give relief in a summary manner, but subject to appeal as hereinafter mentioned, up to and within the like time after execution executed, and subject to the same terms and conditions in all respects, as to payment of rent, costs, and otherwise, as in the Court of Chancery; and if the lessee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall, upon such proceeding, be relieved, he and they shall hold the demised lands according to the lease thereof made, without any new lease.

2. In the case of any ejectment for a forfeiture for breach of a covenant or condition to insure against loss or damage by fire, the court or a judge shall have power, upon rule or summons, to give relief in a summary manner, but subject to appeal as hereinafter mentioned, in all cases in which such relief may now be obtained in the Court of Chancery under the provisions of an act passed in the session of Parliament held in the 22 & 23 Vict. [c. 35], intitled "An Act to further amend the Law of Property, and to relieve Trustees," and upon such terms as would be imposed in such court.

3. Where such relief shall be granted, the court or a judge shall direct a minute thereof to be made by indorsement on the lease or otherwise.

Appeal.

4. Any order made by a judge upon an application for relief under the provisions of this act shall be subject to an appeal to the court, and may be discharged, varied, or set aside by the court, upon such terms as the court shall think fit, on application made thereto by any party dissatisfied with such order.

5. It shall be lawful for the party against whom the court makes any rule or order in respect of such relief to appeal from such rule or order.

6. The courts of error shall be courts of appeal for the purposes of this act.

7. No appeal shall be allowed unless notice thereof be given in writing to the opposite party or his attorney, and to one of the Masters of the court, within four days after the decision complained of, or such further time as may be allowed by the court or a judge.

8. Notice of appeal shall be a stay of execution, provided bail to pay the sum demanded and costs be given, in like manner and to the same amount as bail in error, within eight days after the decision complained of, or before execution delivered to the sheriff.

9. The appeal hereinbefore mentioned shall be upon a case to be stated by the parties, (and in case of difference, to be settled by the court, or a judge of the court, appealed from), in which case shall be set forth so much of the pleadings, facts, and the order, rule, or judgment objected to, as may be necessary to raise the question for the decision of the court of appeal.

10. The court of appeal shall give such judgment or make such rule as ought to have been given or made in the court below, and shall have power to remit the cause, with such directions as they shall think proper; and all such further proceedings may be taken thereupon as if the judgment or rule had been given or made by the court below.

11. The court of appeal shall have power to adjudge payment of costs, and to order restitution.

Interpleader Proceedings.

12. Where an action has been commenced in respect of a common-law claim for the recovery of money or goods, or where goods or chattels have been taken or are intended to be taken in execution under process issued from any one of the superior courts, or from the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster or the Court of Pleas at Durham, and the defendant in such action, or the sheriff or other officer, has applied for relief under the provisions of an act made and passed in the session of Parliament held in the 1 & 2 Will. 4, [c. 58], intitled "An Act to enable Courts of Law to give Relief against adverse Claims made upon Persons having no Interest in the Subject of such Claims," it shall be lawful for the court or a judge to whom such application is made to exercise all the powers and authorities given to them by this act and the hereinbefore-mentioned act passed in the session of Parliament held in the 1 & 2 Will. 4, though the titles of the claimants to the money, goods, or chattels in question, or to the proceeds or value thereof, have not a common origin, but are adverse to and independent of one another.

13. When goods or chattels have been seized in execution by a sheriff or other officer under process of the above-mentioned courts, and some third person claims to be entitled, under a bill of sale or otherwise, to such goods or chattels by way of security for a debt, the court or a judge may order a sale of the whole or part thereof, upon such terms as to payment of the whole or part of the secured debt, or otherwise, as they or he shall think fit, and may direct the application of the proceeds of such sale in such manner and upon such terms as to such court or judge may seem just.

14. Upon the hearing of any rule or order calling upon persons to appear and state the nature and particulars of their claims, it shall be lawful for the court or judge, wherever, from the smallness of the amount in dispute or of the value of the goods seized, it shall appear to them or him desirable and right so to do, at the request of either party, to dispose of the merits of the respective claims of such parties, and to determine the same in a summary manner, upon such terms as they or he shall think fit to impose, and to make such other rules and orders therein as to costs and all other matters as may be just.

15. In all cases of interpleader proceedings where the question is one of law, and the facts are not in dispute, the judge shall be at liberty, at his discretion, to decide the question without directing an action or issue, and, if he shall think it desirable, to order that a special case be stated for the opinion of the court.

16. The proceedings upon such case shall, as nearly as may be, be the same as upon a special case stated under the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852; and error may be brought upon a judgment upon such case; and the provisions of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, as to bringing error upon a special case, shall apply to the proceedings in error upon a special case under this act.

17. The judgment in any such action or issue as may be directed by the court or judge in any interpleader proceedings, and the decision of the court or judge in a summary manner, shall be final and conclusive against the parties, and all persons claiming by, from, or under them.

18. All rules, orders, matters, and decisions to be made and done in interpleader proceedings under this act (excepting only any affidavits) may, together with the declaration in the cause, if any, be entered of record, with a note in the margin expressing the true date of such entry, to the end that the same may be evidence in future times, if required, and to secure and enforce the payment of costs directed by any such rule or order; and every such rule or order so entered shall have the force and effect of a judgment in the superior courts of common law.

Procedure and Practice.

19. The joinder of too many plaintiffs shall not be fatal; but every action may be brought in the name of all the persons in whom the legal right may be supposed to exist, and judgment may be given in favour of the plaintiffs by whom the action is brought, or of one or more of them; or, in case of any question of misjoinder being raised, then in favour of such one or more of them as shall be adjudged by the court to be entitled to recover: provided always, that the defendant, though unsuccessful, shall be entitled to his costs occasioned by joining any person or persons in whose favour judgment is not given, unless otherwise ordered by the court or a judge.

20. Upon the trial of such cause, a defendant who has therein pleaded a set-off may obtain the benefit of his set-off by proving either that all the parties named as plaintiffs are indebted to him, notwithstanding that one or more of such plaintiffs was or were improperly joined, or on proving that the plaintiff or plaintiffs who establish their right to maintain the cause is or are indebted to him.

21. No other action shall be brought against the defendant by any person so joined as plaintiff in respect of the same cause of action.

22. The provisions of an act passed in the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 106, which relate to replevin, shall be deemed and taken to apply to all cases of replevin, in like manner as to the cases of replevin of goods distrained for rent or damage feasant.

23. The plaintiff in replevin may, in answer to an avowry, pay money into court in satisfaction, in like manner, and subject to the same proceedings as to costs and otherwise, as upon a payment into court by a defendant in other actions.

24. Such payment into court in replevin shall not, nor shall the acceptance thereof by the defendant in satisfaction, work a forfeiture of the replevin bond.

25. In any action brought upon a bond which has a condition or defeasance to make void the same upon payment of a lesser sum at a day or place certain, with a penalty, and in any action for detaining the goods of the plaintiff, it shall be lawful for the defendant, by leave of the court or a judge, and upon such terms as they or he shall think fit, to pay into court a sum of money to answer the claim of the plaintiff in respect of such bond in the former case, and in the latter case to the value of the goods alleged to be detained; and such payment into court shall be made and pleaded in like manner, and according to the provisions of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852; and the like proceedings may be had and taken thereupon as to costs and otherwise.

26. No writ of right of dower or writ of dower under nihil habet, and no plaint for free-bench or dower in the nature of any such writ, and no quare impedit, shall be brought, after the commencement of this act, in any court whatsoever; but where any such writ, action, or plaint would now lie, either in a superior or in any other court, an action may be commenced by writ of summons issuing out of the Court of Common Pleas, in the same manner and form as the writ of summons in an ordinary action; and upon such writ shall be indorsed a notice that the plaintiff intends to declare in dower, or for free-bench, or in quare impedit, as the case may be.

27. The service of the writ, appearance of the defendant, proceedings in default of appearance, pleadings, judgment, execution, and all other proceedings and costs upon such writ, shall be subject to the same rules and practice, as nearly as may be, as the proceedings in an ordinary action commenced by writ of summons; and the provisions of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1852, and of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, shall apply to the writ and pleadings, and proceedings thereupon.

28. In proceedings to obtain an attachment of debts under the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, the judge may, in his discretion, refuse to interfere where, from the smallness of the amount to be recovered, or of the debt sought to be attached, or otherwise, the remedy sought would be worthless or vexatious.

29. Whenever, in proceedings to obtain an attachment of debts under the act above mentioned, it is suggested by the garnishee that the debt sought to be attached belongs to some third person, who has a lien or charge upon it, the judge may order such third person to appear before him, and state the nature and particulars of his claim upon such debt.

30. After hearing the allegations of such third person under such order, and of any other person whom by the same or any subsequent order the judge may think fit to call before him, or in case of such third person not appearing before him upon such summons, the judge may order execution to issue to levy the amount due from such garnishee, or the judgment creditor to proceed against the garnishee, according to the provisions of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, and he may bar the claim of such third person, or make such other order as he shall think fit, upon such terms, in all cases, with respect to the lien or charge (if any) of such third person, and to costs, as he shall think just and reasonable.

31. The provisions of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, so far as they are applicable, shall apply to any order, and the proceedings thereon, made and taken in pursuance of the herein next before-mentioned powers under this act.

32. In all cases in which a writ of mandamus or of injunction is issued under the provisions of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, such writ shall, unless otherwise ordered by the court or a judge, in addition to the matter directed to be inserted therein, command the defendant to pay to the plaintiff the costs of preparing, issuing, and serving such writ; and payment of such costs may be enforced in the same manner as costs payable under a rule of court are now by law enforceable.

33. Writs of injunction against a corporation may be enforced either by attachment against the directors or other officers thereof, as in the case of a mandamus, or by writ of sequestration against their property and effects, to be issued in such form, and tested and returnable in like manner, as writs of execution, and to be proceeded upon and executed in like manner as writs of sequestration issuing out of the Court of Chancery.

34. When the plaintiff in any action for an alleged wrong, in any of the superior courts, recovers by the verdict of a jury less than 5*l.*, he shall not be entitled to recover or obtain from the defendant any costs whatever in respect of such verdict, whether given upon any issue or issues tried, or judgment passed by default, in case the judge or presiding officer before whom such verdict is obtained shall immediately afterwards certify on the back of the record, or on the writ of trial or writ of inquiry, that the action was not really brought to try a right besides the mere right to recover damages, and that the trespass or grievance in respect of which the action was brought was not wilful and malicious, and that the action was not fit to be brought.

35. The 88th section of the Common-law Procedure Act, 1854, shall be and is hereby repealed; and from and after the passing of this act the superior courts, or any judge thereof, may, upon summary application, by rule or order, exercise such and the like jurisdiction as may be exercised by the Court of Chancery under the provisions of the ninth part of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854.

36. It shall be lawful for the superior courts of common law, and every judge thereof, and any judge sitting at Nisi Prius, at all times to amend all defects and errors in any proceedings under the provisions of this act, whether there is anything in writing to amend by or not, and whether the defect or error be that of the party applying to amend or not; and all such amendments may be made with or without costs, and upon such terms as to the court or judge may seem fit, and all such amendments as may be necessary for the purpose of determining in the existing suit the real question in controversy between the parties shall be so made, if duly applied for.

37. It shall be lawful for the judges of the said courts, or any eight or more of them, of whom the chiefs of each of the said courts shall be three, from time to time to make all such general rules and orders for the effectual execution of this act, and of the intention and object thereof, and for fixing the costs to be allowed for and in respect of the matters herein contained, and the performance thereof, as in their judgment shall be necessary or proper, and for that purpose to meet from time to time as occasion may require: provided, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to restrain the authority or limit the jurisdiction of the said courts, or of the judges thereof, to make rules or orders, or otherwise, to regulate and dispose of the business therein.

38. Such new or altered writs and forms of proceedings may be issued, entered, and taken as may by the judges of the said courts, or any eight or more of them, of whom the chiefs of each of the said courts shall be three, be deemed necessary or expedient for giving effect to the provisions hereinbefore contained, and in such forms as the judges of such courts respectively shall from time to time think fit to order; and such writs and proceedings shall be acted upon and enforced in such and the same manner as writs and proceedings of the said courts are now acted upon and enforced, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit; and any existing writ or proceeding, the form of which shall be in any manner altered in pursuance of this act, shall nevertheless be of the same force and virtue as if no alteration had been made therein, except as far as the effect thereof may be varied by this act.

39. In the construction of this act the word "court" shall be understood to mean any one of the superior courts of common law at Westminster; and the word "judge" shall be understood to mean a judge or baron of any of the said courts; and the word "master" shall be understood to mean a master of any of the said courts; and the word "action" shall be understood to mean any action in any of the said courts.

40. All the enactments and provisions of this act shall extend and apply to the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster and the Court of Pleas at Durham, and actions and proceedings therein respectively, subject to the following modifications: all the powers given by this act to the judges of the said superior courts of common law at Westminster to make general rules and orders shall and may be exercised by the respective judges of the Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster and Court of Pleas at Durham, being judges of one of the said common-law courts at Westminster, or any two of them respectively, with respect to the said Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster and Court of Pleas at Durham respectively, and matters and proceedings therein within the jurisdiction of the same courts respectively; and all powers under this act exercisable by any one judge of the superior courts at Westminster shall and may be exercisable by one judge of the said superior courts of the said counties palatine, being also a judge of one of the said courts at Westminster, as to matters and proceedings in the said superior courts of the said counties palatine.

41. Provided always, that all the provisions of this act applicable to Masters of the said courts at Westminster shall apply to the respective prothonotaries of the Court of Common Pleas at Durham and their respective deputies, who may singly exercise, with reference to matters and proceedings in the last-mentioned courts respectively, the powers hereby given to any one or more of the Masters of the superior courts at Westminster.

42. Provided also, as to proceedings in appeal, that the Court of Queen's Bench, being the court of error from the said Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster and the Court of Pleas at Durham, shall also be the court of appeal from the said respective courts for the purposes of this act.

43. The provisions of this act shall come into operation on the 10th October, 1860.

44. It shall be lawful for her Majesty from time to time, by any Order in Council, to direct that all or any part of the provisions of this act, or of the rules to be made in pursuance thereof, shall apply to all or any court or courts of record in England and Wales, and within one month after such order shall have been made and published in the London Gazette such provisions and rules respectively shall extend and apply in manner directed by such Order, and any such Order may be in like manner from time to time altered and annulled; and in and by any such Order her Majesty may direct by whom any powers or duties incident to the provisions applied under this act shall and may be exercised with respect to matters in such court or courts, and may make any order or regulations which may be deemed requisite for carrying into operation in such court or courts the provisions so applied.

45. In citing this act in any instrument, document, or proceeding, it shall be sufficient to use the expression "The Common-law Procedure Act, 1860."

46. Nothing in this act shall extend to Ireland or Scotland.

CAP. CXXVIII.

An Act to enable the Lord Chancellor and Judges of the Court of Chancery to carry into effect the Recommendations and Suggestions of the Chancery Evidence Commissioners by General Rules and Orders of the Court.

[28th August, 1860.]

Sect. 1. Power for Lord Chancellor and judges to make General Rules and Orders for carrying the recommendations of the Chancery Evidence Commissioners' reports into effect.

2. Such General Rules and Orders to be laid before Parliament.

3. Act not to abridge &c. powers of Lord Chancellor, &c. making General Orders.

Whereas, by commissions under the Great Seal, dated respectively the 18th August and the 13th October, 1859, commissioners were appointed to inquire into the mode of taking evidence in the High Court of Chancery, and its effects: and whereas two reports from the said commissioners have since been made to her Majesty: and whereas doubts have been entertained whether effect can be given to the recommendations and suggestions of the said reports by General Orders of the Court without the authority of Parliament: be it declared and enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. The Lord Chancellor, with the advice and assistance of the Master of the Rolls, the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, and the Vice-Chancellors, or any three of them, may from time to time, as the Lord Chancellor with such advice and assistance as aforesaid may think fit, make General Rules and Orders for carrying the said recommendations and suggestions of the said reports, or any of them, or any part thereof, into effect, and in relation to all matters consequential thereon or incidental thereto, and so far as to them shall seem expedient for varying and adding to the course of proceeding recommended in the said reports in respect of the matters to which the said reports relate; and such Rules and Orders may from time to time be rescinded or altered by the like authority; and all such Rules and Orders shall take effect as if they had been General Rules and Orders of the Court duly made.

2. Provided always, that all such General Rules and Orders as aforesaid shall immediately after the making and issuing thereof be laid before both Houses of Parliament, if Parliament be then sitting, or if Parliament be not then sitting, within five days after the next meeting thereof; and if either of the Houses of Parliament shall, by any resolution passed within thirty-six days after such Rules or Orders have been laid before such Houses of Parliament, resolve that the whole or any part of such Rules or Orders ought not to continue in force, in such case the whole or such part thereof as shall be so included in such resolution shall from and after such resolution cease to be binding.

3. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to abridge or affect the powers of making General Rules and Orders which the Lord Chancellor, either alone or with such advice and assistance as aforesaid, might have exercised if this act had not passed.

30. Rules to be observed in the application of the sum appropriating half-pay. Not to prevent the receiving of half-pay under any act relating to the general or local militia, &c. Paymaster-General, by permission of the Treasury, may issue half-pay to officers appointed to civil offices since July, 1896. An account of the number of officers so receiving half-pay to be laid before Parliament annually.

31. Treasury may authorise military officers in civil employments to receive half-pay in certain cases.

32. Half-pay allowances to chaplains of regiments not holding ecclesiastical benefices derived from the Crown.

33. Widows, &c. claiming pensions to make required declaration.

34. Declarations to be made as specified in the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 68.

[28th August, 1860.]

CAP. CXXXIV.

An Act to amend the Law regarding Roman Catholic Charities. [28th August, 1860.]

SECT. 1. Charities for lawful purposes not to be invalidated by the addition of unlawful trust; but the property may be apportioned, and the whole applied to lawful purposes.

2. No proceedings to be instituted as to dealings with Roman Catholic charities prior to the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 115.

3. Certain deeds for Roman Catholic charities not to be void if inrolled within twelve months from passing of act.

4. Expense of inrolment, how to be defrayed.

5. The trusts of charities, in the absence of settlements, may be ascertained from the usage.

6. The act not to prejudice past or pending proceedings or adverse possession.

7. Nothing in this act to repeal the provisions of the 10 Geo. 4, c. 7.

8. Interpretation of "charity."

9. Short title.

10. Extent of act.

SECT. 1. No existing or future gift or disposition of real or personal estate upon any lawful charitable trust, for the exclusive benefit of persons professing the Roman Catholic religion, shall be invalidated by reason only that the same estate has been or shall be also subjected to any trust or provision deemed to be superstitious, or otherwise prohibited by the laws affecting persons professing the same religion; but in every such case it shall be lawful for the High Court of Chancery, or any judge thereof sitting at chambers, in exercise of the jurisdiction created by the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, upon the application of her Majesty's Attorney-General, or of any person authorised for this purpose by the certificate of the Board of Charity Commissioners for England and Wales, or for the said board, upon the application of the person or persons acting in the administration of such real or personal estate, or of a majority of such persons, to apportion the same estate, or the annual income or benefit thereof, so that a proportion thereof, to be fixed by such court or judge, or by the said board, as the case may require, may be exclusively subject to the lawful charitable trusts declared by the donor or settlor, and that the residue thereof may become subject to such lawful charitable trusts for the benefit of persons professing the Roman Catholic religion, to take effect in lieu of such superstitious or prohibited trusts, as the said court or judge, or the said board, may consider under the circumstances to be most just; and also that it shall be lawful for the court or judge, or board, making any such apportionment, by the same or any other order or orders to establish any scheme for giving effect thereto, and to appoint trustees for the administration of the several portions of such real and personal estate, according to the trusts established of the same proportions respectively, and to vest the estate to be so apportioned in the trustees so to be appointed.

2. No proceedings, at law or in equity, shall be brought or instituted on account or in respect of any dealings, transactions, matters, or things with or concerning any real or personal estate subject to any use, trust, gift, foundation, or disposition for any charity relating to or connected with the Roman Catholic religion which took place prior to the passing of the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 115: provided, that nothing herein contained shall extend to sanction or exempt from such proceedings as aforesaid the fraudulent misapplication or conversion of any such real or personal estate to any private use or purpose not being charitable.

3. No deed or other assurance for any charity, relating to or connected with the Roman Catholic religion, made subsequently to the passing of the 9 Geo. 2, [c. 36], intituled "An Act to restrain the Disposition of Lands whereby the same become inalienable," and before the passing of this act, shall be void or voidable by reason of the same not having been made, perfected, or inrolled in the manner directed by the first-named act, or otherwise, under the provisions of the said act, if such deed or assurance has been or shall be, within twelve months after the passing of this act, inrolled in the High Court of Chancery: provided, that every deed or assurance for any such charity as aforesaid coming within the provisions of the act passed in the 9 Geo. 4, [c. 85], intituled "An Act for remedying a Defect in the Titles of Lands purchased for charitable Purposes," shall have the benefit thereof, notwithstanding anything herein contained.

4. The expense of the inrolment of any deed under the 3rd section of this act shall be defrayed out of the property subject to the charity to which the same may relate.

5. Where any real or personal estate, subject to any use, trust, gift, foundation, or disposition for any charity relating to or connected with the Roman Catholic religion, shall have been applied upon any charitable trusts relating to or connected with the same religion during any continuous period of twenty years, but the original trusts of such property shall not be ascertained by means of any written document, the consistent usage of the last preceding twenty years, or of the last period of twenty years during which any consistent usage in the application of such property shall have prevailed, shall be deemed to afford conclusive evidence of the trusts on which the same property shall have been settled.

6. Nothing in this act contained shall extend to give effect to any use, trust, gift, foundation, or disposition heretofore made which has been already avoided in any proceeding at law or in equity, or to prejudice any suit at law or in equity commenced before the passing of this act, or to affect any property held or enjoyed beneficially by any person or persons at the time of the passing of this act adversely to any such use, trust, gift, foundation, or disposition.

7. Nothing in this act contained shall be taken to repeal or in any way alter any provisions of an act passed in the 10 Geo. 4, [c. 7], intituled "An Act for the Relief of his Majesty's Roman Catholic Subjects," respecting the suppression or prohibition of the religious orders or societies of the church of Rome bound by monastic or religious vows.

8. In the construction of this act, except where the context or other provisions of this act shall require a different construction, the expression "charity" herein contained shall be construed to mean and include the same matters and things as the like expression means and includes in the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853.

9. This act may for all purposes be cited as "The Roman Catholic Charities Act."

10. This act shall be confined in its operation to England and Wales.

CAP. CXXXV.

An Act for the Employment of the Metropolitan Police Force in Her Majesty's Yards and Military Stations.

2. Commissioner of metropolitan police may swear constables to act within her Majesty's yards, &c., and within fifteen miles thereof.

3. Assistant commissioners to act as herein stated.

4. Charges incurred for constables to be defrayed out of monies provided by Parliament.

5. The commissioner of police, &c. incapacitated for voting for certain candidates for Parliament.

6. The word "yards." —

CAP. CXXXVI.

An Act to amend the Law relating to the Administration of Endowed Charities. [28th August, 1860.]

Sect. 1. The Charitable Trusts Acts to be construed with this act.

2. Certain administrative powers to be exercisable by the Charity Commissioners.

3. Board to notify to trustees of charity their intention of exercising jurisdiction.

4. The powers to be exercisable over no charities of which the gross income shall exceed 50L. without application of trustees.

5. The board shall not exercise jurisdiction over contentious cases.

6. Notices to be given of certain orders, and objections or suggestions to be received.

7. Publication of definitive orders.

8. Power to appeal against orders of board.

9. Who may be the respondent on appeals.

10. Powers to be applicable to charities vested in corporations, &c.

11. Jurisdiction of the district courts of bankruptcy and county courts enlarged.

12. Official trustees of charitable funds may be empowered to receive arrears of dividends.

13. Power for magistrates to give possession of school buildings and property held over by officers or recipients of charities.

14. Masters and mistresses of endowed schools to be removable.

15. Sect. 21 of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 137, extended.

16. A majority of trustees to have legal power of dealing with the charity estates.

17. Official trustee not to be accountable for loss unless occasioned by his own neglect.

18. Accounts to be laid before Parliament.

19. Power to require the transmission of documents belonging to charities.

20. Orders to be enforceable as under former acts.

21. Board to make minutes.

22. Salary of the secretary.

23. Indemnity to the Bank of England and others.

24. Commissioners, &c. exempted from serving on juries.

25. Short title.

Sect. 1. The Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, and the Charitable Trusts Amendment Act, 1855, and this act, shall be construed together as one act, and any provisions of the said former acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

2. The board of Charity Commissioners for England and Wales, subject to the restrictions and rights of appeal hereinafter provided, shall have power from time to time, upon the application of any person or persons who, under the 43rd section of the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, might be authorised to apply to any judge or court for the like purposes, to make such effectual orders as may now be made by any judge of the Court of Chancery sitting at chambers, or by any county court or district court of bankruptcy, for the appointment or removal of trustees of any charity, or for the removal of any school master or mistress or other officer thereof, or for or relating to the assurance, transfer, payment, or vesting of any real or personal estate belonging thereto, or entitling the official trustees of charitable funds, or any other trustees, to call for a transfer of, and to transfer, any stock belonging to such estate, or for the establishment of any scheme for the administration of any such charity.

3. The said board, previously to making any order under the jurisdiction vested in them by this act, shall notify to the trustees or administrators (if any) of the charity to be affected thereby their intention of exercising such jurisdiction, by notice in writing, to be delivered to them, or sent to them by the post at their last known place of abode in Great Britain or Ireland.

4. The said board shall not make any order, under the jurisdiction vested in them by this act, with respect to any charity of which the gross annual income, exclusively of the yearly value of any buildings or land used wholly for the purposes thereof, and not yielding any pecuniary income, shall amount to 50*l.* or upwards, except upon the application of the trustees or persons acting in the administration of the charity, or a majority of them, to be made to the said board in writing, under their hands if they shall be unincorporated, or under their common seal if they shall be incorporated; and the board shall not make any order removing any trustee on the ground only of his religious belief.

5. The said board also shall not exercise the jurisdiction hereby vested in them in any case which, by reason of its contentious character, or of any special questions of law or of fact which it may involve, or for other reasons, they may consider more fit to be adjudicated on by any of the judicial courts.

6. No order appointing or removing a trustee, or establishing a scheme for the administration of any charity, shall be made by the said board before the expiration of one calendar month after public notice of the proposal to make such order shall have been given, as they may consider most expedient and effectual for insuring the publicity thereof, in each parish or district in which the charity, if of a local character, shall be applicable, or among all persons interested therein; and no order removing a trustee, or school master or mistress, or other officer of a charity who shall have any known place of residence in Great Britain or Ireland, and who shall not be consenting to be discharged, shall be made before the expiration of one calendar month after notice of the proposal to make such order shall have also been delivered to him or her, or sent by the post or otherwise to such his or her place of residence, and until after sufficient hearing of the matter before the said board, or some member thereof, or one of their inspectors; and every notice hereby required shall contain (so far as conveniently may be) sufficient particulars of the objects of the proposed order, and shall prescribe a reasonable time within which any objections thereto or suggestions thereon may be made or transmitted to the board; and the said board shall receive and consider all such objections and suggestions, and may withhold, suspend, or modify their proposed order, as they shall thereupon, or in the result of further inquiry or otherwise, think expedient.

7. A copy of every such order when made shall, in the case of any local charity, be deposited for the space of one calendar month in some convenient place within the parish or one of the parishes, or in the district in which the charity shall be applicable, and shall be open to public inspection there at all reasonable hours during the same period; and a copy also of every such order relating to any charity, whether local or general, shall be kept, open to public inspection at all reasonable hours, at the office of the commissioners, during a like period of one calendar month; and in each case effectual publicity shall be given to the making of the order by such means as the board shall consider most expedient for that purpose.

8. The Attorney-General, or any person authorised by him or by the said board, in the case of any charity, whatever may be the yearly income of its endowments, and any trustee or person acting in the administration of, or interested in, any charity of which the gross yearly income, to be calculated in manner aforesaid, shall exceed 50*l.*, or any two inhabitants of any parish or district in which the same shall be specially applicable, may, within three calendar months next after the definitive publication of any order of the said board appointing or removing a trustee or trustees, or for or relating to the assurance, transfer, payment, or vesting of any real or personal estate, or establishing a scheme for the administration of the charity, present a petition to the High Court of Chancery in a summary way, appealing against such order, and praying such relief as the case may require; and any schoolmaster or schoolmistress or other officer removed by the order of the board, without the concurrence of the trustees or persons acting in the administration of the charity, or a majority of them, and without the approval of a special visitor, if any, of the charity, may within two calendar months (next after his or her removal) appeal in like manner against the order of removal; and the court, upon or before the hearing of any such petition of appeal as aforesaid, or at any stage of the proceedings, may require, if it shall think fit, from the said board, their reasons for making the order appealed against, or for any part of such order, and may remit the same to the board for reconsideration, with or without any declaration in relation thereto, or may make any substitutive or other order in relation to the matter of the appeal, as it shall think just; and the court may make any order respecting the costs, charges, or expenses incident to the appeal, and may also, before hearing or proceeding with the same, require from any appellant, other than the Attorney-General, proper security for such costs, charges, and expenses as may be eventually payable by him; but no such petition of appeal shall be presented by any person, other than the Attorney-General, before the expiration of twenty-one days after written notice, under the hand of such appellant, of his or her intention to present such petition, shall have been delivered to the said board at their office.

9. The Attorney-General, if he shall think fit, or any person authorised by him or by the said board, may appear as the respondent upon any such appeal, and the court may make any order respecting the costs, charges, and expenses of the Attorney-General or other defendant.

10. The jurisdiction vested by this act in the said board shall be exercisable with reference to charities vested in any corporation, sole or aggregate, who, either solely or jointly with any other person or persons, shall also be the recipients of the benefit thereof.

11. The jurisdiction vested by the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, in the district courts of bankruptcy and county courts, over charities not possessing a larger gross yearly income than 30*l.*, shall be exercisable by the said courts respectively, for the like purposes, and under the like provisions, over charities, of which the gross yearly income for the time being, to be calculated in manner aforesaid, shall not exceed 50*l.*, in the same manner as if the last-mentioned limit to the jurisdiction of the said courts had been fixed by the said former act.

12. Any court or judge, or the said board, having jurisdiction to authorise the official trustees of charitable funds to call for a transfer of, and to transfer, any annuities, stock, or securities, may empower them also to receive and recover, in trust for the charity to which the same shall belong, all dividends, interest, and income accrued from any such annuities, stock, or securities respectively, and which shall for the time being be in arrear.

13. Where any school master or mistress or other officer, or any recipient of the benefit of a charity, being in possession, by virtue of his or her office, or as such recipient, of any house, buildings, land, or property of the charity, shall have been removed from or shall cease to hold such his or her office, or his or her place as such recipient, but he or she, or any person claiming under him or her, shall refuse or neglect to relinquish the possession of such house, buildings, land, or property, within one calendar month next thereafter, to his or her successor, or to the trustees or persons acting in the administration of the charity, or as they shall direct, it shall be lawful for any two or more justices of the peace acting for the district, division, or place in which such house, buildings, land, or property shall be situate, in petty sessions assembled, and they are hereby required, on the complaint of the said trustees or administrators, and on the production of an order of the said board certifying such school master or mistress, or other officer or recipient, to have been duly removed from or to have ceased to hold his or her office or place, (which order under the seal of the said commissioners shall be conclusive evidence of the facts thereby certified, and of the jurisdiction of the said commissioners to make such order for all the purposes of this enactment, and shall afford a complete indemnity to all persons acting thereunder), to issue a warrant under the hands and seals of such justices, to any constables or peace officers of the same district, division, or place, commanding them, within a period to be thereby appointed, not being less than ten or more than twenty-one clear days thereafter, to enter into the premises, and deliver possession thereof to the said trustees or administrators, or their nominee or agent, and to remove therefrom such former school master or mistress, or other officer or recipient, and all persons claiming in his or her right, as fully and effectually, and subject to the same provisions, as nearly as the case will permit, as justices of the peace are empowered to give possession of any properties to the landlord or his agent upon the determination of the tenancy thereof, under an act passed in the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74, for facilitating the recovery of possession of tenements after the determination of the tenancy.

14. Every school master and mistress appointed after the date of this act shall be removable from his or her office, after reasonable notice by the trustees or persons acting in the administration of the charity, as they shall think expedient in the interests thereof, so nevertheless that the removal, by virtue only of this provision, of a master or mistress who would be otherwise irremovable from his or her office, shall be determined on by all or a majority of such trustees or administrators assembled at a meeting convened by due notice delivered or sent by the post to all such trustees or administrators who shall have any known place of residence in Great Britain or Ireland, by the space of not less than twenty-eight days previously, for the special purpose of considering and determining on the question of such removal, and of which intended meeting a notice shall also be delivered or sent in like manner to the master or mistress by the same previous space; and so also that the resolution of the meeting for the removal of any such last-mentioned master or mistress shall be forthwith certified under the hands of the trustees or persons acting as aforesaid who shall have concurred therein, or under the hand of the chairman of the meeting, and shall within seven days next thereafter be transmitted to the said board for their approval, and the same shall not take effect unless or until the same shall have been approved by the said board, who may also, if they so think fit, fix the time or any reasonable conditions at or under which the same shall come into operation; if also there shall be any special visitor of the charity who shall be resident in Great Britain or Ireland, and free from incapacity, no removal of any such last-mentioned master or mistress shall be made, under the authority only of the preceding provision, without the written consent of such visitor: provided always, that this section shall not apply to any endowed grammar school.

15. The power vested in the said board by the 21st section of the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, of authorising the application of monies belonging to any charity, or to be raised on the security of the properties thereof, to the improvement of such properties, shall extend to authorise the application of any like monies to any other purpose or object which the board shall consider to be beneficial to the charity or the estate or objects thereof, and which shall not be inconsistent with the trusts or intentions of the foundation.

16. A majority of two-thirds of the trustees of any charity assembled at a meeting of their body duly constituted, and having power to determine on any sale, exchange, partition, mortgage, lease, or other disposition of any property of the charity, shall also have a legal power, on behalf of themselves and their co-trustees, and also of the official trustee of charity lands, where his concurrence would be otherwise required, to do, enter into, and execute all such acts, deeds, contracts, and assurances as shall be requisite for carrying any such sale, exchange, partition, mortgage, lease, or disposition into legal effect, and all such acts, deeds, contracts, or assurances shall have the same legal effect as if the same were respectively done, entered into, or executed by all the acting trustees for the time being, and by the said official trustee.

17. No official trustee of charitable funds, appointed under or in pursuance of the first or secondly recited act, shall be chargeable with or accountable for any loss or misapplication of the said charitable funds, or the dividends, interest, or income thereof, unless the same shall have been occasioned by or through his own wilful neglect or default.

18. The official trustees of charitable funds shall lay before Parliament annually, on or before the 14th February, or as soon as practicable after Parliament shall be sitting, an account of the total amount of the capital stock, shares, and securities transferred to them in the year ending the 31st December preceding, and of the total amount of monies, other than dividends or interest, paid to them or to their account during the same period, and of the investment thereof, and of the capital stock, shares, and securities sold or retransferred by them during the same period, and of the aggregate amount of the capital stock, shares, funds, and securities, and the balance of cash held by them on such preceding 31st December.

19. The board may require any person having the custody or control of any deed or document in which any charity or charities shall be solely interested to transmit the same to the office of the said commissioners for examination; and where such deed or document shall not be held by any person entitled, as a trustee or otherwise, to the custody thereof, the board may either retain the same, for the security thereof, in the repository provided by them under the 63rd section of the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, or, as they may think most advantageous to the charity, may thereupon, or at any time thereafter, return or issue the same to the trustees or persons acting in the administration of the charity, for the purposes thereof.

20. All orders made by the said board under the provisions of this act shall be enforceable by the same means, and shall be subject to the same provisions, as are applicable, under the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, and the Charitable Trusts Amendment Act, 1855, respectively, to any orders of the said board made thereunder.

21. The said board shall from time to time make such minutes as shall be required relative to the institution and conduct of their proceedings under the jurisdiction created by this act.

22. There shall be paid to the secretary for the time being of the said commissioners, in consideration of the increase and extent of his official duties, such a salary, not exceeding the annual sum of 800*l.*, in lieu of the salary payable to him under the firstly-cited act, as shall from time to time be allowed by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury.

23. Every order made under this act under which any stock, shares, securities, or monies shall be transferred or paid to or deposited with the trustees of any charity, or the official trustees of charitable funds, shall afford a complete indemnity to the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, and to all companies and persons by whom respectively any such transfer, payment, or deposit shall be permitted or made, for permitting or making the same; and the said Governor and Company, and other companies and persons, shall be required to give effect or to conform to such order, and it shall not be necessary for them to inquire concerning the propriety of the same order, or the jurisdiction under which the same shall purport to be made.

24. Every commissioner, secretary, and inspector acting under or employed for the purposes of the said acts shall be exempt from serving on juries while he shall be so acting or employed.

25. This act may be cited for all purposes by the short title of "The Charitable Trusts Act, 1860."

CAP. CXXXVII.

Preliminary.

Sect. 1. This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Rifle Volunteer Grounds Act, 1860."

2. This act shall not apply to Ireland.

3. The expression "rifle volunteer corps" as herein used shall mean any rifle volunteer corps of which her Majesty has accepted the offer of service, in pursuance of the several acts of Parliament in that behalf provided.

Power to purchase Land.

4. Any rifle volunteer corps may purchase or acquire, by such grants as are hereinafter mentioned, any land for rifle practice, and for the erection of butts and other accommodations for the use of the corps when practising with rifles, subject to the following restriction:—

That the assent of her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the War Department for the time being, hereinafter called the said Principal Secretary, shall be obtained to the purchase of any land under the powers of this act, or to the grant of any land by any person or body of persons, in pursuance of the powers hereinafter given.

5. All lands acquired by any rifle volunteer corps under the powers and provisions of this act shall vest in the commanding officer of the corps for the time being, and his successors in office, with power for such officer and his successors to sue and be sued, to make contracts, and to do other things relating to such land, under the official name of the commanding officer for the time being of the corps to which he belongs.

Assent of Secretary for War.

6. In order to obtain the assent of the said Principal Secretary to the purchase of land under this act, the corps shall make an application to him in such manner as he may direct, describing the land intended to be purchased, and adding such particulars as to the circumstances of the corps, and as to the amount of purchase money, and as to other matters, as he may require.

7. Previously to giving his assent, the said Principal Secretary shall send an inspector to the land for the purpose of ascertaining the capabilities of such land to be converted into a rifle practice ground, with due regard to the safety and convenience of the public.

8. Upon the receipt of the report of the inspector, the said Principal Secretary may give or withhold his assent, either with or without modification, and may annex to such assent, if given, any conditions or regulations he thinks fit, and the decision of the said Principal Secretary shall in all cases be conclusive.

9. For the purpose of facilitating the purchase of lands, in pursuance of the powers given by this act, the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and the Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845, shall be incorporated with this act, with the exception of the provisions that relate to the purchase of lands otherwise than by agreement.

10. In the construction of this act and the said incorporated acts, this act shall be deemed to be the special act; and the rifle volunteer corps desirous of purchasing land shall be deemed to be the promoters of the undertaking; and under the term "land" a permanent right of shooting and drilling, or any other easement in land, shall be held to be included, and may be alone conveyed, while the fee-simple or other interest in such lands may be reserved.

Grants to Rifle Corps.

11. Any person seized in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for life of any manor or lands of freehold, copyhold, or customary tenure, and having the beneficial interest therein, or in Scotland being the proprietor in fee-simple or under entail, and in possession for the time being, may grant, convey, or enfranchise, by way of gift in fee-simple or for a term of years, any quantity not exceeding four acres of such land, or any limited right as aforesaid over land to any extent exceeding twenty acres, to any rifle volunteer corps: provided always, that no such grant, conveyance, or enfranchisement made by any person seized only for life of any such manor or lands shall be valid unless the person next entitled in remainder, in fee-simple, or fee-tail (if legally competent) is a party to and join in such grant: provided also, that upon its being proved, in manner hereinafter mentioned, that any land granted, conveyed, or enfranchised as aforesaid, or any part thereof, has ceased to be used for the purposes of this act, the same shall thereupon immediately revert to and become a portion of the estate of which it formed a part before the grant was made.

12. The Chief Commissioner of her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings for the time being may grant to any rifle volunteer corps the right to use for the purposes of this act any portion of such royal parks, gardens, and possessions as are under his management, upon such terms, for such time, not exceeding twenty-one years, and subject to such other conditions as he thinks fit: provided always, that any such grant shall be at all times revocable by the Crown.

13. The Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods, Forests, and Land Revenues, or either of them, on behalf of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, may, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, grant any license for the use, during any term not exceeding twenty-one years, of any part of the possessions or land revenues of the Crown under their management, not exceeding four acres, to any rifle volunteer corps, for the purposes of this act, upon such terms and conditions as to the said commissioners or commissioner may seem meet, and subject to this proviso, that in the event of its being proved, as hereinafter mentioned, that the land in respect of which any such license has been so granted as aforesaid, or any part thereof, has ceased to be used for the purposes of this act, such license shall thereupon cease and determine; and any license to be so granted may be renewed from time to time.

14. The chancellor and council of her Majesty's duchy of Lancaster for the time being may, by any deed under the hand and seal of the chancellor of the said duchy for the time being, attested by the clerk of the council of the said duchy for the time being, for and in the name of her Majesty, her heirs and successors, grant any license for the use during any term not exceeding twenty-one years, to any rifle volunteer corps, to be used by them for the purposes of this act, of any lands forming part of the possessions of the said duchy, not exceeding in the whole four acres, upon such terms and conditions as to the said chancellor and council seem meet; subject to this proviso, that in the event of its being proved, in manner hereinafter mentioned, that the land in respect of which any license has been so granted, or any part thereof, has ceased to be used for the purposes of this act, such license shall thereupon cease and determine; and any license so granted as aforesaid may be renewed from time to time.

15. Any two or more of the principal officers of the duchy of Cornwall may, with the consent of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, under the authority of a warrant issued for that purpose under the hands of any three or more of the special commissioners for the time being for managing the affairs of the duchy of Cornwall, or under the hands of any three or more of the persons who may hereafter for the time being have the immediate management of the said duchy, if the said duchy is then vested in the Crown, or if the said duchy is vested in a Duke of Cornwall, then under the privy seal of such Duke of Cornwall, or under the hands of any three or more of the persons for the time being having the immediate management of the said duchy, by deed under the privy seal of such duke, grant any license for the use, during any term not exceeding twenty-one years, to any rifle volunteer corps, to be used by them for the purposes of this act, of any lands forming part of the possessions of the said duchy of Cornwall, not exceeding on the whole four acres, upon such terms and conditions as to the said special commissioners, or to the said duke, or such other persons as aforesaid, seem meet; subject to this proviso, that in the event of its being proved, in manner hereinafter mentioned, that the land in respect of which any license has been so granted, or any part thereof, has ceased to be used for the purposes of this act, such license shall thereupon cease and determine; and any license to be so granted as aforesaid may be renewed from time to time.

16. Any corporation, ecclesiastical or lay, sole or aggregate, any officer, justice of the peace, trustees, or commissioners holding land for public, ecclesiastical, or parochial purposes, may grant any such license for the use, during any term not exceeding twenty-one years, to any rifle volunteer corps, to be used by them for the purposes of this act, of any quantity of land not exceeding four acres, that may be vested in such corporation, officers, justices, trustees, or commissioners, subject to the following provisions:—

- (1). That no ecclesiastical corporation sole below the dignity of a bishop shall make such grant without the consent in writing of the bishop of the diocese to whose jurisdiction he is subject, and of the patron of the preferment to which the land belongs, or the guardians or trustees of such patron.
- (2). That no parochial property shall be granted for such purposes without the consent of the majority of the ratepayers and owners of property in the parish to which the same belongs, assembled at a meeting to be convened according to the mode pointed out by the act passed in the 6 Will. 4, intitled "An Act to facilitate the Conveyance of Workhouses and other Property of Parishes, and of Incorporations or Unions of Parishes, in England and Wales," nor without the consent of the Poor-law Commissioners, to be testified by their seal being affixed to the deed of conveyance, and of the guardians of the poor of the union within which the said parish may be comprised, or of the guardians of the poor of the said parish where the administration of the relief of the poor therein shall be subject to a board of guardians, testified by such guardians being the parties to convey the same.
- (3). That where any officers, trustees, or commissioners, other than parochial trustees, make any such grant, it shall be sufficient if a majority or quorum, authorised to act, of such officers, trustees, or commissioners, assembled at a meeting duly convened, assent to such grant, and execute the deed of conveyance, although they do not constitute a majority of the actual body of such officers, trustees, or commissioners.
- (4). That the justices of the peace may give their consent to the making any grant of land or premises belonging to any county, riding, or division, by vote at their general quarter sessions, and may direct the same to be made in the manner directed to be pursued on the sale of the sites of gaols, by an act passed in the 7 Geo. 4, intitled "An Act to authorise the Disposal of unnecessary Prisons in England."
- (5). That in the event of its being proved, in manner hereinafter mentioned, that any land granted under this section, or any part thereof, has ceased to be used for the purposes of this act, it shall thereupon revert and belong to the person or body of persons to whom it belonged previously to the grant being made.

Miscellaneous.

17. Where any footpath crosses any lands purchased or acquired for the purposes of this act, such footpath may, with the consent of the vestry of the parish in which the same is situate, and upon the certificate of two justices that the footpath to be substituted is convenient for the public, be stopped up or diverted: all proceedings to obtain such certificate, and to stop up or divert such footpath, shall be taken in the same manner in which proceedings are directed to be taken by the act passed in the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, in cases where a party other than the inhabitants in vestry is desirous of stopping up, diverting, or turning a highway, or as near thereto as circumstances admit; with this exception, that the certificate of the justices shall be conclusive in cases where it states the fact of their having viewed the footpath to be stopped up or diverted, and that the proposed new footpath is convenient for the public.

18. The said Principal Secretary, with a view to the service, safety, and convenience of the public, may make by-laws for the regulation of rifle-shooting on grounds acquired or used by any rifle volunteer corps under the provisions of this act.

19. Any land acquired, or for the use of which any license has been granted under this act, shall be deemed to have ceased to be used for the purposes thereof where no such use by the corps to which the same was granted has taken place for a period of one year, and a certificate shall have been given by the said Principal Secretary of the fact of such non-user; and such certificate shall be conclusive evidence of such fact as against all persons, and in all courts of justice.

31. Act not to interfere with powers of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, &c.

32. As to nomination of clerical commissioners in certain cases.

Whereas an act was passed in the 1 & 2 Vict. [c. 106], intitled "An Act to abridge the holding of Benefices in Plurality, and to make better Provision for the Residence of the Clergy," and in such act provision is contained authorising the union, by order of her Majesty in Council, after such inquiry and notice, and with such consent, and upon such certificate as is therein mentioned, of two or more benefices, or one or more benefice or benefices, and one or more spiritual sinecure rectory or rectories, vicarage or vicarages, in the same parish, or contiguous to each other, of which the aggregate population should not exceed 1500 persons, and the aggregate yearly value should not exceed 500*l.*: and whereas another act was passed in the 13 & 14 Vict. [c. 98], intitled "An Act to amend the Law relating to the holding of Benefices in Plurality," by which act the provision hereinbefore referred to was extended so as to be applicable to and for the union of benefices, sinecure rectories and vicarages, in the same parishes, or contiguous to each other, and of which the aggregate population should not exceed 1500 persons, notwithstanding the aggregate yearly value should exceed 500*l.*: and whereas another act was passed in the 18 & 19 Vict. [c. 127], for making better provision for the union of contiguous benefices, which act will expire on the 14th August in the present year: and whereas it is expedient to extend the provisions of the said two first-recited acts, so as to make better provision for the union of contiguous benefices in the metropolis: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. After the passing of this act, two or more contiguous benefices within the metropolis, as defined by an act passed in the 18 & 19 Vict. [c. 120], intitled "An Act for the better Local Management of the Metropolis," may from time to time be united, or a benefice or contiguous benefices, and one or more spiritual sinecure rectory or rectories, vicarage or vicarages, contiguous to such benefice or benefices, and situate in the metropolis, may from time to time be united, without regard in any case to aggregate population or aggregate yearly value, and without limitation as to the same, and every such union shall be effected in the manner hereinafter provided.

2. The expression "union of benefices" shall throughout this act (unless there shall be something in the context repugnant to such construction) mean such an union of two or more contiguous benefices with one another, or such an union of a benefice or benefices with a spiritual sinecure rectory or spiritual sinecure rectories, vicarage or vicarages, as is specified in the preceding section of this act; and the expression "united parish" shall mean the parishes which, in consequence of an union of benefices, shall have become united for ecclesiastical purposes under this act.

3. Whenever it shall appear to the bishop of the diocese of London or of Winchester, as the case may be, that an union of benefices may with advantage to the interests of religion be effected within his diocese, he may cause a commission to be issued under his hand and seal, addressed to five persons, to be nominated as after mentioned, authorising and requiring them to inquire into and report upon the expediency of the proposed union, and such commissioners shall and may inquire into all such matters in anywise affecting such union, or connected therewith, as they may deem necessary; and the commissioners shall make their return to the commission within six calendar months from the issuing of the commission, or within such enlarged time as the bishop shall, by writing under his hand, from time to time direct; and notice of the issuing of a commission shall be sent by the bishop to the vestry clerk of each parish proposed to be united, and notice thereof shall be published by such vestry clerk, by affixing it upon the door of the parish church.

4. Three of the commissioners shall be beneficed clergymen residing within the diocese, of whom one shall be nominated by the dean and chapter of the cathedral church of St. Paul, and two by the bishop of the diocese, and the remaining two shall be lay members of the Church of England, and shall be nominated to the bishop by the corporation of the city of London; and no commissioner shall be entitled to claim or shall receive any salary or payment for performing the duties imposed on him as such commissioner.

5. Three of the commissioners, of whom one shall be a lay commissioner, shall constitute a quorum; and the commissioners shall have power at their discretion to call for the production before them of any documents not affecting private interests which they may deem necessary for the purposes of the commission, and the persons having the care or custody of such documents shall be bound to produce them to the commissioners upon the requisition in writing of any two commissioners; and the commissioners may examine on oath all persons desirous or willing to be examined by them touching any matter relating to the object of the commission, and may administer the oaths necessary for that purpose; and the churchwardens of the parishes proposed to be united shall have notice of the sittings of such commission, and shall be entitled, with their vestry clerk, to attend thereat; and the commissioners shall in their return to the commission certify all such matters and things as shall appear to them material, together with their opinion as to the expediency or otherwise of the proposed union, and if they, or any three of them competent to constitute a quorum, shall deem the union expedient, shall recommend the terms on which in their opinion the same ought to be effected.

6. If before the return to the commission any commissioner shall die, or become incapable of acting by removal from the diocese or otherwise, the commission shall continue in full force, unless there shall not be sufficient commissioners remaining to constitute a quorum; and notwithstanding the death or disqualification of any one or more of the commissioners, the qualified commissioners for the time being shall continue to exercise the powers given to the commissioners by this act until such vacancy or vacancies shall have been filled up; but if there shall not be a sufficient quorum, the bishop may, either before or after the time limited for the return to the commission, issue a fresh commission under the provisions of this act in lieu of the original commission, and the commissioners under such substituted commission shall have all the powers of the original commission, and may adopt the evidence taken under it.

7. If the return to the commission shall recommend an union, the bishop shall cause proposals for a scheme, based upon the terms recommended, to be prepared for effecting the union, which proposals, with the consent thereto in writing of the patron or patrons of each of the benefices affected, shall be transmitted by the bishop to the churchwardens of each parish proposed to be united, in order that the same may be considered by the inhabitants in vestry assembled; and all such proposals shall have especial regard to the residence of the incumbent on the benefice proposed to be constituted the united benefice, and shall contain all necessary provisions conducing to such residence.

8. The vestry of each parish shall, by the vestry clerk or other officer, notify to the bishop, within two calendar months after the receipt of the proposals, their assent or their objections to or any suggestions for the modification of the same, and the bishop shall give full consideration to every such notification of vestry, and shall make such alterations in the proposals as he may think right; and the bishop shall cause such proposals, as finally approved by him, and assented to by the patrons, and by the vestries of the parishes to be affected thereby, to be transmitted to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England, who shall thereupon cause to be prepared a scheme for carrying out the proposed union, which scheme may, with the assent of the bishop and patrons, and the vestries of the parishes to be affected thereby, embody any modifications of the proposals, and shall send drafts of such proposed scheme to the churchwardens of the parishes to be respectively affected by the scheme, with notice that they or any of them may, within two calendar months, shew cause to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners against the proposed union, or any part or parts of the scheme relating thereto; and if within such period of two calendar months no cause be shewn, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners shall certify the scheme, and the consent thereto in writing of the bishop, and of the patron, and of the vestries of the parishes to be affected thereby, to her Majesty in Council, and thereupon it shall be lawful for her Majesty in Council to make and issue any order or orders for effecting the union, and for uniting the parishes of the united benefices into one parish for ecclesiastical purposes, and for such other purposes as are herein provided: provided always, that if any petition or statement is lodged by way of protest, or any appeal is made against the scheme, or any part thereof, as hereinafter is provided, no such Order or Orders in Council shall be made or issued until such petition or statement has been duly considered, or the parties to such appeal have been duly heard.

9. It shall be lawful for the Ecclesiastical Commissioners to insert in any scheme to be prepared by them all proper directions for the appointment of the first incumbent of the united benefice, and for regulating the course and succession in which the patrons, if there be more than one patron, shall present or nominate to such united benefice from time to time as the same shall become vacant; and they shall have power to insert in any scheme all such provisions, in addition to those hereby expressly authorised, as may in their opinion be necessary for effectually carrying out the particular measures proposed by the scheme, including any provisions which may be found necessary for the compensation of any of the incumbents of the benefices to be united, who may be willing to retire therefrom; and the Ecclesiastical Commissioners shall, and may, for the purposes of this act, exercise all powers and privileges now or for the time being exercisable by them under the acts of Parliament relating to their commission, or under the Church Building Acts, particularly as regards the purchase of sites and the erection of churches.

10. Whenever it shall be deemed expedient to unite part only of a benefice with some other contiguous benefice or benefices, any portion of a benefice or benefices, or any portion of two or more benefices, which shall have been united under the provisions of this or of any other act, or in any other manner, and either prior to or subsequently to the passing of this act, may, in the manner prescribed by this act, be severed from the remaining portion, and thereupon such a portion of the parish or united parishes to which the benefice shall belong as shall be determined by the scheme effecting the severance shall become disannexed for ecclesiastical purposes; and the portion of benefices and parish so severed shall, for the purposes of an union of benefices under this act, be deemed to be a separate benefice and parish respectively, and may, by the same scheme and Order in Council under which such severance shall be effected, or by any supplemental scheme, be united to any other contiguous benefice or benefices; and in such original or supplemental scheme provisions may be inserted for annexing to the severed portion a proportion of the real and personal property of the parish or united parishes from which such severance shall have been made, and for the dealing with and application of the property (if any) to be so annexed, and for defining and determining the rights of the parishioners of the severed portion in regard to the joint vestry of the newly-united parish with which the severed portion shall be incorporated, and as to the manner of exercising such rights, and all such other provisions as may seem to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners necessary or expedient in lieu of any provisions contained in this act not applicable to an united benefice or parish of which a severed portion of a benefice or parish shall constitute part, and after the severance the remaining portion of the benefice or parish from which the severance shall have been made shall continue one benefice or parish, or united benefice or parish, and shall not be otherwise affected by such severance; and whenever in this act the consent of the patron of a benefice shall be required for carrying the same into effect, the patron whose consent shall be requisite in the case of any such severed portion shall be the patron of the benefice or united benefice from which such severance shall be intended.

11. Whenever it shall appear to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners that the total revenue of any benefices proposed to be united would be more than sufficient for the due maintenance and support of the incumbent of the benefice proposed to be constituted an united benefice, and of such assistant curate or curates as may be needed for the same, and that some specified part or parts of the permanent endowments belonging to the benefices proposed to be united, or any of them, might, with advantage to the interests of religion, be made subject to a certain annual rent-charge in perpetuity in favour of some other specified benefice in the metropolis or in the vicinity thereof, or might be excepted out of such union, and transferred and annexed to such other specified benefice having no provision, or no competent provision, belonging thereto, as an endowment or a further endowment for the same, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, with the consent of the patron or patrons of the benefices proposed to be united, and of the vestries of the parishes to be affected thereby, and of the bishop of the diocese within which such benefices shall be situate, may prepare and submit to her Majesty in Council a scheme for providing such rent-charge, or for effecting such transfer or annexation, and thereupon it shall be lawful for her Majesty in Council to make and issue an order or orders for giving effect to the said scheme of the commissioners, and in the scheme there shall be inserted all such powers for recovering the rent-charge (if any) by distress upon or perception of the rents and profits of the hereditaments to be charged therewith or otherwise, and for the immediate or prospective apportionment of such rent-charge or otherwise in relation thereto, as to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners shall seem reasonable and proper; and upon the order or orders directing such provision, transfer, or annexation coming into operation, the rent-charge or other permanent endowments to be provided, transferred, or annexed shall, without any further deed, transfer, or other assurance, become and be for ever annexed to such benefice, and the same, and all powers for recovering the rent-charge, (if any), or relating thereto, shall be vested in, and held and enjoyed and be exercisable by, the incumbent thereof for the time being, as the endowment or a part of the endowment thereof, subject and without prejudice nevertheless to all leases, grants, rents, charges, and incumbrances existing at the time of such provision, transfer, and annexation legally affecting the same; but the Ecclesiastical Commissioners may, in their discretion, appropriate any part not exceeding one equal fifth part of the annual income arising from any such endowment, during the whole or any part of the first five years next after the scheme shall come into operation, as a fund in augmentation of the fund hereinafter provided for the payment of the costs, charges, and expenses of carrying the provisions of this act into effect: provided that the amount of such rent-charge leviable under such scheme in any parish proposed to be united, and not included in the 23 Car. 2, c. 11, shall not exceed the average annual amount levied and paid to the incumbent of such parish in the seven years immediately preceding the passing of this act.

12. If, for the purpose of more conveniently carrying the provisions of this act into execution, it shall appear to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners to be desirable, in any case of a proposed union of benefices, that an exchange should be made of the patronage of all or any of the benefices proposed to be united, for the patronage of any other benefice, an exchange may (with the consent of the patrons of the benefices in respect whereof such exchange shall be intended, and with the approval of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners) be made by any person with any other person or corporation, or by any corporation with any other corporation or person, of the patronage or any rights of presentation to any benefice, whether the whole patronage of such benefice be vested in one person or corporation, or in different persons or corporations, by way of alternate presentation or otherwise; and every such exchange shall be effected by the scheme for the proposed union of benefices; and after such exchange the patronage taken by each party by way of exchange shall be discharged from all prior title relating thereto; and the title to the patronage given by each party by way of exchange shall shift and attach to the patronage given to such party, which shall become subject to the same uses, trusts, powers, limitations, and provisions in every respect as the patronage so given would have been subject to if such exchange had not been made.

13. The Order or Orders in Council affirming any scheme, or directing any union, severance, or annexation, shall, as soon as may be after the making thereof by her Majesty in Council, be inserted and published in the London Gazette, and shall be registered in the registry of the diocese, and the registrar of the diocese is hereby required to make such registry; and such Order in Council, so soon as the same shall have been gazetted, shall (but subject and without prejudice to the rights of any incumbent affected thereby who shall not assent thereto) have full force and effect of law in all respects, and as to all things therein contained.

14. Any scheme may (but subject to objection and protest as after mentioned, and subject to the restrictions herein contained) provide for the erection of any new church or parsonage-house; for the pulling down or removal of any existing church, except as hereinafter provided, or parsonage-house of any benefices proposed to be united, and for the appropriation or sale of the materials and site of the same respectively, and of the ground annexed thereto and necessary for the use and enjoyment thereof; for the appropriation of any plate or other furniture held in trust for any church to be pulled down; for the disposal of any organ in such church; for the transfer of any lectureships attached to such church, but not so as to affect the right of appointment to any lectureship, or for sale or exchange of any parsonage or glebe houses or buildings, or the sites thereof, with their appurtenances; for compensation to parish clerks or other officers, or for arrangements with respect to fees or vestry rooms; but the font, communion table, and plate used for the purposes of the holy communion shall not be sold, but shall be transferred to the church of the united benefice; or if such font, communion table, and plate be not needed for such church, then to any other church or chapel, or churches or chapels, within the diocese, which the bishop may select: provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall authorise the pulling down the churches of St. Stephen's, Walbrook, St. Martin, Ludgate, St. Peter, Cornhill, and St. Swithin, Cannon-street: provided also, that the scheme for the removal of any church or parsonage shall provide for the erection of another church or parsonage within the limits of the metropolis.

15. Provided always, that no such scheme shall be submitted to her Majesty in Council until it has been laid before both Houses of Parliament for the space of two calendar months.

16. Any person interested who may have shewn cause to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners against the proposed union of any benefices, or against subjecting the endowments or revenues thereof, or any part of them, to any rent-charge, or transfer, or annexation, or against any part or parts of any scheme certified by them to her Majesty in Council, may appeal to her Majesty in Council against such scheme, or any part thereof, in the usual manner, or may, at his option, state in writing, by way of protest, his objections to such union, or any part or parts thereof, and the Ecclesiastical Commissioners shall annex such written statement or protest to their certificate to the Queen in Council, and her Majesty in Council may order and direct that such objections shall be considered by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and the said Judicial Committee shall make report to her Majesty in Council thereupon, and may propose to her Majesty in Council to affirm, vary, or dismiss the scheme certified by the commissioners, or to return the same to the said commissioners for alteration or amendment, and her Majesty in Council may affirm, vary, or dismiss the scheme accordingly, or return the same to the commissioners to be reconsidered as to any parts thereof.

17. Nothing in this act contained shall legalise the sale, or letting, or appropriation of the site of any church, unless with the consents in writing of the archbishop of the province, the bishop of the diocese, the archdeacon, and the Secretary of State for the Home Department, and the site shall be dealt with, subject to such directions and restrictions as to the removal of the remains of persons deposited under the church to be pulled down, and as to the not disturbing and finally closing such vaults or graves, as to such Secretary of State shall seem meet; but nothing in this act contained shall legalise the sale or letting of any churchyard or burial-ground; and no sale or letting shall be made of the site of any church wherein any bodies are known to be interred until after the remains of the persons deposited under such church shall have been properly removed at the cost of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, to be paid out of the fund hereinafter provided, into some consecrated churchyard or burial-ground, or to such portion of the vaults of the same church as may be separated and set apart for a burial place; and notice shall be given by the churchwardens, or one of them, to the heirs, executors, or administrators of any persons interred in or under any such church, where they can be ascertained, of the intention to remove such remains; and a certificate in writing, under the hand of one of the churchwardens of the united parish, that such removal has been duly made, and that such notice has been given, or that such heirs, executors, or administrators cannot be ascertained, shall be conclusive evidence of the provisions of this act in regard to such removal having been complied with; and as to any tablets or monuments in such church, the same, if not removed by the heirs, executors, administrators, relatives, or friends of the person, or of some or one of the persons, to whose memory the same shall have been erected, shall, at the cost of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, to be paid out of the fund hereinafter provided, be carefully removed and fixed in some convenient part of the church to be constituted the church of the united parishes; but every such removal of tablets or monuments may be made without the necessity of a faculty from the bishop's court, and shall be free from the payment of any fees to the incumbent of such church, or to any officer of the same, or of the parish thereof: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the heirs, executors, administrators, relations, or friends of any persons who shall be interred or deposited in or under any such church, or in any such first-mentioned churchyard or burial-ground, under proper direction, to remove the remains of such persons, and also the tablets or monuments erected to their memory, to any place they may think proper; and the expenses of such removal, not exceeding 10% in each case, shall be paid by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners out of the said fund.

18. After an union of benefices, the parishes whereof the benefices shall be united shall become and continue united, but for ecclesiastical purposes only, and in case there shall be only one church left standing and remaining within such united parish, such church shall be the church of the united parish; but in case more than one church shall be left standing, then the scheme shall determine which of the churches so left standing shall be the church of the united parish; and the vestry room of the church so constituted the parish church shall be held to be the vestry room of the united parish for the use of the parishioners thereof, and also the vestry room for secular purposes for the parishioners of each of the parishes forming the united parish, and for the care and preservation of the deeds, monuments, and records belonging to the same, unless otherwise provided by the scheme.

19. In case any church shall be left standing within the limits of any united parish other than the parish church, it shall be lawful for the bishop of the diocese, by an instrument in writing under his hand and seal, deposited in the registry of the diocese, to allow the same to be used for the performance of divine service according to the rites and ceremonies of the United Church of England and Ireland, in the Welsh or Irish or in any foreign language, or for the purposes of a school or schools in connexion with the said United Church: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall authorise any person to officiate in any such church, according to the rites and ceremonies of the United Church of England and Ireland, except with the license of the bishop; and that before the grant of any permission by the bishop for the use of any such church for any of the purposes hereby authorised, such bishop shall require proper provision to be made for the repair and sustentation of the fabric of the church so to be used, and for the preservation and care of the monuments and tablets therein.

20. Notwithstanding any union of parishes under this act, the parishes to become united shall, as to all estates and other property, and all rates, taxes, parochial rights, and all privileges, liberties, and respects whatsoever, other than such as are affected by this act, continue and remain distinct, in the same manner as they were before such union; and the parishioners of such parishes shall continue severally to elect churchwardens and other parish officers for the said parishes in the same manner as they could have done before such union, and the churchwardens so to be elected in each of the said parishes shall together be churchwardens of the church of the united parish; and the vestries of the united parish shall together form one joint vestry for all ecclesiastical purposes; but whenever a parish or parishes shall be represented by a select vestry, (unless all the parishes to be united shall be so represented), the persons to form the joint vestry shall consist of the select vestry for the time being of such parish or parishes and of parishioners, the number whereof shall be determined by the scheme, of the other parish or parishes, and the mode of electing and maintaining the representation at the joint vestry of the parish or parishes not represented by a select vestry shall be determined by the scheme; and in the scheme may be inserted all such other provisions for the maintenance and regulation of the joint vestry, and for defining the proportions in which each parish shall contribute towards the sustentation of the fabric of the church of the united parish, and for the maintenance of the services therein, and for other ecclesiastical purposes, as the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, having regard to the circumstances of each particular case, may deem necessary.

21. No union of benefices under the provisions of this act shall affect the estates or property, donations, charities, and benefactions heretofore given to or for the benefit of the parishioners or any of the parishioners of any particular parish, or held upon any special trusts, or applicable by law or usage for or towards the maintenance of the poor, but the same shall remain and continue to be applicable to the purposes to which the same have or ought to have been heretofore applied, except that where attendance, or the performance of divine service, or any other act, is required at any church within the united parish other than the parish church of the united parish, the parish church shall, so far as regards any such attendance, performance of divine service, or other act, be deemed to be such other or original church; and all property which, if such union had not been effected, would have been vested in any incumbent for the time being of any benefice proposed to be affected by such union, either solely, or jointly with the churchwardens or any other person or corporation, upon any special trusts, the incumbent for the time being of the united benefice shall be substituted for and represent the incumbent of such separate parish; and the trust property shall vest in such incumbent solely, or jointly with such churchwardens or other person or corporation, (as the case may be), and such incumbent shall have the same powers as the incumbent whom he shall represent would have had in regard thereto if such union of benefices had not been effected; and if any such property shall have been vested in a corporation of which the incumbent of the separate parish shall have been a member, the corporation shall not be affected by the union, but the incumbent for the time being of the united benefice shall become a member of such corporation in lieu of the incumbent of the separate parish.

22. All expenses which shall be incurred by or under the sanction or direction and on behalf of any bishop or the Ecclesiastical Commissioners in promoting any union of benefices, and in otherwise carrying the provisions of this act into execution, and of the scheme under which any union shall be effected, including all preliminary expenses so incurred, shall be paid by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, out of a fund to be provided by them, in manner following; that is to say, they shall, on the first sale by them of property or materials in pursuance of any scheme and order under this act, appropriate the whole, or such portion as they may think sufficient, of the produce of such sale as a fund, which shall be applied by them in payment of the expenses incurred and to be incurred in relation to all the proposals and schemes for the union of benefices, and the same fund shall from time to time be augmented by the said commissioners from the produce of similar sales of property, as there may be occasion; and out of the fund so to be created the said commissioners shall defray all the expenses incurred in relation or incidental to any commission to be issued under this act having reference to any union or proposed union of benefices, and to all inquiries, proposals, and schemes which shall be made and prepared in consequence of any such commission, (including all preliminary costs and expenses, whether incurred prior or subsequently to the creation of such fund), and whether such inquiries, proposals, and schemes shall result in an Order in Council or not; and after providing a sufficient fund for the payment of all such expenses, and after providing and appropriating a portion of such fund sufficient in the opinion of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners to meet the probable preliminary expenses of any future commission to be issued under this act, having reference to the union of benefices, the surplus of the monies so set apart shall be applied by them, with the consent in writing of the bishop, for the benefit of any benefice or benefices in the metropolis, to whose benefit the said commissioners may, with such consent, think fit to apply the same.

23. After any scheme for an union of benefices, or any supplemental scheme, shall have been sanctioned by an Order in Council, such scheme shall be valid and of full force and effect, notwithstanding any previous non-compliance with any of the requirements of this act, and notwithstanding any omission in regard thereto or non-observance thereof, and notwithstanding any variation between such scheme and the proposals originating the same.

24. In order to give validity to any such scheme or supplemental scheme, the consent of the vestry of any parish shall be signified in writing under the hand of the chairman of such vestry, stating that in a vestry duly convened for the purpose of giving such consent a resolution for giving such consent had been duly carried; and whenever under the provisions of this act the consent of the patron of any benefice is made necessary to any proposals, scheme, or union, or to any exchange of patronage or other act, the consent of the person or persons, or corporation, who in case such benefice were vacant would be entitled to present thereto, shall be sufficient; but if the right to present to such benefice shall be vested in different persons or corporations by way of alternate presentations, the consent of each other person or corporation in whom the expectant alternate right of presentation shall for the time being be vested shall be necessary; and the 126th, 127th, and 128th clauses of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, as regards the consent of patrons to the exercise of the powers given by that act, shall be applicable to the consent of patrons under this act, in the same manner as if the same clauses were here repeated and made applicable thereto; and if in any case it shall in the opinion of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners be doubtful what person ought to consent as or on behalf of the patron of any such benefice under the provisions of this act, it shall be lawful for the Ecclesiastical Commissioners to specify the person or corporation by whom such consent ought to be given, and the consent of the person or corporation so specified shall be sufficient for all the purposes of this act.

25. Her Majesty in Council may, at any time after the issuing of any order for the union of benefices, make a supplemental order, founded upon any scheme to be proposed to her Majesty in Council by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, for remedying any defects or for supplying any omissions which in the opinion of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners shall appear to exist in the provisions of the order or orders effecting any such union, and for making any corrections and alterations in relation thereto which may be found necessary, and every such supplemental order shall have the same force and effect as if it had formed part of the original order made under the provisions of this act, but the same consents shall be necessary to such proposed supplemental scheme as would under the provisions of this act have been necessary to such supplemental scheme if the same had been an original scheme.

26. In the case of endowed lectureships, when the lectures have been customarily preached in a church which may be taken down, or which may cease to be a parish church under the provisions of this act, such lectures shall be preached in the church which shall have been or may be selected as the church of the parish of which the church may have been taken down, or the bishop of the diocese for the time being may, in order to avoid difficulties, prepare from time to time under his hand a scheme or schemes for transferring such lectures to other churches, to be preached therein at such times as to the said bishop may appear convenient, but not so as to affect the right of electing or nominating any lecturer, and such scheme shall be submitted by the said bishop to the Charity Commissioners under the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, and such scheme, if approved of by them, and by the vestries of the parishes affected thereby, or subject to such alterations therein as may appear to the said commissioners advisable, and as shall be approved of by the said bishop, and by the vestries of the parishes affected thereby, and if assented to in writing by the incumbent of the church to which it may be proposed to transfer the lectures, shall be valid for effecting the purposes therein mentioned, and shall be registered in the registry of the diocese; but nothing in this act contained shall give the bishop any power to license a lecturer without the consent of the incumbent of the church in which such lecturer is to officiate.

27. If any commissioners appointed under this act shall report that it is not expedient to carry any proposed union into effect, but that it would be expedient to afford improved accommodation in one or more of the churches referred to in such report for casual residents in the city or town, and others not being parishioners, the bishop of the diocese may, in any such case in which the funds for the alteration of the seats in the manner recommended in such report shall, within two years from the date of such report, be provided by local or public subscription, direct such church to be re-seated accordingly; and in such re-seating due provision shall be made for the appropriation of such number of seats as may be required for the accommodation of all parishioners attending divine worship in such church, and the churchwardens shall have power to alter from time to time the appropriation of such seats, and to appropriate to the use of parishioners such further number of seats as may be required by them, and all the seats, both appropriated and free, under any new arrangement made under this present provision, shall be made as near as possible of the same size and general appearance.

28. Upon any union of benefices the bishop of the diocese under his hand and seal shall, and he is hereby authorised, by faculty from his court, to alter and re-adjust the seats, and the appropriation thereof, in the church of the united parish, so that not less than one-half of the sittings in such church shall be left unappropriated, and the remainder shall be placed at the disposal of the churchwardens of such church, under the control and direction of the bishop, for the use of the parishioners of such united parish, discharged from all prescriptive and other pre-existing rights; and the bishop of the diocese, either upon an union of benefices, or at any time and from time to time afterwards, may cause the church of the united parish to be re-seated, and may adjust and appropriate or re-adjust and re-appropriate the sittings in the same church; and all monies expended and required for such purposes, and not provided by voluntary donation or in any other manner, shall be deemed expenses incurred by the bishop in carrying the provisions of this act into execution, and shall be defrayed accordingly.

29. Upon any Order in Council under this act coming into full operation, all churches, houses, buildings, land, and hereditaments which shall be authorised by such order to be pulled down or sold shall, without any conveyance or other form of law, be and become absolutely vested in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, in trust to deal with or dispose of the same, and the proceeds and produce thereof, as directed by this act; and the freehold of the parish church of the united parish, and the freehold of all such other lands and hereditaments previously vested in the respective incumbents of the parishes constituting the united parish as shall not be vested in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, shall become vested in the incumbent for the time being of the united parish; and the said commissioners shall have power to make all necessary conveyances of the hereditaments so vested in them, and to make sale and dispose of the same, at such times, and at such prices, and in such manner in all respects as to them shall seem expedient; and the receipt in writing of the treasurers for the time being of the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners for the purchase monies, rents, and profits of such hereditaments shall effectually discharge the purchasers thereof, and other persons paying the same, from the same purchase monies, rents, and profits, and from all liability in respect thereof.

30. The provisions contained in the act of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, in relation to the disunion of united benefices, shall apply to all benefices which shall have been united under the provisions of this act; and the provisions of the act of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 127, shall continue in full force as to every case in which proceedings shall have been commenced and shall be pending at the time of the passing of this act, notwithstanding the period of five years limited by the same act shall have expired.

31. This act shall not abridge or interfere with the powers contained in the act of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, or in any other act of Parliament now in force in regard to the union of benefices, but all such powers and the powers conferred by this act may be exercised independently of one another or concurrently.

32. Where the proposed union is within the city of Westminster, one clerical commissioner shall be nominated by the dean and chapter of Westminster, instead of being nominated by the dean and chapter of St. Paul's; and where the proposed union is not within the city of London or the liberties thereof, the lay commissioners shall be nominated to the bishop by the vestries of the parishes respectively proposed to be affected by the union, instead of being nominated by the corporation of the city of London.

CAP. CXLIV.

An Act to amend the Procedure and Powers of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes. [28th August, 1860.]

- Sect. 1. The Judge Ordinary may exercise powers now vested in the full court. The Judge Ordinary may call in the assistance of one of the other judges.
2. The judge may direct any matter to be heard by the full court. Appeal to the full court.
3. Appeal to the House of Lords.
4. Regulation of the sittings of the full court. 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 2, repealed.
5. The court may, where one party only appears, require counsel to be appointed to argue on the other side.
6. Stat. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 45, amended.
7. Decrees. Collusion.
8. Continuance of act.

Sect. 1. It shall be lawful for the Judge Ordinary of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes alone to hear and determine all matters arising in the said court, and to exercise all powers and authority whatever which may now be heard and determined and exercised respectively by the full court, or by three or more judges of the said court, the Judge Ordinary being one; or where the Judge Ordinary shall deem it expedient, in relation to any matter which he might hear and determine alone by virtue of this act, to have the assistance of one other judge of the said court, it shall be lawful for the Judge Ordinary to sit and act with such one other judge accordingly, and, in conjunction with such other judge, to exercise all the jurisdiction, powers, and authority of the said court.

2. Provided always, that the Judge Ordinary may, where he shall deem it expedient, direct that any such matter as aforesaid shall be heard and determined by the full court; and in addition to the cases in which an appeal to the full court now lies from the decision of the Judge Ordinary, either party dissatisfied with the decision of such judge sitting alone, in granting or refusing any application for a new trial which by virtue of this act he is empowered to hear and determine, may, within fourteen days after the pronouncing thereof, appeal to the full court, whose decision shall be final.

3. Where there is a right of appeal to the House of Lords from the decision of the full court there shall be the like right of appeal to the said House from the decision of the Judge Ordinary alone, or with any other judge, under this act.

4. The sittings of the full court shall be holden during the seventh and five following days of sitting in each term, and on such other days as the Judge Ordinary, with the assent of the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, and the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, shall from time to time appoint; and the judges of the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer shall, by a rota or otherwise, as they deem most convenient, make provision for the attendance of the requisite number of such judges to make, with the Judge Ordinary, a full court during such sittings; and sect. 2 of the act of the last session of Parliament, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, shall be repealed.

5. In every case of a petition for a dissolution of marriage it shall be lawful for the court, if it shall see fit, to direct all necessary papers in the matter to be sent to her Majesty's proctor, who shall, under the directions of the Attorney-General, instruct counsel to argue before the court any question in relation to such matter, and which the court may deem it necessary or expedient to have fully argued; and her Majesty's proctor shall be entitled to charge and be reimbursed the costs of such proceeding as part of the expense of his office.

6. And whereas, by sect. 45 of the act of the session holden in the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 85, it was enacted, that "in any case in which the court should pronounce a sentence of divorce or judicial separation for adultery of the wife, if it should be made appear to the court that the wife was entitled to any property, either in possession or reversion, it should be lawful for the court, if it should think proper, to order such settlement as it should think reasonable to be made of such property, or any part thereof, for the benefit of the innocent party and of the children of the marriage, or either of them:" be it further enacted, that any instrument executed pursuant to any order of the court made under the said enactment before or after the passing of this act, at the time of or after the pronouncing of a final decree of divorce or judicial separation, shall be deemed valid and effectual in the law, notwithstanding the existence of the disability of coverture at the time of the execution thereof.

7. Every decree for a divorce shall, in the first instance, be a decree nisi, not to be made absolute till after the expiration of such time, not less than three months from the pronouncing thereof, as the court shall, by general or special order, from time to time direct; and during that period any person shall be at liberty, in such manner as the court shall, by general or special order in that behalf, from time to time direct, to shew cause why the said decree should not be made absolute by reason of the same having been obtained by collusion, or by reason of material facts not brought before the court; and, on cause being so shewn, the court shall deal with the case by making the decree absolute, or by reversing the decree nisi, or by requiring further inquiry, or otherwise as justice may require; and at any time during the progress of the cause, or before the decree is made absolute, any person may give information to her Majesty's proctor of any matter material to the due decision of the case, who may thereupon take such steps as the Attorney-General may deem necessary or expedient; and if, from any such information or otherwise, the said proctor shall suspect that any parties to the suit are or have been acting in collusion for the purpose of obtaining a divorce, contrary to the justice of the case, he may, under the direction of the Attorney-General, and by leave of the court, intervene in the suit, alleging such case of collusion, and retain counsel and subpoena witnesses to prove it; and it shall be lawful for the court to order the costs of such counsel and witnesses, and otherwise, arising from such intervention, to be paid by the parties, or such of them as it shall see fit, including a wife, if she have separate property; and in case the said proctor shall not thereby be fully satisfied his reasonable costs, he shall be entitled to charge and be reimbursed the difference as part of the expense of his office.

8. This act shall continue in force until the 31st July, 1862, and no longer.

PART I.—Powers of Trustees for Sale, &c., and Trustees of renewable Leaseholds.

Sect. 1. In all cases where, by any will, deed, or other instrument of settlement, it is expressly declared that trustees or other persons therein named or indicated shall have a power of sale, either generally or in any particular event, over any hereditaments named or referred to in or from time to time subject to the uses or trusts of such will, deed, or other instrument, it shall be lawful for such trustees or other persons, whether such hereditaments be vested in them or not, to exercise such power of sale by selling such hereditaments, either together or in lots, and either by auction or private contract, and either at one time or at several times, and (in case the power shall expressly authorise an exchange) to exchange any hereditaments which for the time being shall be subject to the uses or trusts aforesaid for any other hereditaments in England or Wales, or in Ireland, (as the case may be), and upon such exchange to give or receive any money for equality of exchange.

2. It shall be lawful for the persons making any such sale or exchange to insert any such special or other stipulations, either as to title or evidence of title, or otherwise, in any conditions of sale, or contract for sale or exchange, as they shall think fit, and also to buy in the hereditaments, or any part thereof, at any sale by auction, and to rescind or vary any contract for sale or exchange, and to resell the hereditaments which shall be so bought in, or as to which the contract shall be so rescinded, without being responsible for any loss which may be occasioned thereby; and no purchaser under any such sale shall be bound to inquire whether the persons making the same may or may not have in contemplation any particular re-investment of the purchase money in the purchase of any other hereditaments or otherwise.

3. For the purpose of completing any such sale or exchange as aforesaid, the persons empowered to sell or exchange as aforesaid shall have full power to convey or otherwise dispose of the hereditaments in question, either by way of revocation and appointment of the use, or otherwise, as may be necessary.

4. The money so received upon any such sale or for equality of exchange as aforesaid shall be laid out in the manner indicated in that behalf in the will, deed, or instrument containing the power of sale or exchange, or if no such indication be therein contained as to all or any part of such money, then the same shall with all convenient speed be laid out in the purchase of other hereditaments in fee-simple in possession to be situate in England or Wales, or in Ireland, (as the case may be), or of lands of a leasehold or copyhold or customary tenure, which, in the opinion of the persons making the purchase, are convenient to be held therewith, or with any other hereditaments for the time being, subject to the subsisting uses or trusts of the same will, deed, or other instrument of settlement in which the power of sale or exchange was contained; and all such hereditaments so to be purchased or taken in exchange as aforesaid as shall be freeholds of inheritance shall be settled and assured to the uses, upon and for the trusts, intents, and purposes, and with, under, and subject to the powers, provisoes, and declarations to which the hereditaments sold or given in exchange were or would have been subject, or as near thereto as the deaths of parties and other intervening accidents will admit of, but not so as to increase or multiply charges; and all such hereditaments so to be purchased or taken in exchange as aforesaid as shall be of leasehold or copyhold or customary tenure shall be settled and assured upon and for such trusts, intents, and purposes, and with, under, and subject to such powers, provisoes, and declarations, as shall, as nearly as may be, correspond with and be similar to the aforesaid uses, trusts, intents, and purposes, powers, provisoes, and declarations, but not so as to increase or multiply charges, and so that, if any of the hereditaments so to be purchased shall be held by lease for years, the same shall not vest absolutely in any tenant in tail by purchase who shall not attain the age of twenty-one years; and any such purchase as aforesaid may be made subject to any special conditions as to title or otherwise: provided, that no leasehold tenement shall be purchased, under the powers hereinbefore contained, which is held for a less period than sixty years.

5. Provided nevertheless, that it shall be lawful for the persons exercising any such power as aforesaid, if they shall think fit, to apply any money to be received upon any sale or for equality of exchange as aforesaid, or any part thereof, in lieu of purchasing lands therewith, in or towards paying off or discharging any mortgage, or other charge or incumbrance, which shall or may affect all or any of the hereditaments which shall then be subject to the same uses or trusts as those to which the hereditaments sold or given in exchange were or was subject.

6. No money arising from any such sale or exchange of lands or hereditaments in England or Wales shall be laid out in the purchase of lands or hereditaments situate elsewhere than in England or Wales, and no lands situate in England or Wales shall, under any such power as aforesaid, be exchanged for any lands or hereditaments situate elsewhere than in England or Wales; and no money arising from any such sale or exchange of lands in Ireland shall be laid out in the purchase of lands or hereditaments situate elsewhere than in Ireland, and no lands or hereditaments situate in Ireland shall, under any such power as aforesaid, be exchanged for any lands or hereditaments situate elsewhere than in Ireland.

7. Until the money to be received upon any sale or for equality of exchange as aforesaid shall be disposed of in the manner herein mentioned, the same shall be invested at interest for the benefit of the same parties who would be entitled to the hereditaments to be purchased therewith as aforesaid, and the rents and profits thereof, in case such purchase and settlement as aforesaid were then actually made.

8. It shall be lawful for any trustees of any leaseholds for lives or years which are renewable from time to time, either under any covenant or contract, or by custom or usual practice, if they shall in their discretion think fit, and it shall be the duty of such trustees, if thereunto required by any person having any beneficial interest, present or future or contingent, in such leaseholds, to use their best endeavours to obtain from time to time a renewed lease of the same hereditaments on the accustomed and reasonable terms, and for that purpose it shall be lawful for any such trustees from time to time to make, or concur in making, such surrender of the lease for the time being subsisting, and to do all such other acts as shall be requisite in that behalf; but this section is not to apply to any case where, by the terms of the settlement or will, the person in possession for his life or other limited interest is entitled to enjoy the same, without any obligation to renew the lease, or to contribute to the expense of renewing the same.

9. In case any money shall be required for the purpose of paying for equality of exchange as aforesaid, or for renewal of any lease as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the persons effecting such exchange or renewal to pay the same out of any money which may then be in their hands in trust for the persons beneficially interested in the lands to be taken in exchange, or comprised in the renewed lease, whether arising by any of the ways and means hereinbefore mentioned or otherwise, and notwithstanding the provisions for the application of money arising from sales or exchanges hereinbefore contained; and if they shall not have in their hands as aforesaid sufficient money for the purposes aforesaid, it shall be lawful for such persons to raise the money required by mortgage of the hereditaments to be received in exchange or contained in the renewed lease, as the case may be, or of any other hereditaments for the time being subject to the subsisting uses or trusts to which the hereditaments taken in exchange, or comprised in the renewed lease, as the case may be, shall be subject; and for the purpose of effecting such mortgage such persons shall have the same powers of conveying or otherwise assuring as are herein contained with reference to a conveyance on sale; and no mortgagee advancing money upon such mortgage purporting to be made under this power shall be bound to see that such money is wanted, or that no more is raised than is wanted, for the purposes aforesaid.

10. No such sale or exchange as aforesaid, and no purchase of hereditaments out of money received on any such sale or exchange as aforesaid, shall be made without the consent of the person appointed to consent by the will, deed, or other instrument, or if no such person be appointed, then of the person entitled in possession to the receipt of the rents and profits of such hereditaments, if there be such a person under no disability; but this clause shall not be taken to require the consent of any person where it appears from the will, deed, or other instrument to have been intended that such sale, exchange, or purchase should be made by the person or persons making the same without the consent of any other person.

PART II.—Powers of Mortgagees.

11. Where any principal money is secured or charged by deed on any hereditaments of any tenure, or on any interest therein, the person to whom such money shall for the time being be payable, his executors, administrators, and assigns, shall, at any time after the expiration of one year from the time when such principal money shall have become payable, according to the terms of the deed, or after any interest on such principal money shall have been in arrear for six months, or after any omission to pay any premium on any insurance which by the terms of the deed ought to be paid by the person entitled to the property subject to the charge, have the following powers, to the same extent (but no more) as if they had been in terms conferred by the person creating the charge, namely—

- (1). A power to sell or concur with any other person in selling the whole or any part of the property by public auction or private contract, subject to any reasonable conditions he may think fit to make, and to rescind or vary contracts for sale, or buy in and resell the property, from time to time, in like manner:
- (2). A power to insure and keep insured from loss or damage by fire the whole or any part of the property (whether affixed to the freehold or not) which is in its nature insurable, and to add the premiums paid for any such insurance to the principal money secured, at the same rate of interest:
- (3). A power to appoint or obtain the appointment of a receiver of the rents and profits of the whole or any part of the property in manner hereinafter mentioned.

12. Receipts for purchase money given by the person or persons exercising the power of sale hereby conferred shall be sufficient discharges to the purchasers, who shall not be bound to see to the application of such purchase money.

13. No such sale as aforesaid shall be made until after six months' notice in writing given to the person or one of the persons entitled to the property subject to the charge, or affixed on some conspicuous part of such property; but when a sale has been effected in professed exercise of the powers hereby conferred, the title of the purchaser shall not be liable to be impeached on the ground that no case had arisen to authorise the exercise of such power, or that no such notice as aforesaid had been given; but any person damaged by any such unauthorised exercise of such power shall have his remedy in damages against the person selling.

14. The money arising by any sale effected as aforesaid shall be applied by the person receiving the same as follows—first, in payment of all the expenses incident to the sale, or incurred in any attempted sale; secondly, in discharge of all interest and costs then due in respect of the charge in consequence whereof the sale was made; and, thirdly, in discharge of all the principal monies then due in respect of such charge; and the residue of such money shall be paid to the person entitled to the property subject to the charge, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, as the case may be.

15. The person exercising the power of sale hereby conferred shall have power by deed to convey or assign to and vest in the purchaser the property sold, for all the estate and interest therein which the person who created the charge had power to dispose of, except that in the case of copyhold hereditaments the beneficial interest only shall be conveyed to and vested in the purchaser by such deed.

16. At any time after the power of sale hereby conferred shall have become exercisable, the person entitled to exercise the same shall be entitled to demand and recover from the person entitled to the property subject to the charge all the deeds and documents in his possession or power relating to the same property, or to the title thereto, which he would have been entitled to demand and recover if the same property had been conveyed, appointed, surrendered, or assigned to and were then vested in him for all the estate and interest which the person creating the charge had power to dispose of; and where the legal estate shall be outstanding in a trustee, the person entitled to a charge created by a person equitably entitled, or any purchaser from such person, shall be entitled to call for a conveyance of the legal estate to the same extent as the person creating the charge could have called for such a conveyance if the charge had not been made.

17. Any person entitled to appoint or obtain the appointment of a receiver as aforesaid may from time to time, if any person or persons has or have been named in the deed of charge for that purpose, appoint such person or any one of such persons to be receiver, or if no person be so named, then may, by writing delivered to the person or any one of the persons entitled to the property subject to the charge, or affixed on some conspicuous part of the property, require such last-mentioned person or persons to appoint a fit and proper person as receiver, and if no such appointment be made within ten days after such requisition, then may in writing appoint any person he may think fit.

18. Every receiver appointed as aforesaid shall be deemed to be the agent of the person entitled to the property subject to the charge, who shall be solely responsible for his acts or defaults, unless otherwise provided for in the charge.

19. Every receiver appointed as aforesaid shall have power to demand and recover and give effectual receipts for all the rents, issues, and profits of the property of which he is appointed receiver, by action, suit, distress, or otherwise, in the name either of the person entitled to the property subject to the charge, or of the person entitled to the money secured by the charge, to the full extent of the estate or interest which the person who created the charge had power to dispose of.

20. Every receiver appointed as aforesaid may be removed by the like authority or on the like requisition as before provided with respect to the original appointment of a receiver, and new receivers may be appointed from time to time.

21. Every receiver appointed as aforesaid shall be entitled to retain out of any money received by him, in lieu of all costs, charges, and expenses whatsoever, such a commission, not exceeding 5*l.* per centum on the gross amount of all money received, as shall be specified in his appointment, and if no amount shall be so specified, then 5*l.* per centum on such gross amount.

22. Every receiver appointed as aforesaid shall, if so directed in writing by the person entitled to the money secured by the charge, insure and keep insured from loss or damage by fire, out of the money received by him, the whole or any part of the property included in the charge, (whether affixed to the freehold or not), which is in its nature insurable.

23. Every receiver appointed as aforesaid shall pay and apply all the money received by him, in the first place in discharge of all taxes, rates, and assessments whatsoever, and in payment of his commission as aforesaid, and of the premiums on the insurances, if any, and in the next place in payment of all the interest accruing due in respect of any principal money then charged on the property over which he is receiver, or on any part thereof, and, subject as aforesaid, shall pay all the residue of such money to the person for the time being entitled to the property subject to the charge, his executors, administrators, or assigns.

24. The powers and provisions contained in this part of this act relate only to mortgages or charges made to secure money advanced or to be advanced by way of loan, or to secure an existing or future debt.

PART III.—Provisions as to Investment of Trust Funds, Appointment and Powers of Trustees and Executors, &c.

25. Trustees having trust money in their hands which it is their duty to invest at interest shall be at liberty, at their discretion, to invest the same in any of the parliamentary stocks or public funds, or in Government securities, and such trustees shall also be at liberty, at their discretion, to call in any trust funds invested in any other securities than as aforesaid, and to invest the same on any such securities as aforesaid, and also from time to time, at their discretion, to vary any such investments as aforesaid for others of the same nature: provided always, that no such original investment as aforesaid, (except in the 3*l.* per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities), and no such change of investment as aforesaid, shall be made where there is a person under no disability entitled in possession to receive the income of the trust fund for his life, or for a term of years determinable with his life, or for any greater estate, without the consent in writing of such person.

26. In all cases where any property is held by trustees in trust for an infant, either absolutely, or contingently on his attaining the age of twenty-one years, or on the occurrence of any event previously to his attaining that age, it shall be lawful for such trustees, at their sole discretion, to pay to the guardians (if any) of such infant, or otherwise to apply for or towards the maintenance or education of such infant, the whole or any part of the income to which such infant may be entitled in respect of such property, whether there be any other fund applicable to the same purpose, or any other person bound by law to provide for such maintenance or education, or not; and such trustees shall accumulate all the residue of such income by way of compound interest, by investing the same and the resulting income thereof from time to time in proper securities, for the benefit of the person who shall ultimately become entitled to the property from which such accumulations shall have arisen: provided always, that it shall be lawful for such trustees at any time, if it shall appear to them expedient, to apply the whole or any part of such accumulations as if the same were part of the income arising in the then current year.

27. Whenever any trustee, either original or substituted, and whether appointed by the Court of Chancery or otherwise, shall die, or desire to be discharged from or refuse or become unfit or incapable to act in the trusts or powers in him reposed, before the same shall have been fully discharged and performed, it shall be lawful for the person or persons nominated for that purpose by the deed, will, or other instrument creating the trust, (if any), or if there be no such person, or no such person able and willing to act, then for the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee for the time being, or the acting executors or executor, or administrators or administrator of the last surviving and continuing trustee, or for the last retiring trustee, by writing, to appoint any other person or persons to be a trustee or trustees in the place of the trust-tee or trustees so dying, or desiring to be discharged, or refusing or becoming unfit or incapable to act as aforesaid; and so often as any new trustee or trustees shall be so appointed as aforesaid all the trust property (if any) which for the time being shall be vested in the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee, or in the heirs, executors, or administrators of any trustee, shall with all convenient speed be conveyed, assigned, and transferred, so that the same may be legally and effectually vested in such new trustee or trustees, either solely, or jointly with the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee, as the case may require; and every new trustee or trustees to be appointed as aforesaid, as well before as after such conveyance or assignment as aforesaid, and also every trustee appointed by the Court of Chancery either before or after the passing of this act, shall have the same powers, authorities, and discretions, and shall in all respects act, as if he had been originally nominated a trustee by the deed, will, or other instrument creating the trust.

28. The power of appointing new trustees hereinbefore contained may be exercised in cases where a trustee nominated in a will has died in the lifetime of the testator.

29. The receipts in writing of any trustees or trustee for any money payable to them or him by reason or in the exercise of any trusts or powers reposed or vested in them or him shall be sufficient discharges for the money therein expressed to be received, and shall effectually exonerate the persons paying such money from seeing to the application thereof, or from being answerable for any loss or misapplication thereof.

30. It shall be lawful for any executors to pay any debts or claims upon any evidence that they may think sufficient, and to accept any composition, or any security, real or personal, for any debts due to the deceased, and to allow any time for payment of any such debts as they shall think fit, and also to compromise, compound, or submit to arbitration all debts, accounts, claims, and things whatsoever relating to the estate of the deceased, and for any of the purposes aforesaid to enter into, give, and execute such agreements, instruments of composition, releases, and other things as they shall think expedient, without being responsible for any loss to be occasioned thereby.

PART IV.—General Provisions.

31. For the purposes of this act, a person shall be deemed to be entitled to the possession or to the receipt of the rents and income of land or personal property, although his estate may be charged or incumbered, either by himself or by any former owner, or otherwise howsoever, to any extent; but the estates or interests of the parties entitled to any such charge or incumbrance shall not be affected by the acts of the person entitled to the possession or to the receipt of the rents and income as aforesaid, unless they shall concur therein.

32. None of the powers or incidents hereby conferred or annexed to particular offices, estates, or circumstances shall take effect or be exercisable if it is declared in the deed, will, or other instrument creating such offices, estates, or circumstances that they shall not take effect; and where there is no such declaration, then if any variations or limitations of any of the powers or incidents hereby conferred or annexed are contained in such deed, will, or other instrument, such powers or incidents shall be exercisable or shall take effect only subject to such variations or limitations.

33. Nothing in this act contained shall be deemed to empower any trustees or other persons to deal with or affect the estates or rights of any persons soever, except to the extent to which they might have dealt with or affected the estates or rights of such persons if the deed, will, or other instrument under which such trustees or other persons are empowered to act had contained express powers for such trustees or other persons so to deal with or affect such estates or rights.

34. The provisions contained in this act shall, except as herebefore otherwise provided, extend only to persons entitled or acting under a deed, will, codicil, or other instrument executed after the passing of this act, or under a will or codicil confirmed or revived by a codicil executed after that date.

35. This act shall not extend to Scotland.

CAP. CXLVI.

An Act to amend the Act for regulating Measures used in Sales of Gas. [28th August, 1860.]

Sect. 1. Calculation of time specified in recited act.

2. Construction of acts, and recovery of penalties.

Whereas delays have occurred in preparing the models of measures, according to the provisions of an act passed in the last session of Parliament, intituled "An Act for regulating Measures used in Sales of Gas," [23 & 23 Vict. c. 96], and it is expedient to defer the time when several of the provisions of the said act come into operation, and further to amend the same: be it enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. Except as to things done before the passing of this act under the authority of the said act, where in the said act anything is required to be done within a specified time after the passing of the same, such time shall be calculated as if the 15th October, 1860, had been the date of the passing of the said act: provided always, that, notwithstanding anything in the said act contained, the said act shall not come into operation in any county of England until the magistrates of such county in quarter sessions, or in any county in Scotland until the commissioners of supply of such county, or in any county of Ireland until the grand jury of such county, shall have resolved to bring such county under the operation of the act.

2. This act and the recited act shall be construed together as one act, and all penalties and forfeitures incurred under the provisions of either act shall be sued for and recoverable in all counties, ridings, or divisions in England and Ireland before two or more justices of the peace at petty sessions, or before the mayor or other chief magistrate of any city, borough, town, or place.

CAP. CXLVII.

An Act to amend the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 70.

[28th August, 1860.]

Sect. 1. Provisions of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 70, applicable to petitioning debtors not in custody to extend to those in custody.

2. Construction of terms in this and recited acts.

For removing doubts which have arisen upon the act of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 70, be it declared and enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. Any debtor actually in custody may petition, and his petition shall be proceeded in, according to the provisions of the said act; and all those provisions touching the consent of creditors, the meetings of creditors, and the authority of the commissioners, shall be applied to the case of such debtor petitioner which have heretofore been applied to the petitions of debtors not in actual custody.

2. This act and the said act shall be construed together as one act; and in sect. 6 of the said act, after the words "shall indorse on such certificate his protection of such petitioning debtor from arrest," the words "or his discharge from custody" shall be added; and in sect. 7, after the words "a temporary and limited protection from arrest," the words "or discharge from custody" shall be added; so that in every case of a petition by a debtor in custody by virtue of this act the commissioner may be empowered to discharge the petitioner from custody wherever such petitioner, if not in custody, would have been entitled by virtue of the said act to obtain protection from arrest.

CAP. CXLVIII.

An Act to continue the Powers of the Poor-law Commissioners in Ireland. [28th August, 1860.]

CAP. CXLIX.

An Act to make better Provision for the Relief of Prisoners in Contempt of the High Court of Chancery, and Pauper Defendants; and for the more efficient Dispatch of Business in the said Court. [28th August, 1860.]

Sect. 1. Masters in Ordinary discharged from certain duties.

2. The Queen's Prison to be visited quarterly.

3. Prisoners and other persons may be examined on oath.

4. Court may direct reference as to poverty of prisoners.

5. Gaolers to make reports to Lord Chancellor of all Chancery prisoners.
6. Expenses incurred for prisoners and pauper defendants to be paid out of Suitsors' Fund.
7. Additional salary to solicitor to Suitsors' Fund.
8. Power to make General Orders.
9. Custody of deeds under the care of late Masters.
10. Appointment of additional chief clerk to the Master of the Rolls.
11. The junior clerk to the late Master Blunt empowered to seek compensation.
12. Chief clerks' (appointed since the 2nd November, 1855) salary.
13. By whom orders under this act are to be made.
14. Increased salary may be paid to two junior clerks to each chief clerk.

Whereas by an act passed in the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 36, intituled "An Act for altering and amending the Law regarding Commitments by Courts of Equity for Contempt, and taking Bills pro Confesso," it was enacted, amongst other things, that the rules and regulations thereafter provided and contained should be adopted by the High Court of Chancery, and should from thenceforth become orders and rules of the said Court of Chancery, and be observed and enforced in and by the said court; and it was by the sixth of such rules directed that if a defendant, upon being brought before the court upon an habeas corpus, should make oath (which should be administered to him by the registrar, and he should be examined in open court) that he was unable, by reason of poverty, to employ a solicitor to put in his answer, the court should thereupon refer it to a Master in rotation to inquire into the truth of that allegation, and to report thereon to the court forthwith, and thereupon the court might make such order as upon other reports of the like nature under the provisions thereafter contained; and by the seventh of such rules it was directed that on the 30th January, the 30th April, the 30th July, and the 30th October in every year, or if any of those days should happen on a Sunday, then on the following day, one of the Masters of the Court of Chancery, to be named by the court, should visit the Fleet Prison, and examine the prisoners confined there for contempt, and should report his opinion on their respective cases to the court, and thereupon it should be lawful for the court to make such order as therein mentioned: and whereas by an act passed in the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, intituled "An Act for consolidating the Queen's Bench, Fleet, and Marshalsea Prisons, and for regulating the Queen's Prison," it was enacted, amongst other things, that the prison to be called the Queen's Prison should be the only prison for all persons who before the passing of that act might lawfully have been imprisoned: in the Fleet Prison and other prisons therein named: and whereas by an act passed in the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, intituled "An Act to abolish the Office of Master in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery, and to make Provision for the more speedy and efficient Dispatch of Business in the said Court," the office of Master in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery was abolished, but reserving and subject to the execution by the then Masters in Ordinary of the said court of the duties thereafter provided for, and until they were released under the same act they were for the performance of such duties to continue to have all the powers conferred upon them by the act of Parliament or otherwise vested in them; and it was enacted that, on the first day of Michaelmas Term, 1855, two of the said Masters should be released, and that as often as in the judgment of the Lord Chancellor any other Master or Masters could be spared, it should be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to release any such Master or Masters, and that when the Lord Chancellor should be of opinion that the services of none of the Masters were any longer necessary for the due execution of the business of the said court, it should be lawful for him to release every remaining Master: and whereas, since the passing of the last-mentioned act, one of the Masters in Ordinary of the said court has died, and all the others have been released except three, two of whom are quite incapable from ill-health of performing the duties of their office, and the other of whom is of advanced age, and very infirm, and has held the office of Master in the Court of Exchequer and the Court of Chancery for the period of thirty-nine years and upwards: and whereas it has been considered desirable, for the better discharge of the business of the said court, that the causes and matters now remaining in their offices of the said Masters should be transferred to the judges' chambers, and accordingly the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and assistance of all the judges of the court, has, by order bearing date the 23rd August, 1860, ordered and directed that all causes, matters, and things now depending before the Masters shall be proceeded with and prosecuted before the respective judges of the court: and whereas the only duty now remaining to be performed by the Masters is that of visiting the prison as required by the first-recited act, and it is expedient that they should be relieved from such duty, and that some other provision should be made for the performance thereof: and whereas it is also expedient that some further provision should be made for the relief of prisoners in custody for contempt of the said court: and whereas since the date of the first hereinbefore-recited act various alterations have been made in the practice and procedure of the said court, by reason whereof several of the rules and regulations contained in the same act may require to be varied, and it is expedient that the Lord Chancellor should have power to make such General Orders as may from time to time be necessary in that behalf: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

SECT. 1. The Masters in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery shall be and they are hereby discharged from the several duties imposed on them by the said first-recited act.

2. In the last week in January, in the last week in April, in the last week in July, and in the last week in October in every year, the present solicitor to the Suitsors' Fund, or, in case of his illness or unavoidable absence, some officer of the Court of Chancery to be appointed by the Lord Chancellor from time to time during such illness or absence, and after the death or retirement of the present solicitor to the Suitsors' Fund, the solicitor to the Suitsors' Fund for the time being, or some other officer of the Court of Chancery to be appointed by the Lord Chancellor from time to time, shall visit the Queen's Prison, and examine the prisoners confined there for contempt, and shall report his opinion on their respective cases to the Lord Chancellor, and thereupon it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, if he shall think fit, to assign a solicitor to any such prisoner, not only for defending him in forma pauperis, but generally for taking such steps on his behalf as the nature of the case may require; and to make all or any such orders as the Lord Chancellor was empowered to make after the like report of a Master under the seventh rule of the said first hereinbefore-recited act, and all the provisions of the same rule shall apply to the reports hereby directed, and the orders to be made thereunder.

3. It shall be lawful for the solicitor to the Suitsors' Fund or other officer visiting the prison as aforesaid to examine the prisoners, and all other persons whom he may think it proper to examine, upon oath, and to administer an oath or oaths to any such prisoner and other persons accordingly, and to cause any officers, clerks, and ministers of any court of law or equity to bring and produce, upon oath, before him, any records, orders, books, papers, or other writings belonging to the said courts, or to any of the officers within the same, as such officers.

4. In all cases where, in pursuance of the said sixth rule contained in the first hereinbefore-recited act, a defendant shall be brought to the bar of the court, and shall make oath that he is unable, by reason of poverty, to employ a solicitor to put in his answer, the court, if not satisfied of the truth of that allegation, may direct an inquiry as to the truth thereof, and may appoint a solicitor to conduct such inquiry on behalf of such defendant, and if it is ascertained by means of such inquiry, or if the court is satisfied without such inquiry, that such defendant is unable, by reason of poverty, to employ a solicitor to put in his answer, the court may thereupon make such order as is authorized by the said sixth rule, after a report by a Master.

5. When any person shall be committed to any prison other than the Queen's Prison, under any writ or order of the Court of Chancery, the gaoler or keeper of the prison in which such person shall be confined shall, within fourteen days after such person shall have been in the custody of such gaoler or keeper, make a report to the Lord Chancellor, containing the name and description of such prisoner, with the cause and date of his commitment, and a copy of the writ or order under which he was committed; and if such prisoner shall make oath before one of the visiting justices of such gaol, or a commissioner for taking oaths in the Court of Chancery, that he is unable, by reason of poverty, to employ a solicitor, the report shall contain a statement to that effect, and it shall thereupon be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to direct the solicitor to the Suitors' Fund to ascertain the truth of such statement, and, if true, to take such steps on behalf of any such prisoner as the nature of the case may require; and the Lord Chancellor may thereupon, if he shall see fit, make such order or orders as he is empowered to make under the 2nd section of this act.

6. The solicitor to the Suitors' Fund shall make the necessary and proper payments out of pocket which may be requisite in the proceedings taken on behalf of the prisoners and defendants under the order of the said court, and shall be allowed the same as part of his disbursements in respect of the Suitors' Fund: provided, that if any such prisoner or defendant shall be or become entitled to any funds in the cause, such funds shall be applied in the repayment to the Suitors' Fund of the sums expended on his behalf as aforesaid: provided also, that in case any prisoner or defendant shall become entitled to any costs in any such suit or proceeding, such costs shall be received by the solicitor to the Suitors' Fund, and paid by him into the Suitors' Fund.

7. In consequence of the additional duties under the authority of this act imposed on the solicitor to the Suitors' Fund, there shall be paid to him such additional yearly salary as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time direct, not exceeding the net yearly salary of 300*l.*, such additional salary to be payable out of the same funds and in the same manner as his present salary is payable.

8. It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and assistance of the Master of the Rolls, the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, and the Vice-Chancellors, or any three of them, from time to time to make such General Rules and Orders for regulating the mode of procedure regarding commitments by the Court of Chancery for contempt and taking bills pro confesso, and for doing and effectuating any acts or proceedings which may heretofore have been required to be done by or under the direction or through the intervention of any of the Masters of the said court, the doing and effectuating of which has not been already provided for, and generally for carrying the purposes of this act into effect, as may be found expedient.

9. The deeds, books, documents, and papers belonging to the suitors in the said court which have been heretofore under the custody of the said Masters in Ordinary shall be transferred to the custody of the Clerks of Records and Writs of the said court, and William Worden, the present office-keeper at the offices in Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane, where such deeds, books, documents, and papers are deposited, shall have the care of the same, and shall, so far as relates thereto, be considered the officer of the Clerks of Records and Writs, and shall hold such office at the pleasure of the Master of the Rolls; and the said William Worden shall receive, in respect of the duties imposed upon him by this act, such additional yearly salary as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time direct, not exceeding the net yearly salary of 80*l.*, in addition to his present emoluments as such office-keeper, such additional salary to be payable on the 3rd February, the 3rd May, the 3rd August, and the 3rd November in every year, out of the fund standing in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account;" and on the death, retirement, or removal of the said William Worden, it shall be lawful for the Master of the Rolls to appoint a person to have the care of such deeds, books, documents, and papers, at a yearly salary not exceeding 100*l.*, to be payable out of the fund and at the times last aforesaid, and on any vacancy in such office to supply such vacancy.

10. And whereas, in consequence of the amount of business transacted in the chambers of the Master of the Rolls, it has been found expedient for three years last past to obtain the assistance of Mr. John Arthur Buckley, late chief clerk in the office of one of the Masters in Ordinary: and whereas, having regard to the business transferred to the office of the Master of the Rolls by reason of the final discharge of the Masters, it is expedient that such assistance should be continued: be it therefore enacted, that Mr. John Arthur Buckley shall be continued as an additional clerk in the office of the Master of the Rolls, with the salary he now receives, during such time as the Lord Chancellor shall think fit; and it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to transfer the said Mr. Buckley, as an additional clerk, to the office of any one of the Vice-Chancellors during such time as he shall think fit: provided, that if the Lord Chancellor shall be of opinion at any time that the state of business no longer requires the services of Mr. Buckley, and he shall be discharged, he, the said Mr. Buckley, shall not be entitled to any compensation: provided always, that in case a new judge shall be appointed in the Court of Chancery, the said Mr. Buckley shall be transferred to and become one of the clerks of such new judge.

11. And whereas, under the said act for abolishing the office of the said Masters in Ordinary, any person who on the first day of Hilary Term, 1852, held the office of junior clerk to any Master in Ordinary, who should be released under the authority of such act, was empowered to make a claim for compensation to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, at any time after the Master in whose office he should have been employed should have been released: and whereas, at the time when such act was passed, John Elijah Blunt, Esq., was one of the said Masters in Ordinary, and Edward King held the office of his junior clerk: and whereas the said John Elijah Blunt died in the year 1856, without having been released under the authority of such act, by reason whereof the said Edward King is not entitled to make any claim for compensation, as he would have been in case the said John Elijah Blunt had not died, but had been released as aforesaid: be it therefore enacted, that it shall be lawful for the said Edward King to make his claim for compensation to the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, who are hereby empowered to receive and deal with the same in the same manner in all respects as if the said John Elijah Blunt had been released under the authority of the said last-mentioned act.

12. As regards the chief clerks of all the judges of the said court appointed since the 2nd November, 1855, and those to be hereafter appointed, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, if he shall so think fit, upon the certificate mentioned in the 44th section of the said act of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, to order and direct their salaries respectively to be increased to the full amount authorised by such act at any one period.

13. Where the Lord Chancellor is empowered by this act to make orders or to give directions with respect to prisoners in contempt and pauper defendants, such orders and directions are to be made or given by the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper, or Lords Commissioners for the Custody of the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, or the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Chancery only; and where the Court of Chancery is empowered by this act to make such orders or to give such directions, they may be made or given by any judge of the said court.

14. Instead of the salaries directed to be paid by the said act for abolishing the office of the said Masters in Ordinary, and by the act of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 134, to the two junior clerks thereby respectively authorised to be appointed to each chief clerk, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, if he shall so think fit, to order and direct that every such junior clerk shall receive a salary of 400*l.* per annum.

The preamble recites the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 99, and the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 108.

I.—Provisions applicable to all Mines.

Sect. 1. After the 1st July, 1861, it shall not be lawful for the owner of any mine or colliery to employ any male person under the age of twelve years within such mine or colliery, or to permit any such male person to work, or be therein for the purpose of working therein, other than such as at the passing of this act shall have attained the age of ten years, and were at or before the passing of this act employed within the same or some other mine or colliery; and the said act of the 5 & 6 Vict. [c. 99], and all the provisions and penalties thereof, shall be construed and take effect as if the age of twelve years had been mentioned in sect. 2 of the said act instead of the age of ten years, subject to the proviso herein-after contained.

2. Provided, that a boy above the age of ten years and under the age of twelve years may be employed in a mine or colliery upon either of the following conditions; that is to say—

That before any such boy is so employed, the owner of the mine shall, after the 1st July, 1861, obtain a certificate under the hand of a competent schoolmaster that such boy is able to read and write:

Or, that in the second and every subsequent lunar month during which such boy is employed in such mine or colliery, the owner shall obtain a certificate under the hand of a competent schoolmaster that such boy has attended school for not less than three hours a day for two days in each week during the lunar month immediately preceding, exclusive of any attendance on Sundays:

And the owner shall file and preserve such certificates as aforesaid so long as such boy shall continue in the employment, and during six months after the termination of such employment, and shall produce during such time such certificates to any inspector under the said act of the 5 & 6 Vict. [c. 99], or to any inspector of coal mines and ironstone mines, when required so to do by any such inspector.

3. Every person giving a false certificate for the purposes of this act shall for every such offence forfeit a sum not more than 10*l.* nor less than 5*l.*; and such offence shall be dealt with as an offence against the said act of the 5 & 6 Vict. [c. 99].

4. And whereas, by sect. 8 of the said act of the 5 & 6 Vict. [c. 99], it is provided, that where there shall be any entrance to a mine or colliery by means of a vertical shaft or pit or inclined plane, or where there shall be any communication within any part of a mine or colliery to any other part thereof by a vertical shaft or pit or inclined plane, then it shall not be lawful for any owner of any such mine or colliery to allow any person or persons, other than a male of the age of fifteen years and upwards, to have charge of any steam-engine or other engine, windlass, or gin, (whether driven or worked by manual labour or any other power whatsoever), or to have charge of any part of the machinery, ropes, chains, or other tackle of any such engine, by or by means of which engine, machinery, ropes, chains, or other tackle, persons are brought up or passed down any such vertical shaft or pit or inclined plane: it shall not be lawful, in any such case as in the said provision mentioned, for the owner of the mine or colliery to allow any person, other than a male of the age of eighteen years or upwards, to have charge of any steam-engine, or of any part of the machinery, ropes, chains, or other tackle of any such engine, by or by means of which engine, machinery, ropes, chains, or other tackle, persons are brought up or passed down any such vertical shaft or pit or inclined plane; and any person offending against this enactment shall be subject to the penalty imposed by the recited provision for offending against the same.

5. The foregoing provisions of this act shall extend to all mines in Great Britain, and shall be construed with the said act of the 5 & 6 Vict. [c. 99], as one act.

II.—Provision for Inspection and Regulation of Coal Mines and Ironstone Mines.

6. The said act of the 18 & 19 Vict. [c. 108], shall be repealed: provided always, that the inspectors of coal mines appointed under such act shall continue to be inspectors under this act of the mines to which the provisions hereinafter contained extend, subject nevertheless to removal by one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and subject to all other the same provisions, and with the same powers, as if appointed under this act: provided also, that all penalties incurred under the said act before the repeal thereof may be proceeded for and applied as if this act had not been passed.

7. The provisions hereinafter contained shall extend to all coal mines and collieries and mines of ironstone of the coal measures, and worked in connexion with coal or with any disused or exhausted coal mines; and in the construction of such provisions the terms "coal mine or colliery or ironstone mine" shall mean every such mine and colliery as aforesaid, and every shaft in the course of being sunk, and every level or inclined plane in the course of being driven for commencing or opening any such mine, and all the works belonging thereto respectively; the term "owner" shall mean the immediate proprietor, lessee, or occupier of a coal mine or colliery or ironstone mine, or of any part thereof; and the term "agent" of a coal mine or colliery or ironstone mine shall mean any person having, on behalf of the owner, the care or direction thereof; and the term "inspector" or "inspectors" shall respectively mean an inspector or inspectors of coal mines and ironstone mines appointed or continued under this act; and the term "district" shall mean the portion of Great Britain assigned or which shall be assigned to any one of such inspectors; and the word "sheriff" shall include sheriff substitute.

8. It shall be lawful for one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State from time to time to appoint any fit person or persons to be an inspector or inspectors of coal mines and ironstone mines under this act, and from time to time to remove any such inspector or inspectors; and notice of the appointment of every such inspector shall be published in the London Gazette.

9. No person who shall act or practise as a land agent, or as a manager, viewer, or agent, or mining engineer, or valuer of mines, or arbitrator in any matters of dispute arising between owners of mines, or be otherwise employed in any mine, shall act as an inspector of mines under this act.

10. The following rules (hereinafter referred to as the general rules) shall be observed in every colliery or coal mine and ironstone mine by the owner and agent thereof:—

- (1). An adequate amount of ventilation shall be constantly produced in all coal mines or collieries and ironstone mines to dilute and render harmless noxious gases, to such an extent that the working-places of the pits, levels, and workings of every such colliery and mine, and the travelling roads to and from such working-places, shall, under ordinary circumstances, be in a fit state for working and passing therein:

- (2). All entrances to any place not in actual course of working and extension, and suspected to contain dangerous gas of any kind, shall be properly fenced off so as to prevent access thereto:
- (3). Whenever safety lamps are required to be used, they shall be first examined and securely locked by a person or persons duly authorised for this purpose:
- (4). Every shaft or pit which is out of use, or used only as an airpit, shall be securely fenced:
- (5). Every working and pumping pit or shaft shall be properly fenced when operations shall have ceased or been suspended:
- (6). Every working and pumping pit or shaft where the natural strata, under ordinary circumstances, are not safe, shall be securely cased or lined, or otherwise made secure:
- (7). Every working pit or shaft shall be provided with some proper means of communicating distinct and definite signals from the bottom of the shaft to the surface, and from the surface to the bottom of the shaft:
- (8). All underground self-acting and engine planes on which persons travel are to be provided with some proper means of signalling between the stopping-places and the ends of the planes, and with sufficient places of refuge at the sides of such planes at intervals of not more than twenty yards:
- (9). A sufficient cover overhead shall be used when lowering or raising persons in every working pit or shaft, where required by the inspectors:
- (10). No single-linked chain shall be used for lowering or raising persons in any working pit or shaft, except the short coupling chain attached to the cage or load:
- (11). Flanges or horns of sufficient length or diameter shall be attached to the drum of every machine used for lowering or raising persons:
- (12). A proper indicator to shew the position of the load in the pit or shaft, and also an adequate break, shall be attached to every machine, worked by steam or water power, used for lowering or raising persons:
- (13). Every steam boiler shall be provided with a proper steam gauge, water gauge, and safety valve:
- (14). The fly wheel of every engine shall be securely fenced:
- (15). Sufficient bore holes shall be kept in advance, and, if necessary, on both sides, to prevent inundations in every working approaching a place likely to contain a dangerous accumulation of water.

11. In addition to the general rules, there shall be established and observed in every coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine such other rules (hereinafter referred to as special rules) for the conduct and guidance of the persons acting in the management of such coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine, and of all persons employed in or about the same, as under the particular state and circumstances of such coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine may appear best calculated to prevent dangerous accidents.

12. The special rules now established and in force under the act hereby repealed, in any coal mine or colliery, shall remain and be the special rules therein, and be of the same force and subject to be amended by the same authority and in like manner as if established under this act.

13. The owner of every ironstone mine and of every coal mine or colliery in which special rules are not now established and in force as aforesaid shall frame and transmit to one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State special rules for such ironstone mine and coal mine or colliery respectively: provided always, that such special rules shall be hung up in the manner provided in the 15th section of this act for the period of fourteen days before the same are transmitted to the Secretary of State; such special rules for every such mine or colliery in work at the commencement of this act to be framed and transmitted as aforesaid within three months after such commencement, and for every such mine or colliery not then in work to be so framed and transmitted within three months after the working of such mine or colliery shall be commenced or renewed; and such rules, if not objected to by such Secretary of State within forty days from the day upon which they are received by him, shall be established :

If such Secretary of State be of opinion that such rules, or any of them, do not sufficiently provide for the safety of the persons employed in or about such mine or colliery, he may within such forty days propose any alterations in or additions to such special rules, or the substitution of any other rules for such special rules or any of them :

If such owner within twenty days object to any such alterations or additions, or rules by way of substitution proposed as aforesaid, he may within fourteen days after he has so objected nominate five or more practical mining engineers or other competent persons of experience, and who shall not be interested in or employed in the management of such mine or colliery, of whom such Secretary of State shall appoint one or more to be an arbitrator or arbitrators to determine the matters in difference, and to decide what special rules shall be established in such mine or colliery, and the determination of such arbitrator, or of such arbitrators or the majority of them if more than one, shall be final, and the special rules shall be established accordingly :

If such owner do not within such fourteen days nominate such mining engineers or other competent persons as aforesaid, then two such mining engineers, or other competent persons as aforesaid, shall be appointed arbitrators, one of whom shall be named by such owner, and the other by the inspector of the district :

The said arbitrators so appointed shall, before they proceed in the arbitration, appoint a third person, being such mining engineer, or other competent person as aforesaid, to be their umpire in case of difference of opinion between them, and in case such arbitrators so appointed refuse or neglect to appoint such umpire as aforesaid for the space of seven days after their appointment, or of the appointment of such one of them as was last appointed, the chairman of the general or quarter sessions of the peace in and for the county, riding, or division where such mine or colliery may be situate in England, and the sheriff of the county or division of the county where such mine or colliery may be situate in Scotland, upon the application in writing by or on behalf of such owner, or the inspector of the district, shall appoint such umpire ; and the determination of such arbitrators and the said umpire, or of any two of them, shall be final, and the special rules shall be established accordingly :

In case of the death, incapacity, or refusal or neglect to act of any arbitrator appointed under this act, another arbitrator shall be appointed in his place in manner following ; that is to say, in case the place to be supplied be that of an arbitrator appointed from among the nominees of the owner of a mine or colliery, then another arbitrator shall be appointed by the Secretary of State from among such of the said nominees as may not have been appointed as hereinbefore mentioned an arbitrator or arbitrators, or, in case of notice to that effect from the Secretary of State to such owner, shall be appointed by the Secretary of State from among five competent persons to be, within fourteen days after receipt of such notice, nominated by such owner to the Secretary of State ; and in case the vacancy be that of an arbitrator appointed by the owner or the inspector of the district, such vacancy shall be supplied by such owner or the inspector of the district, as the case may require ; and in case of the death, incapacity, or refusal or neglect to act of any umpire appointed as aforesaid, or of the death, incapacity, or refusal or neglect to act of either of the arbitrators originally appointed before the appointment of an umpire, the provisions herein contained concerning the appointment of an umpire by such arbitrators, and concerning the appointment of an umpire in default of such appointment by such arbitrators, shall respectively be applicable to authorise the appointment of such umpire by the arbitrators for the time being, and to the case of default by them to make such appointment within seven days after notice in writing from either of the arbitrators to the other of them of the death, incapacity, or refusal or neglect to act of the umpire, and to the case of default by the arbitrators for the time being to appoint an umpire within seven days after their appointment, or of the appointment of such one of them as was last appointed :

If such owner do not, within twenty days from the day on which such alterations or additions, or such rules by way of substitution, are proposed to him, object to the same, or not having made such nomination to the Secretary of State as herein provided) do not, within fourteen days after having objected as aforesaid, appoint an arbitrator, and give notice in writing of such appointment to the inspector of the district, or in case of the death, incapacity, or refusal or neglect to act of any arbitrator appointed from among nominees of such owner, do not, within fourteen days after receipt of such notice from the Secretary of State as aforesaid, nominate five competent persons to the Secretary of State as aforesaid, or do not within the like period, after notice to such owner by the inspector of the district of the death, incapacity, or refusal or neglect to act of any arbitrator appointed by such owner, appoint an arbitrator, and give notice in writing of such appointment to the inspector of the district, the special rules framed by such owner as altered, added to, or modified by the Secretary of State shall be established :

The amount of payment to be made to the arbitrator or arbitrators and umpire (if any) for his or their services shall be fixed by the Secretary of State, and paid in equal moieties by the owner of the mine or colliery to which the arbitration relates, and the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, who are hereby authorised to make such payment accordingly out of any monies provided by Parliament for that purpose.

14. Provided, that, after such special rules are established, it shall be lawful for the owner of the mine or colliery to propose from time to time, in writing, to one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, any amendment of such rules, and the provisions in relation to the original special rules framed by the owner, and proposals in relation thereto by the Secretary of State, and the first establishment of special rules, shall apply to the amendments so proposed ; and the Secretary of State may from time to time propose, in writing, to the owner of a mine or colliery, any amendments to the special rules thereof ; and the provisions in relation to alterations or the substitution of other rules proposed by the Secretary of State, where original special rules are transmitted to him, and the establishment of rules or modifications of rules proposed by him, shall apply to the amendments so proposed by him under this enactment.

15. For the purpose of making known the general rules and special rules to all persons employed in or about each coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine, the owner or agent thereof shall cause the general rules and the special rules for such coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine to be painted on a board, or printed upon paper to be pasted thereon, and shall cause such board to be hung up or affixed on some conspicuous part of the principal office or place of business at the coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine, and at the place where the workmen are paid ; and the general rules and special rules, so painted or printed and hung up, shall be renewed and restored with all reasonable despatch as often as the same or any part thereof may be defaced, obliterated, or destroyed ; and a printed copy of such general and special rules shall be supplied to all persons employed in and about the same who shall apply for such copy.

16. It shall be lawful for any inspector to enter, inspect, and examine any coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine, and the works and machinery belonging thereto, at all reasonable times, by day or night, but so as not to impede or obstruct the working of the said coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine, and to make inquiry into and touching the state and condition of such coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine, works, and machinery, and the ventilation of such coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine, and the mode of lighting or using lights in the same, and into all matters and things connected with or relating to the safety of the persons employed in or about the same, and especially to make inquiry whether the provisions of this act are complied with in relation to such coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine ; and the owner or agent of such coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine is hereby required to furnish the means necessary for such entry, inspection, examination, and inquiry.

17. If any inspector find, on any such inspection, examination, or inquiry, any mine or colliery, or the works or machinery belonging thereto, or any matter, thing, or practice in or connected with such mine or colliery, to be (otherwise than as provided against by any express provision of this act, or the general or special rules thereunder) dangerous or defective, so as in his opinion to threaten or tend to the bodily injury of any person, such inspector shall give notice in writing to the owner or agent of such mine or colliery of the particular grounds on which such inspector is of opinion that the said mine or colliery, or any part thereof, or any other of the particulars aforesaid, is dangerous or defective, and shall also report the same to one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State :

If the owner or agent object to remove or remedy the danger or defect which is the subject of such notice, he may within twenty days after the receipt of such notice give notice in writing of the objections of such owner or agent, and of the grounds thereof, to the said inspector and to one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and nominate to such Secretary of State five or more practical mining engineers or other competent persons of experience who shall not be interested in or employed in the management of such mine or colliery, of whom the Secretary of State shall appoint one or more to be an arbitrator or arbitrators, and thereupon further proceedings shall be had for the determination of the matters in difference by arbitration, as herein provided in the case of the special rules :

If such owner or agent do not give such notice and make such nomination as aforesaid within the time aforesaid, the owner of such mine or colliery shall be liable to a penalty of 1*l.* for every day beyond the said twenty days during which he neglects to take proper and active measures for removing or remedying the danger or defect which is the subject of the said notice given by the inspector :

If the said owner or agent give such notice and make such nomination as aforesaid within the time aforesaid, and the matters in difference be determined by arbitration, then if, after the said owner or agent has been furnished with a copy of the award attested by the inspector for the district, the said owner or agent neglect forthwith to take proper and active measures for removing or remedying any danger or defect which, according to such award, ought to be removed or remedied, the owner of such mine or colliery shall be liable to a penalty of 1*l.* for every day after the receipt by the said owner or agent of such copy of the award during which the said owner or agent so neglects.

18. The owner or agent of every coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine shall, on the occasion and for the purpose of the inspection and examination thereof, produce and submit for examination to any such inspector as aforesaid, at the mine which is to be inspected, an accurate map or plan of the workings of such coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine; and if such owner or agent do not produce and submit for examination as aforesaid such a map or plan as aforesaid, or if any such inspector as aforesaid find that any portion of any map or plan is withheld, or any part of the workings of any such coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine is concealed from his inspection, or if he find, on examining and verifying any map or plan, that the same is imperfect or inaccurate, he is hereby empowered to require that an accurate map or plan of the actual workings of such coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine be made within a reasonable time by and at the expense of the owner of such coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine, on a scale of not less than two chains to one inch, or on such other scale as the plan then used in the mine is constructed on; and every such map or plan as aforesaid shall shew the workings of the mine up to within six months of the time of inspection; and the owner or agent of the coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine shall, if required so to do by any such inspector as aforesaid, mark or cause to be marked on such map or plan the progress of the workings of the coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine up to the time of his inspection thereof: provided, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorise any inspector to make a copy of the whole or any part of a map or plan which shall be produced or made.

19. If and when loss of life or any personal injury to any person employed in or about any coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine occurs by reason of any explosion, and if and when loss of life or serious personal injury to any person so employed occurs by reason of any other accident whatever within such coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine, or any pits or shafts thereof, or any works or machinery connected with such pits or shafts, the owner or agent of such coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine shall, within twenty-four hours next after such accident, send notice of such accident, and the loss of life or personal injury occasioned thereby, under the hand of such owner or agent, in England to one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, in Scotland to the Lord Advocate, and in all cases to the inspector of the district within which such accident shall occur, and shall specify in such notice the probable cause of such accident, and such notice may be sent through the Post-office by letter addressed to such Secretary of State or Lord Advocate, and to the inspector of the district at his usual place of residence; and every owner or agent who neglects to send or cause to be sent such notice as aforesaid, within the time aforesaid, shall for such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding 20*l.*

20. Every coroner holding an inquest upon the body of any person whose death may have been caused by any such accident as aforesaid shall, unless the inspector of the district or some person on behalf of the Secretary of State be present to watch the proceedings at such inquest, adjourn such inquest, and by letter sent through the Post-office four days at the least before holding such adjourned inquest, addressed to the inspector of the district, give notice to such inspector of the time and place of holding the same: provided, that such coroner may, before the adjournment of any such inquest, take evidence to identify the body, and may order the interment thereof: provided also, that if the accident has not occasioned more than one death, and notice of the inquest has been given by the coroner to the inspector of the district by letter sent through the Post-office not less than forty-eight hours before the time of holding the inquest, it shall not be imperative on the coroner to adjourn such inquest as aforesaid, in case the majority of the jury think it unnecessary so to adjourn; and the inspector shall be at liberty to examine any witness at any such inquest, subject to the order of the coroner.

21. Where any coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine is abandoned, or the working thereof discontinued, or where the working thereof is recommenced after abandonment or discontinuance for a period exceeding two months, or where any workings are commenced for the purpose of opening a new coal mine or ironstone mine, the owner or agent of the respective mine or working shall in every such case give notice thereof to the inspector of the district, by letter sent through the Post-office, within two months after such abandonment, discontinuance, recommencement, or commencement of working, as the case may be; and where any such mine or colliery is abandoned, or the working thereof discontinued, the owner thereof shall cause the same to be, and to be kept, securely fenced, for the prevention of accidents.

22. If any coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine be worked, and, through the default of the owner or agent thereof, special rules have not been established for the same according to the provisions of this act, or the general rules or the special rules for such coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine, by this act required to be established, have not been hung up or affixed, or have not, after obliteration or destruction, been renewed or restored as required by this act, or any of such general rules or special rules, provisions of which ought to be observed by the owner and principal agent or viewer of such coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine, be neglected or wilfully violated by any such owner, agent, or viewer, such person shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding 20*l.*; and also, in case the default or neglect be not remedied with all reasonable despatch, after notice in writing thereof given by an inspector to the owner or agent of such coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine, to a further penalty of 1*l.* for every day during which the offence continues after such notice; and every person, other than aforesaid, employed in or about a coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine, who neglects or wilfully violates any of the special rules established for such coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine, shall for every such offence be liable, upon a summary conviction for the same before two justices of the peace, or, in Scotland, before the sheriff having jurisdiction in the county or place where the offence is committed, to a penalty not exceeding 2*l.*, or to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, in the common gaol or house of correction for any period not exceeding three calendar months: provided always, that no justice of the peace, being the owner of the mine, or the father, son, brother, or agent of any owner of the mine, in which the offence set forth in the complaint shall have been committed, shall, at the hearing of any complaint or charge, act as a justice of the peace for the purposes of conviction or adjudication in any cases of dispute or difference between persons employed in working mines and their employers, in which justices of the peace have jurisdiction.

23. Every person who wilfully obstructs any inspector in the execution of this act, and every owner or agent of any coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine who refuses or neglects to produce, as hereinbefore required, a map or plan of the workings of the mine to any inspector, or to furnish to such inspector the means necessary for making any entry, inspection, examination, or inquiry under this act, or who neglects or wilfully violates any provision of this act, for the neglect or violation of which no other penalty is hereby imposed, shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding 10*l*.

24. Every person who pulls down, injures, or defaces any notice hung up or affixed, as required by this act, shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty of not exceeding 40*s*.

25. All penalties imposed by this act may be recovered in a summary manner before two justices of the peace, or, in Scotland, before the sheriff having jurisdiction in the county or place where the offence is committed, in the manner prescribed by the law in that behalf, the information to be laid, or action raised, within three months after the commission of the offence; and it shall be lawful for one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State to direct that any penalty imposed for neglecting to send or cause to be sent notice of any accident, as required by this act, or for any offence against this act which may have occasioned loss of life or personal injury, shall be paid to or among any of the family or relatives of any person or persons whose death may have been occasioned by such accident or offence, and not being a person or persons who occasioned or contributed to occasion the accident, or to any person or persons, not being the offender or offenders, who may have sustained personal injury occasioned by such accident or offence, as he may think fit; and, save as aforesaid, all penalties imposed by this act shall, when recovered, be paid into the receipt of her Majesty's Exchequer in such manner as the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury may direct, and shall be carried to and form part of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom.

26. A copy of the special rules for the time being established in any coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine, certified under the hands of one of the inspectors to be a copy of the special rules established in such coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine, shall be evidence of such special rules, and of their being duly established under this act, without further proof; and such inspector shall certify such copy when required.

27. Every inspector shall, on or before the 1st March in every year, make a separate and distinct report in writing of his proceedings during the preceding year, and shall transmit the same to one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and a copy of such report shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament.

28. The wages of each and every person employed in any coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine shall be paid to him or his representative authorised or deputed to that effect, by his immediate employer, in money, at an office to be appointed for that purpose in the special rules for such mine or colliery; and such office shall not be contiguous to any house where spirits, wine, beer, or other spirituous liquors are sold; and every owner or agent, or such employer, who shall pay or permit any wages to be paid contrary to the provisions of this act, shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding 10*l*.

29. Where the persons employed in any coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine are paid by the weight, measure, or gauge of the coal, ironstone, or other material gotten by them, such coal, ironstone, or other material shall be truly weighed, measured, or gauged accordingly; and it shall be lawful for such persons, at their own cost, to station a person (being one of the persons for the time being employed in such coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine) at the place appointed for such weighing, measuring, or gauging, in order to take an account thereof, and to take an account of the weight, measure, or gauge used therein on behalf of such persons by whom he is so employed; but such person so employed shall not be authorised in any way to impede or interrupt the working of the coal mine, colliery, or ironstone mine, or to interfere with the weighing, measuring, or gauging, but shall only be authorised to take such account as aforesaid; and the absence of such person shall not be a reason for delaying or interrupting such weighing, measuring, or gauging.

30. This act shall not extend to Ireland.

31. This act shall commence from the 31st December, 1860.
